TITLE DEEDS IN STONE; LAWS OF THE ANCIENTS

LONDON, Sept. 14.—The publishin activity of the Department of Oriental Antiquities of the British Museum seems to be unlimited, and the statement of some years ago that the British Museum collected and the Germans published no longer holds good. During the last ten years the department have published at a marvelously cheap price compared with continental museums over 20,000 Assyrian and Babylonian inscriptions relating to religion, magis, philology, and other important subjects, and they are now issuing two new volumes, which will be welcomed by the students of many branches of science.

Among the inscribed monuments which have been rescued from the grave mounds of Babylonia is a curious series of stones covered with inscriptions in very archaic writing, and sculptured with mystic emblems, which were regarded generally by scholars as representing the signs of the Zodiac. These stones were just rudely rubbed down and smoothed sufficiently to receive the sculptures and inscriptions, which were among the earliest cuneiform inscriptions brought to Europe. The stones are called by the Babylonian name of Kudurri, a word interpreted as 'Land Mark,' and are akin to the Roman termini, having been set up upon certain plots of land to indicate the legitimate right of the owners to the property. The stones, with rare exceptions, belong to one period, that of the rule of the dynasty of the Kassite kings in Babylonia, a period lasting from about 1800 B.C. to the Assyrian conquest of Babylonia in 747 B.C. The British Museum possesses about twenty-five of them, and most of the inscriptions are now published with full commentary and translation, with a volume of photographic plates—the translations being by Mr. Leonard W. King, F.S.A., and issued under the editorship of Dr. E. A. Wallace Budge.

The Kudurri are most interesting monuments, in that they are not distinctly Babylonian in origin, their use having been brought into the country by the Kassites, a people who came from the mountain regions of the northeast of Chaldea. In the majority of instances they are rude stones and boulders, and, therefore, no doubt, originated in the custom of setting up a "stone of witness" at the corners of private property, on which were first inscribed or cut the totems or symbols of the tribal god, and later on inscriptions setting forth the right by which the holders held the property.

The nature of these important documents may be best shown bq a quotation from one of the earliest examples—a grant of land to the libation uriest of the god Bel. Here we read: "Kadashman-Enib, the king, has presented (this land) and he has set up a boundary stone. Whosoever shall alter this boundary stone, or reverse the ownership of this land, may Nenip, the lord of the boundary stone, alter his boundary shrine and tear up his foundation."

Many of the inscriptions are particularly interesting from a legal point of view, for they record with very full details the disputes that arose from time to time regarding the properties. In regard to the legal disputes as to property the Babylonian of that period seems to have been as fond of litigation as the modern Hindu, and the pleas of one side inscribed on the monuments reveal many curious details of Babylonian life.

The inscriptions are important as showing the system of government in the land and the absolute power of the King. He could grant land to who he wished, and give it free from all civil imposts and duties. Thus he gave freedom from all forced labor and from irrigation rights, as well as the privilege that no tax-gatherer should enter for a tax on cattle or sheep.

Another inscription of great importance now published for the first time is the charter of freedom granted to a city by King Nebuchadnezzar I. (1120 B.C.) The king made an expedition into the land of Elam in the hot summer months, when the army was overcome by the heat. The inscription describes the difficulties in a very graphic manner. There was no water in the wells, the drinking supply was cut off; the splendor of the great houses failed, and the legs of the strong man turned aside, but the noble King advanced. Relief was, however, at hand. Ritti Marduk, the chief of the house of Bet—Karziyabku, the captain of his chariots, whose place was at his (the King's) right hand, feared not the battle. He went down among the enemy of his lord. He turned evil against the king of Elam, and destruction overtook him, and King Nebuchadnezzar triumphed. He captured the land of Elam, and returned in triumph and joy of heart. The reward of Ritti Marduk and his city now came. The king inquired and found that the town of Bet-Karziyabku had formerly been a free town, so he restored its freedom. The Governor of the province of Namar, in which it was situated, was not to enter the town. The town was a horse breeding centre, so the Master of the Horse was to bring no mares or stallions into the town to spoil the strain. No revenue on cattle or sheep was to be collected; the woods and palm groves were not to be cut down, and no roads or bridges made without royal authority. Moreover, no soldiers were to be billeted on the town or forage levied. The passage concludes at the record of the "declaration of the freedom of the town, the chief officers of State being present."

PELLETIER BANQUETED

Postmaster-General Gets Enthusiastic Ovation at Levis.

Friends of the Minister Express Satisfaction With His Career In Cabinet — Guest of Honor Announces That He Hopes to Secure Further Reductions In the Cable and Postal Rates.

Quebec, Sept. 16.—The banquet given to Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, by the mayor of Levis and the Conservatives of the county, on Saturday night, was one of the most successful ever given a public man in this district. The banquet was attended by some 275 guests. Two of the Postmaster-General's fellow Cabinet members were present, Hon. Mr. Reid and Hon. J. D. Hazen. The banquet was presided over by Mayor Bernier of Levis.

Mayor Bernier, in proposing the health of the guest of the evening, paid him a high tribute. The banquet, he said, meant a desire to show their confidence in Mr. Pelletier, who had rightly won his place in the Borden Cabinet, not alone by his talents, but by his past arduous work for the party.

Mr. Pelletier was in fine voice and spoke with his old-time vigor. He referred to his trip to Europe with the Premier. He had admired Mr. Borden before he left for Europe, but his admiration had grown throughout his association with him on the other side.

"Providence has given me a renewal of my health," said Mr. Pelletier, "and I will stay at my post and continue my work."

Mr. Pelletier went on to describe the work done in the interest of his department while abroad, including his efforts to reduce the cable rates, which, he said, was the beginning of more extended success. He hoped to secure a reduction in postage charges between France and Canada.

The defence of Canada and the Empire was a duty for Canada, but a plan to carry out that duty must be formulated and this the Government is endeavoring to do.

"There are many interests who say the Government is not proceeding fast enough with public works in contemplation for Quebec, but those who say so are really the people who have not done or tried to do anything for Quebec during the fifteen years they held office," said Mr. Pelletier.

"I have already said," continued Mr. Pelletier, "to a delegation who met me from the north shore, that I was in favor of the drydock being located on the north side of the St. Charles River, but added that if the engineers refused to locate it on the site there, it would be built at Levis, and if the Cabinet decided that the dock should be built at Levis, I will not interfere. I will abide by the decision in the interests of the public and the welfare of the shipping, as the question is not a local one."

THREE DIE IN CYCLONE

Syracuse Is Visited by Terrific Wind Storm.

Black Funnel-Shaped Cloud Appears Without Warning In Onondaga County, New York, and Sweeps a Path Ten Miles Wide Across the District—Property Loss Estimated at $250,000.

Syracuse, N.Y., Sept. 16.—Three persons were killed and fifty injured by a tornado which worked a ten-mile trail of destruction across the northern part of Onondaga County late yesterday afternoon. The property loss is estimated at $250,000.

The dead:

William Madison, Syracuse.
J. Dopp, Fulton.
Charles Chapman, Saline.

Without any warning of its approach the black, funnel-shaped cloud first appeared near Long Branch, a pleasure resort ten miles from this city. There were about 400 persons there and panic reigned when building after building toppled over and two massive interurban trolley cars were hurled into a ditch.

A number ran into the dance hall for safety, but this building was directly in the path of the storm and was demolished. Many persons were injured in it. The wind, thunder, lightning and rain were terrific. Trees were cracked and fell to the ground, women screamed and fainted. Rushing westward, the tornado wrecked the boathouse of the Syracuse University navy, in which was stored the entire crew equipment. All the shells were wrecked and the loss to the university is more than $8,000.

Racing across the country, the tornado leveled everything in its path, farmhouses, barns and crops were ruined and scores of head of cattle killed. North of North Syracuse the devastation continued. Hitchers Hill was next visited and the settlement was practically wiped out. Fifteen residences, a number of barns and the schoolhouse falling before the whirlwind. The home of H. A. Wendel, which stood in the path of the tornado, was lifted from its foundation and turned completely over. In the house were Mrs. Wendel and her three boys, all of whom escaped uninjured. Their experience was a typical one.

"I was in the front room with the boys," said Mrs. Wendel when it suddenly began to grow dark. To the westward I could see a dark funnel-shaped cloud bearing toward the hill. I called to the children and we closed the windows and ran into the back room. We had not reached the door when I heard a snapping and the furniture in the parlor was lifted up and hurled against the wall. Then the house seemed to rise in the air and the next I remember I was groping about in darkness. I called to the boys and we crawled through the attic window, which was resting in the ground."

Mexican Rebel Leader Captured

Special

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Unofficial advices were received here tonight to the effect that General Orozco, leader of the Mexican rebel army had crossed the border into the State of Texas and had been captured by Captain Mitchell, U.S.A. General Steever, commanding the American forces at El Paso, telegraphed the War Department that this rumor had reached him, but that he was unable to confirm it. He added that he had sent reinforcements to Marfa, Tex., where Captain Mitchell is stationed.

The report caused a great deal of commotion here to-night, and the greatest significance is attached to it in these quarters where the rumor is credited. It is the general belief here that if the report be true and Orozco is in the custody of the United States army that the collapse of organized revolution in the north of Mexico is at hand.

Despatches to the State Department to-day gave no sign of any change in the Mexican situation. Ambassador Wilson reported yesterday that great uneasiness prevailed in the capital over what to-morrow may bring forth. He also reported that he is taking steps looking to the ascertaining of the whereabouts of John Devine, an American, reported sentenced to death by rebels.

PHYSIOLOGISTS DISAGREE

There are few persons who realize how great physiologists are at variance in their estimate of the actual work performed by the Liver. While all agree that it is the largest and one of the very important glands of the body, when it comes to the question of the actual work performed, there seems to be a wide diversity of opinion.

Practically all are agreed, however, that the principal work of the Liver is the separation of such materials contained in the body as might exert a poisonous influence upon the body unless thrown off.

Rexall Liver Salts has been produced with the idea of assisting the torpid Liver to perform its proper functions in a proper manner, and the success which has attended the treatment leads us to recommend this preparation to you.

A Belgian Library Scheme.

Enterprising little Belgium, long celebrated for its thrift, has evolved a new scheme by which this national virtue is to be linked to the pursuit of literature. A state library, to begin at 10,000 volumes, is being set up in Brussels, and all those who have money in the savings banks are entitled to borrow from it any book they like upon checking a penny off their savings bank books at the nearest post office. The volume borrowed will be sent free by post and may be kept for a fortnight, while the usual guarantee is provided by the borrower's deposit. As Belgium numbers some 1,500 post offices, this sheme will virtually create a circulating library of 1,500 branches.—The University Correspondent.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

JOHN HYMANS and LEILA MCINTYRE, In "The Girl of My Dreams" Griffins Opera House, Tuesday, Sept. 17.

JOHN HYAMS AND LELIA McINTYRE IN "THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS."

"The Girl of My Dreams" will be seen at Griffin's Opera House to-morrow, Tuesday, night and is said to bear the ear marks of a Jos. M. Gaites production, that has all the daintiness, chicness, good taste, amusing situations, and laughs that under the deft handling are lifted to the dignity of a charming naturalness, that the costuming and scenic color schemes are superb and in harmony and richness and they are lavished upon a cast not only of rarely artistic principals, but a capable chorus rich in beauty.

The renegade founder of the Bachelor's Club arrives under its roof just after an automobile accident, wherein a woman's hat in the other automobile has been chewed up by his automobile—an accident which, as is invariably the case with women's hats, leads to all the complications and subsequent troubles. The club is holding a round robin over the desertion of its founder.

A superb male chorus thus opens the musical comedy whose swift current then sets in upon the arrival of the Puritan sweetheart, the lady of the lost hat and her titled escort. The play bears the distinction of having well defined characters.. The music is by the famous composer, the late Karl Hoschna, who is also responsible for "Three Twins," "Bright Eyes," "Madame Sherry," and "Doctor De Luxe" In "The Girl of My Dreams" he has written song hits galore. The particular bright and shining stars of the production are John Hyams, who impersonates the all round good bachelor felow, and the little Quaker Miss played by Leila McIntyre. They have been vaudeville headliners for a number of years, and this piece in which they are starred gives them much opportunity for forceful team work as well as other clever bits of acting. The supporting company comprises some very capable artists, among them: Alice Hills, Della Niven, Irving Brooks, Silvia di Frankie, Francis Gailard, a big beauty chorus and the original De Luxe Pony ballet. Plan at Doyle's now.

GREAT ACTOR IN MUSIC.

In the great sphere of music, David Bispham is admittedly one of the greatest actors. In fact, it has been often said that the Drama lost a great star to the Opera when David Bispham chose music as his profession.

This remarkable dramatic power gives him a wonderful hold on his audiences, for when Bispham sings he puts into the song what was meant to be there. If it is tragedy, then there is tragedy in his voice and face; if it is devotion, one feels that he is listening to a prayer; if it is praise, one is lifted into the same state with the singer; if it is love, then tenderness and affection are in his notes; if it is humor, you hear the rippling of laughter; if it is descriptive, you see the thing that is described. There is nothing mechanical about Mr. Bispham's singing—it is all the man himself.

A St. Louis critic writes of his recent concert in that city;— "No one, fresh from a concert given by David Bispham, could write coldly of his wonderful art—certainly, I cannot. From the soft, tender melody of the "Banjo Song", through the dramatic power and strength of "Danny Deever" to the wonderful, gripping, aching, intensity of "Edward" this great artist poured forth the Heavensent beauty of his voice. And, wonderful to relate, throughout the whole evening, this master-singer had not a line, nor a word before him. Even in his superb, marvelous reading of that final test of the reader, actor and singer, "King Robert of Sicily", Mr. Bispham relied entirely upon his trained memory."

It is to be hoped that Mr. Bispham will include "King Robert of Sicily" in his porgramme here. The date of the Bispham concert is Tonight at the City Hall.

THE ROSE OF KILDARE

Fiske O'Haro, who easily ranks as the foremost exponent of Irish character parts of the romantic order, will be the attraction at Griffin's Opera House, Sept. 20th in his new play, "The Rose of Kildare" A romance of the stirring days of 1798, in the County Kildare, is the theme of Messrs. Paulton and Bradley's work, which is one of the daintiest and most attractive vehicles that Mr. O'Haro has yet obtained to display his versatile talents. It tells how one Gerald O'Donnell, a mad-cap young gentleman of the county is shipwrecked on the coast of Wicklow in a French vessel, bearing supplies from Napoleon to aid the Irish insurgents in their struggle against England. He reaches the shore and finds that a treacherous friend of his sweetheart has informed the authorities of his proposed landing and that he is a proscribed rebel. The soldiers unwittingly help him to reach Ballymara Castle, the home of his sweetheart, Lady Moya Fitzpatrick, The Rose of Kildare, but his escape is soon made known to his arch-enemy, Brian Burke, who compels Gerald to take to the Wicklow Mountains, where he is soon captured by the soldiers. He is led back, a prisoner, to Ballymara Castle now occupied by English soldiers and there courtmartialed and sentenced to death. As he is being led out to execution, the commanding officer is notified that Burke, who is a magistrate of the county, has received a proclamation of amnesty, and is holding it back for the purpose of having O'Donnell shot. Burke now becomes the prisoner, charged with attempting murder, and Gerald and his Rose of Kildare become once more united. "The Rose of Kildare" is handsomely staged in the usual style of the Pitou productions and there is a fine company, in the roster of which are many prominent names. Charming Irish songs, of which Mr. O'Haro has quite a large budget in this performance, will of course, be one of the attractive features of the entertainment, and will be sung as only O'Haro can sing them.

U. S. Tribute to Canada

J. S. Bache & Co., leading bankers of New York, issue a weekly Financial Review. In the last one appears the following:—

> "An object lesson to legislators should be learned by appreciation of Canada's banking position under a crop-moving situation similar to our own. The financial system there provides an automatic increase of currency, which is put out by the banks through issue of their own notes, and which does not necessitate the dragging down (as with us) of loans to business enterprises, while the crop is being moved.
> Canada in the last seven months has increased its banking capital from $102,000,000 to $113,000,000—an increase of over 10 per cent. This will effect, when needed, a corresponding increase of circulation, and it is intended to meet the great and growing volume of Canada's trade. Call loans outside of Canada were $104,000,000 in 1911, and were $117,961,000 in the July statement of this year. This is an increase of 13 per cent. These loans are indeed placed mainly in New York, and are now beginning to be drawn against as evidenced by the shipment of $1,300,000 in gold to Canada this week.
>
> While Canada has been increasing its loans outside, its own call loans have been much less during the year, leaving the business markets in better shape for the fall operation. Moving the crops in Canada, however, does not produce any such contraction as in this country, because, while we have to send out our reserves, making it necessary to pull down loans, Canada sends out only its paper bank notes, business loans being left undisturbed. The Canadian banks have reduced their holdings of Government municipal securities, and their current loans show the heaviest increase of any class of business, reflecting the extreme activity of industry and commerce, and the confidence and security prevailing.
>
> The great country to the north of us, secure thus far from the pestiferous, political pettifogging which is holding the United States in leash, is forging ahead in a wonderful prosperity. It is estimated that foreign money is going into Canadian ventures at the rate of $1,000,000 a day. Here in the United States investors from abroad are holding off to see how the railroads will come out under the squeeze of higher wages and costlier material on the one side and rate reduction in every direction on the other. The condition of Canada's railroads is in glaring contrast with our own. Canada's Pacific prosperity is the shining mark of the world. The road has been backed by the Government from the very start, and with its gold mines of hidden assets in enormous areas of lands adjoining its tracks, land which it is constantly making more valuable by reason of its own operations and extensions, its growth seems unlimited. On our own side we have as the only somewhat similar system the Union Pacific, which might be made nearly as great as its Canadian sister were it not for the Government persecution."

The Two Leaders

The contrast afforded by the leaders of the two political parties in Canada is one, remarks the Guelph Herald, that impresses itself upon all. Even the most ardent admirers of the Liberal leader must admit, if they are honest, that he cuts but an indifferent figure in all the addresses he has delivered since his defeat. He has demonstrated a big falling off from the statesmanlike attitude with which report credited him, defeat evidently having stripped Sir Wilfrid of the glamor which had previously hedged him from the keen discernment of a critical public eye. Captious criticism, fault finding because evils that he failed to remedy in sixteen years have not been remedied by the Conservatives in ten months, and contemptious references to his opponents have constituted the leader's stock in trade.

Contrast that attitude with the broad, liberal-minded and statesmanlike manner in which the Right Hon. R. L. Borden has grappled with public questions, his cordial references to the defeated ones, and his appeal for the burying of all small, sectional feelings—and you secure a fitting comparison of the two political leaders that sizes up the relative stature of the men as nothing else could.

Plans have been made for a subway in Chicago to have 131 miles of track. The capacity of the proposed system is estimated at 180,000 seats an hour. Except for the freight subway built several years ago and for the passage of surface cars through a tunnel under the Chicago river, this will be the city's first venture in underground transportation. Engineers devising the completed system will distinguish themselves if they can eliminate from it some of the features which make the New York underground system disagreeable if not unhealthful.

Those flippant writers who have been calling Belleville "the dead city" are fittingly rebuked by the fact that during during the present year not much, if any, less than half a million of dollars will be expended in building operations, not including anything for the new dormitories at the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, on which $65,000 will be expended, and other buildings closely bordering the city and which contribute to its trade. Moreover, during the past seven years the city's population has increased over 2,000 and is growing steadily. That is the sort of "deadness" that Belleville has been experiencing.

"Eating knives and all that stuff never hurt me," said Martiner before the operation, "but sometimes I would get terrible pains in my stomach." Physicians pronounced the operation successful. GEN. NOGI CUTS THROAT

Famous Japanese General and Wife Commit Harikari.

Supreme Military Counciller and His Spouse End Their Lives Just as the Body of the Emperor Leaves Tokio—Act Is in Accordance With an Ancient Tradition of the Japanese Samurai.

Tokio, Sept. 14.—General Count Maresuke Nogi, Supreme Military Councillor, and his wife, the Countess Nogi, committed harikari last night following the religious ceremonies in connection with the death of the late Emperor Mutsuhito.

The aged general and his wife were in the procession following the Emperor's body, Nogi holding one of the places of honor among the mourners.

The taking off by their own hands of the famous general and his wife was as dramatic as it was sad. The general cut his throat with a short sword and the countess committed harikari.

Following the Samurai custom the couple had carefully prepared their plans for killing themselves and timed them so that they would be coincident with the departure forever from Tokio of the dead Emperor.

It was expected that they would proceed to Aoyama last night with the cortege. Instead, at the conclusion of the ceremony, they withdrew to their modest home in Akasaka, a suburb of Tokio, and there began their final prepartions for death.

First the general wrote a letter to his new Emperor, Yoshihito. Then he draped in mourning a portrait of the late Emperor and afterwards he and his wife dressed themselves in full Japanese costumes and drank a farewell cup of sake from cups which had been presented to the general by Mutsuhito.

Darkness had fallen and Gen. Nogi and the countess sat and awaited the signal they had agreed upon to announce their leave-taking. This was the booming of a single gun in the palace grounds at Tokio, which was to let the people know that the body of the Emperor was starting for its last resting place.

As the boom of the signal gun resounded Gen. Nogi arose and grasped tightly in his hand a short sword, plunging it into his throat while the countess stabbed herself through the stomach. A student who resided in the Nogi home heard the fall of the bodies and rushed into the room. Lying upon the floor were the hero of Port Arthur and his wife. Both still were breathing, but their spasmodic gasps showed plainly that their lives were fast ebbing. The student went for aid, but when he returned both the general and the countess had passed away.

The tragedy created a profound sensation and expressions of sorrow were heard on every hand last night. Especially grief-stricken was Prince Arthur of Connaught, who was to have gone with Gen. Nogi to-day to the former capital of the Shogunate, Kamakura.

Those who knew Gen. Nogi well declared that his calmness in killing himself last night was the kind of calmness he always had displayed, no matter what crisis faced him.

Gen. Nogi's brilliant achievements during the Russo-Japanese war brought him world-wide fame as a military commander. He commanded the Japanese army at the siege of Port Arthur, the giant fortress falling after a siege lasting for six months. As soon as he had scored this triumph he rushed north with an army of a hundred thousand men, and passing through Chinese territory, in defiance of laws of neutrality, outflanked the right wing of the Russian army, which was engaged under Kuropatkin and against Gen. Kuroki, in the battle of Mukden, the greatest land conflict of modern days. His sudden onslaught on the Russians, who had been constantly engaged in battle for five days, decided the struggle, and the result was the precipitate defeat of Kuropatkin's army, the capture of 50,000 of his men, the destruction of vast supplies, and the end of the war.

Aged Wife Made A Fine Sacrifice

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—The threatening loss of his priceless collection of objects of art and rare stones, which has hung like a pall over the head of General Dainiel E. Sickles, diplomatist, the veteran of several wars, and which his friends assert is the real reason the old warrior refused to permit the use of his name as a candidate for the office of commander-in-chief, before his comrades now in session at Los Angeles, was averted yesterday afternoon.

For the general's wife, from whom he has been estranged for the past twenty-seven years, took her jewelry from a safety vault down town and passed it over the counter in a pawnbroker's shop to satisfy the judgment against the old soldier.

She wept bitterly as the gems—enough to total more than $8,000—were passed over to the money lender.

"I have done it for him," she said between sobs. The money in her possession, the judgment was satisfied within a half hour, and last night uptown in the neighborhood where the distinguished veteran and his handsome wife have for years maintained separate establishments, there are whisperings of a reconciliation but on the subject everybody is dumb.

MAN SWIMS 30 MILES, SHOWS NO FATIGUE

BAKU, Sept. 12.—A school teacher named Romenco swam thirty miles in the Caspian sea in 24 hours and ten minutes and at the end showed no undue fatigue, despite the strong wind and boisterous sea with which he had to contend.

He claims to have beaten the record of T. W. Burgess, the champion English swimmer, who accomplished the journey between Dover and Calais last year and has challenged the Britisher to a swimming contest in June 1912, from St. Petersburg to Stockholm, with rests allowed on islands on the way or aboard ships at ancher.

Remenco proposes that there shall be eliminating trials from St. Petersburg to Cronstadt, a distance of 25 miles. This must be a non-stop contest.

POWELL THE LONGEST IN PITCHING SERVICE

Joe Wood, Boston's great twirler, who has hopes of establishing a new world's record for consecutive victories, has best beware of one John Powell, a burly pitcher of the St. Louis Browns. Powell seems to have a penchant for interrupting winning streaks of great pitchers, a stunt he has been performing with more or less regularity for 15 years in the big leagues.

When Walter Johnson was running at top speed recently and had already set a new American League record and was cruising out for Rube Marquard's figures, he ran afoul of Powell, and his fine winning streak was shattered with a defeat. When Wood goes West to St. Louis Joe wants to beware of Powell.

In addition to having credit for breaking Johnson's winning streak, Powell can claim the honor of being the longest service pitcher in the National or American League.

Powell has played in the major leagues without interruption from 1897, when he joined Cleveland in the National League. From Cleveland Powell went to St. Louis at the time of the consolidation, when the National League reduced to eight clubs.

When the war began with the American League and St. Louis was invaded a year ago, Powell went over to the Browns, and has seen service in the Ameican League ever since.

Powell still pitches excellent ball, though he appears to have nothing. His control and cool head, together with a thorough knowledge of the batters, make him a winner. He is an invariable winner against the Athletics.

Christy Mathewson of the Giants and Tom Hughes of Washington rank next to Powell for long service, both having enteretd the major leagues in 1900, Mathewson with the Giants and Hughes with the Chicago Nationals.

RAILROAD BAITING IN CANADA

E. W. THOMPSON IN BOSTON "TRANSCRIPT"

The following observation on the proposed reductions of freight rates in the West by this noted journalist are of interest just now to Canadians. Mr. Thompson says in part:

In the first place it costs more to "produce" transportation in northern latitudes than in warmer climes. Coal is higher, snowdrifts deeper, and it costs more to shovel both. It costs more to feed a locomotive or a man in the colder country. The man must wear warmer clothes; the engine consumes more coal and oil. It this increased cost of operation increased the efficiency of the locomotive or the man it would not be wasted, but both man and engine lose efficiency as the temperature drops. A freight train that can be easily started in summer will stick in the siding at forty uelow. It was away below zero for weeks last winter in Canada's prairie West.

Everything is going up—everything but the price of transportation. Increasing cost of living in the West is justly urged on behalf of repeated demands for better pay for labor. The same argument applies to a railway. The railway must "live", it must even enjoy some measure f prosperity in order to give its workmen a living wage. As the trend of times is toward better clothes for the man and his wife, so it is toward better equipment for the railway, smarter carriages, electric fans and faster trains. Can the public reasonably expect the benefit of these betterments for no additional cost? The first Pullman car, the "Pioneer," operated on the Chicago & Alton, cost $2,000, and took two dollars for a single sleep. The traveller to-day sleeps in a car that may cost $20,000 for the same price charged in the "Pioneer." He can sleep in a first-class sleeper to-day or to-night for half the price charged in a first-class hotel. The Pullman Company is supposed to enjoy a monopoly in America. It is not so. For years the Wagner Company was a competitor. Even before the merger of those companies many railways operated their own sleeping cars. The railways tried to improve on the Pullman. The Pullman Company took pointers and tried to improve on the improvements. So competition here, as in all branches of transportation, made for good services.

COMPETING ROADS OF CANADA

Canada is fortunate in having three separate, distinct and keenly competing railway systems. Competition between them will insure the best of service, not only in rates but in facilities. Canada deserves such competition. The Dominion has been liberal in encouragement of the building of railways. Is Canada likely to be so unreasonable as to declare that, now that they are practically completed, they shall not be allowed to share in the general prosperity of the Canada which they have helped to make? Should not railway rates rather ascend with wages and with taxes than go down? It is a mistake to make a "houn' dawg" of the railways. That's the way to damage their service to the public—and the best service is what Canada intended to obtain when encouraging railway building.

Recently the Grand Trunk Pacific settled with section men at a minimum rate of two dollars a day. This will probably be the ruling rate in the Canadian West. A few years ago the daily toll of a track-man was only half that amount. Just as the price of this labor has doubled, so the price of all things going into "the mill" that produces transportation has advanced from thirty to fifty per cent. in the same time. Yet the price of this one product, transportation—the only thing the railway has to sell—tends downward from year to year.

If the rate is not obviously and directly reduced, the railway is asked to take new risks, to assume new burdens from ime to time, so that the result is the same. Yet the public sentiment has been worked up to undiscriminating hostility to "common carriers." As if in fear of this factitious sentiment, commissions and boards, whose duties incude the supervision and regulation of rates, show a growing tendency to establish a perpetual "open season" for hunters of railways. In this, certain Canadians imitate thoughtlessly the worst American examples. This is unfortunate anywhere, especially in a new country with empty unploughed fields between homesteads and only water tanks between towns.

EXCUSE FOR HIGHER RATES

In the sparseness of settlement there is obvious justification for a higher freight rate in the West than in the East. Is not higher rate in Western Canada than in the Western States reasonable and necessary in view of the denser travel in those states? When priaric Canada obtains population and therefore travel as dense as in the prairie United States, then the Canadian rates will be lower, since the climate of the Canadian Northwest is less "blizzardous," less cyclonic, than that of the American West.

Canadian railroad companies are not opposing hostile criticism to the suggestion that they must justify their Western rates; they merely show how easy it is to justify them. Why assume the companies to be guilty of extortion?? It is for their own interest to be as liberal as possible. Why not credit them with that? Surely the railway, the "first producer," the chief industry of this continent, if one except agriculture, the pioneer of cicilization, the very pathfinder in industrial development, ought to be encouraged rather than discouraged. Along the railway's right of way, over twin strands of steel, courses the nation's commercial and industrial life.

While the railways make it their business to encourage commerce and industry along their lines, they themselves receive little encouragement from the business public. When prosperity blesses the land and the railways therefore increase their gross revenues, this fact is immediately instanced for higher wages, increase in taxation and the piling up of working conditions. Hence, although the gross revenues of a railway may be largely increased, usually the operating expenses increase out of proportion, so that they wipe out the net increase entirely.

A good example of this is found in the Interstate Commerce Commission Bulletin of revenues and expenses of the railways of the United States for the ten months of the fiscal year ending April 30 last. Although the operating revenues of the railroads increased $32.220,258, the operating expenses increasd $32,521,778. In other words, the railways paid $301,520 for the privileges of doing this vast volume of business. That's not all. To this increase in operating costs must be added an increase of $9,666,827 in taxes levied upon the roads by the states through which they pass.

THE TAX ON PROSPERITY

One would suppose that any business which showed in ten months a gross increase of more than $32,000,000 ought to show at least a slight increase in net. But the net earning of the American railways actually diminished $10,000,000 during this period—a million dollars a month! If we considered the business of the railway with the same measure of fairness employed when dealing with other inndustries, we would agree that is unfair to ask the railways to do all the extra business at a loss. Obviously, it cost the railroad something to carry thirty-two and a quarter million dollars worth of traffic. Yet for each dollar of new business the railroads secured in the specified period they paid out $1.31.

Experts estimate that eight billion dollars will be needed in the next five years to maintain railroad facilities in pace with the enormous increase of traffic in the United States. In Canada, the situation is even worse. We are just in the midst of railway construction. Vast areas in Canada, practically unsettled, but rapidly settling must be supplied with transportation facilities. If you cripple the railways, reduce their revenue and destroy their borrowing power, who is to supply the billions needed in the Unitied States and the millions required in Canada?

If there is drought in the land, feed is high and cattle scarce, the cost of producing a pound of beef is increased, the price goes up to cover that cost. But if the railways ask the right to raise the rate to cover part of the increased cost of producing transportation, all other branches of business combine immediately to prevent the increase! In the Republic, this universal war on the railroad is carried through the nation, through the state, even down to the wards of a city. If a man is accused of robbing the railway, nine times out of ten he can rely upon a jury to acquit him. Canadian public men know this to be true—why should so many of them imitate the evil American example?

The railway managers of Canada all agree in one point, at least. They think that somewhere in the Dominion should arise a statesman big and broad and brave enough to urge the same fair, square treatment of the railways that is accorded to other indusries. Unless this can be done, unless the railways are given a right to live, it is going to be as difficult to find money to provide railway facilities for the Dominion as it is to obtain means for the railways needed by the rest of the American continent.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

GANGSTERS ARE TAKEN

"Gyp" and "Lefty" Surrender in a Brooklyn Flat.

Sixty Detectives Working In Relays Have Been Watching the Wives of the Two Gunmen Charged With the Murder of Gambler Rosenthal and at Last They Are Traced to Their Hiding-place.

New York, Sept. 16.—"Gyp the Blood" and "Lefty Louie," the missing gunmen indicted as two of the actual slayers of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, were found by the police Saturday night living with their wives in a flat in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn. They were arrested by Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty and a squad of detectives, who brought them to police headquarters and locked them up. They will be arraigned to-day.

The two gunmen had been occupying the flat since August 15, alone until last Tuesday, when they were joined by their wives, through whom clues to their whereabouts were obtained by the police.

The four were sitting at tea when Deputy Commissioner Dougherty and his men burst open the door of their apartments and with revolvers drawn ordered them to hold up their hands. Neither of the gunmen made any show of resistance.

"Drop your guns. You've got us," said "Gyp," calmly. "Give us a little time to get dressed, will you?" said "Lefty" with equal composure. Scarcely another remark was made to the police by either men until they were examined at police headquarters later by Assistant District Attorney Moss, acting for District Attorney Whitman, who has gone to Hot Springs to take testimony of persons who talked to Sam Schepps, a witness in the case.

The women, however, made a scene, throwing their arms around their husband's necks and shedding copious tears. They had to be torn away from the men before the police could get their prisoners out of the apartment and were later brought to headquarters.

The arrest of "Gyp" and "Lefty," whose real names are Harry Horowitz and Lewis Rosensweig, means that all of the seven men accused of the murder of Rosenthal, of which Police Lieut. Becker is the alleged instigator, are now in custody.

The capture of the two men was the result of unbroken surveillance of the wives and relatives of the men since their disappearance on the day of the murder, July 16. This surveillance was maintained by sixty detectives working in relays, who kept Deputy Commissioner Dougherty constantly in touch with what they did and where they went. The final clue came as the result of piecing together a number of conversations overheard by detectives reported to the commissioner at different times. The first conversation was that "They are not lonesome because they can see a moving picture show from their back windows." Another conversation gave the information that there was a laundry in the house the missing men were living in, which was named either the New Brighton, the Brighton or the Bright Hand Laundry. A third conversation supplied the fact that the neighborhood "was full of Swedes and Germans."

It then became Commissioner Dougherty's task to discover somewhere a hand laundry in proximity to a moving picture show in a vicinity inhabited by people of the nationalities named. The possible name of the laundry was obtained less than two days ago, and the commissioner discovered that there were half a dozen laundries of similar names in New York City and many more in other cities, for the commissioner did not assume that the gunmen were necessarily located in New York.

"When we found the laundry with a moving picture show close by, there were no Swedes or Germans in the neighborhood," said Mr. Dougherty last night, "or when we found a laundry with the foreigners in the neighborhood, there was no moving picture show. One of our laundry clues took us to New Haven, and we were just about to investigate another in Pittsburg."

Early yesterday Detectives Meyer and Cassasso discovered in Brooklyn the "New Brighton Hand Laundry," which perfectly fitted all requirements. They set themselves to watch the apartments situated above the laundry, and late yesterday afternoon were rewarded by seeing "Gyp the Blood's" wife leave the building and do an errand at a store. Both wives had been missing since Tuesday, when they cleverly evaded detectives by jumping into a waiting automobile after leaving an "L" train, on which they were riding in the direction of Harlem. The detectives therefore felt certain that they were with their husbands. The women had several other times eluded surveillance by the use of automobiles, but previously had always returned to their homes in New York. The arrest followed as soon as the detectives could collect reinforcements.

Hayes Is Dismissed.

New York, Sept. 16.—Cornelius G. Hayes, the police inspector who was recently placed on trial for making a statement, alleged to be false, reflecting on Police Commissioner Waldo, was found guilty of the charges Saturday and dismissed from the department. First Deputy Commissioner McKay, who presided at the trial, announced his finding shortly after noon Saturday.

The statement by Hayes which led to his trial was to the effect that Waldo had enjoined him from raiding disorderly houses without express instructions. Hayes thus declared himself not long after the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, at a time when there were inquiries afoot to determine what the police were doing to better conditions in the tenderloin.

Ottawa, Sept. 16.—Canada has failed to capture the Palma Trophy from the United States; but even in her failure she has made a score never before equalled in any previous Palma competition. IS STILL AT IT.

Montreal, Sept. 16.—"We want a larger market, and that market is the United States," was the text preached Saturday by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, who before several thousand persons, held a demonstration at St. Clet, in the County of Soulanges. Reciprocity was in the air, while the devices were "Down with the Trusts" and "Larger Markets."

Sir Wilfrid told his hearers that Canada had 250,000,000 bushels of grain to export and as the time would come when England could not take this surplus, a market must be found elsewhere. His Government had offered a market; but the present rulers of Canada were responsible for the people's refusal and must find a substitute which, he intimated, was to the south of us.

Sir Wilfrid gave an absolute denial to the statement made by Mr. Bourassa to the effect that he had signed a secret agreement with the Imperial authorities as to the disposition of the Canadian fleet in time of war. He had been in conference with the Foreign Office four times and no agreement was signed that had not been openly submitted to Parliament.

For the first time the old leader hinted at a change in the leadership, although he said that each time he had suggested retirement his friends had insisted that the old man was wanted at the head of the party. He had, however, reached an age when the future was uncertain. Yet he felt that he could yet successfully defy his political opponents. As for the naval policy of the present Government, the leader declined to pronounce himself before the Prime Minister had made known his policy. Then Sir Wilfrid said he would judge the matter on its merits.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, who becomes more and more Sir Wilfrid's first lieutenant, was loud in his affirmation that the battle of the tariff will have to be fought over again, saying: "The vote of the 21st of September last was not a vote against the fiscal policy of the Laurier Government, but a vote of prejudice and passion which will not be repeated."

"Canada," he said, "wants wider markets for her farm products, while such devices as "Down with the Trusts' and 'Give Us a Wider Market' floated to the breeze."

J. O. Mousseau, M.P.P. for Soulanges, the organizer of the demonstration on Saturday, said: "Reciprocity is the one question which responds to the interest of the Canadian people. It is in the hearts of the masses and is feared by the manufacturers and the capitalists."

Active Business Requires Adequate Telephone Service.

1. An open door for outgoing telephone calls.
2. An open door for incoming telephone calls.
3. Facilities for immediate intercommunication between offices and departments.

Private Branch Exchange telephone service meets these requirements. Outgoing and incoming messages can be handled simultaneously. Interior intercommunication can be carried on independently.

Private Branch Exchange telephone service is recognized as the only suitable service for active organizations, and it costs even less than the simpler form of telephone service.

Let us send our representative to explain it in detail and to quote rates.

STARVES HERSELF TO DEATH THROUGH GRIEF

Philadelphia, [illegible] 12.—Cordelia Webb, 57 years old, after having refused to partake of food since May 18, died yesterday. The woman began starving herself following the death of her sister, Charlotte, on May 18. Even during her last moments, she fought a physician who tried to give her stimulants by hypodermic injection.

Cordelia and Charlotte Webb were inseparable. For years after the death of her younger sister Cordelia wandered around the house moaning to herself. For weeks the woman steadfastly refused to partake of food. From a healthy, robust woman, she gradually became a skeleton, the skin stretched like parchment over her bones.

Only once so far as it is known since the death of Charlotte did Cordelia listen to pleadings of her younger sister Jean, to eat something. About two weeks ago she consented to eat a spoonful of jell. Cordelia forbade Jean ing her sister was so strong that Jean to call a docter, and the habit of obey- did nothing until the day of her death. The condition of the starving woman was so serious that Jean saw the end was near. Then she called Dr. Webber, but it was too late

HOW BLOOD IS MADE.

The liquids and the digested foods in the alimentary canal pass through the wall of the canal into the blood. This process is called absorption and takes place chiefly from the small intestine. After absorption the blood carries the food through the body, and each cell takes from the blood the food it needs. A pure glyceric extract made from bloodroot, mandrake, stone, queen's root and golden seal and sold by druggists for the past forty years under the name of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, gives uniformly excellent results as a tonic to help in the assimilation of the food and in the absorption by the blood of the food it requires. Eradicate the poisons from the blood with this alterative extract which does not shrink the white blood corpuscles, because containing no alcohol or other injurious ingredients. Thus the body can be built up—strong to resist disease. This is a tonic taken from Nature's garden that builds up those weakened by disease.

Dr. Pierce, founder of the Invalids' Hotel at Buffalo, N.Y., has received many letters similar to the following:

F. R. MUNRO, Esq.

Mr. Fred R. Munro, of Paradise, N. S., writes: "I take great pleasure in writing you as regards my case and its cure. In September I was taken with Typhoid Fever, which put me in a dreadful condition. I was weak, run down, nervous and was reduced to a mere skeleton. I had tried most everything I could get but nothing did me any good until, at last, I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and 'Pleasant Pellets,' which I did. Before I had used one bottle I saw a great improvement and when I had used this treatment two months, using only a few vials of 'Pleasant Pellets,' I returned to perfect health. I cannot find words to express my thankfulness for this wonderful medicine. I advise all sufferers to write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, as he cures when others fail."

SHALL I WIN HER ?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Another and another Kaffir bounded up and launched his assegai, but the fate of the first rendered them cautious, and dreading my fire they were too quick in apeparing and disapearing to launch their weapons with anything like precision. But I saw with increased anxiety and alarm that the assegais of these Amapondas were unusually formidable, being fully six feet long, with iron spear-heads one fourth of that length, inserted into the shaft, and all too evidently poisoned.

"To cover—to cover!" said I, aloud, in my excitement. "To cover while there is yet time, Dick Haddon," for I had acquired a habit of communing with myself when alone.

This rock ridge was about two hundred feet in height, and in form and aspect closely resembled the well known crags of Salisbury which overhang the city of Edinburgh. Through the intertwisted branches of the dead pines—which were of great size and age—over the rough stone and long karoo grass that covered the slope, I scrambled upward, and ere long found myself at the base of the basaltic cliffs, just about the time when the foremost of the Kaffirs had dismounted at the bottom of the slope, and was haltering his horse to a skeleton tree.

The cleft, or chasm, was a natural split in the rocks, about six feet broad, but of great depth—some thirty feet or so, and open at the top—a point which could not be reached in any way, as the basaltic cliffs ascended sheer upwards, and even impended a little. Behind, the rock was totally impracticable of ascent, as it rose sheer like a wall from the karoo, or rather from the grove of dead trees; so I could neither be assailed in rear or on the flank, and for a defence to the front I now bent all my energies.

Including Adrian Africander, my pursuers were four and twenty in number, armed with assegais and muskets. That they had not already used the latter—as I had long been within range—surprised me; but it soon became apparent that they were without ammunition.

Retiring into the chasm, I proceeded in breathless haste to pile across its narrowest part a barricade of loose stones about three feet high, and I had barely achieved its formation when a yell pierced my ears, and the woolly head, the white teeth and gleaming eyes of a dusky Amaponda Kaffir appeared at the lower end of my fortress.

There was a whizzing sound, and launched with deadly force, an iron-headed assegai came crash on the rocks beside me. As he was raising his arm to hurl another, I fired, aiming low, for the life lies low in a Kaffir, as we say in the bush. He suddenly stooped to elude the ball, which consequently pierced his brain, and the dusky savage, after bounding convulsively into the air, fell crashing among the trees below, dead as a stone, while I instantly reloaded, and resolved never to empty both barrels at once if I could avoid doing so.

Oh, what a yell was that which now rose into the clear welkin—a yell fierce and savage as the hot passions which roused it, seemed to pierce my ears, and make my heart tingle.

"Hah!" muttered I, through my clenched teeth, "let the women of the Amapondas count their slain and weep, slain by the white man, alone, unfriended, unaided, and well nigh defenceless. Curse them! curse them; the cold-blooded savages—more cruel even than the lion and the leopard of their native forests.

I know that for this purpose they use a subtle and deadly combination of animal, vegetable and mineral poisons, procured form the cobra di-capello and puff adder, from the roots of a species of cactus, and from copper ore. I knew too well that if wounded by one of these—even by the most trifling puncture—I was a dead man!

All remained quiet for a time, till there rang a triple yell.

Three Caffres abreast sprang up at the end of the chasm and launching their assegais, were about to rush on me, covered by their shields, and armed with their knobkerries or war clubs, but they jostled each other, and when I fired again, the bullet killed one and wounded another, who, making a clutch at the kaross of his third comrade, they all tumbled down the rocks together.

"I have still twenty at least against me," thought I, while reloading the right barrel again; but I had barely done this when another assailant came, whose weapon was a pistol, the ball from which splintered on the stones of my barricade, and so great were the haste, the terror and confusion of the marksman, that he fell forward into the chasm and hurt himself severely.

"Ach Almichtig! verdamte Bergchotten!" he exclaimed. "Come on, come on, he's here!"

He was Adrian Africander.

A glow of vengeance came into my heart when I remembered all the kindness I had for years bestowed upon him, who now pursued me almost to death. I lodged the contents of my left barrel fairly in his body, and after writhing for a time in great agony he expired.

Now that blood had been shed the savages would never relinquish the attack so long as one of them remained to avenge the last who fell.

Once more the savage yells pierced the sky, as a fifth Kaffir fell, shot through the breast, from whence the blood almost spouted over me as though from a syringe; and I heard his body go crashing among the dry branches far down below.

This occurred about midday, and then another drunk with hempseed—maddened for the purpose, apparently—came bounding in the chasm, armed with a knife and war-club. My bullet, short though the distance, glanced obliquely on his shield of rhinoceros hide, and only caused him to stagger; but, ere he could recover himself, I thrust one of the poisoned assegais into his body, and hurled him with my foot into the profundity below.

After this, more than an hour passed without my being molested again, and all remained quiet. I heard only their voices at times, but could make out nothing of what they intended to do. By their continued presence, however, it was evident that they had not relinquished the attack.

Were they waiting quietly to starve me into surrender, or were they deliberately making some chosen man or men drunk with hempseide, to rush with mad courage on their doom and me?

The shadows began to fall eastward. I could see from the chasm—where, with ears intent on every sound, and eyes intent on every object, I sat with cocked rifle, crouched behind my barricade—the flat and fertile karoo I had traversed, and might never traverse more.

Another hour and another were passed in the keenest anxiety. Still the savages were about me, and I still could hear their guttural voices mingling with the Dutch gibberish and Pigeon-English of the Hottentots, amid a great crashing of branches and the falling of dead trees, the skeleton roots of which were easily uptorn from the loose, light soil, and more easily still from the bare rocks round which, in the time of their life and greenery, they had twined.

What were these Amapondas about? Forming a species of scaling-ladders, perhaps; but such were useless, as they could ascend without them.

At last the sun set; the shadows began to deepen fast, and now, creeping to the verge of the chasm, I peeped over the dead body of Africander, and with horror descoverd the trap or fate, they were preparing for me.

All round the base of the insulated mass of rock, but chiefly to its windward side, these active and artful savages had piled vast numbers of dead trees, together with heaps of dry karoo-grass, fir-cones, and leaves; and, without doubt, were intending to fire the whole when duly prepared, for the purpose of suffocating me, or smoking me out—perhaps of roasting me alive.

For some minutes I was utterly bewildered on discovering this unexpected measure, for which they had with due precaution removed all their horses to a place at some distance on the plain.

My past life rendered me full of expedients, and apt to prompt and bold decision, so now my resolution was taken at once. The darkness had set in, and I knew that for hours there would be no moon visible.

Untwisting a cartridge, I mixed the powder of it with some of the blood which had flowed from the wound of Africander, with which I smeared my face and ears, shuddering with disgust as I did so.

Canada is to Get Much Dutch Money

EDMONTON, Alta., Sept. 16.—Dr. P. W. Bonthius de Vries, a banker of The Hague, Holland, and director of the Netherlands Mortgage Bank of Canada, announced in Edmonton that more than $2,000,000 of Holland capital will be invested in the Province of Alberta and Saskatchewan the coming year. The company has already placed $2,000,000 of Dutch money in the two provinces, and the banker added, the returns are highly satisfactory. The head offices are in Winnipeg district being handled by the National Trust Company, the Royal Trust Company and the Standard Trust Company.

Saw Husband's Dead Body, Suicides.

Trois Pistoles, Que., Sept. 14.—Two men, Alfred Gagnon and Arsene Ouellette, were killed on the Intercolonial Railway yesterday, and the wife of Ouellette committed suicide when the body of her husband was taken home.

The men were out driving and their rig was struck on a level crossing. Gagnon and Ouellette were horribly mutilated, and the horse they were driving was also killed.

When Ouellette's body was taken to his home, his wife looked at it, and then rushing shrieking into a back room, stabbed herself in the throat with a table knife.

The Ouellettes had only been married a short time.

True modesty avoids everything that is criminal; false modesty everything that is unfashionable.

"NO-BODY LOVES A BALD MAN"

Every day we see YOUNG men and women, who have grown prematurely grey. They immediately fall into the "Old Age" class, because grey hairs are so closely associated WITH OLD AGE.

It is extremely discomforting and humiliating to be bald—to be grey when the years do not justify it. The girls laugh at the young men so marred—the young man soon learns to discriminate between natural hair in its full bloom of health and NATURAL COLOR, and shabby looking grey and faded hair.

Give nature a chance. If she is encouraged, stimulated, assisted, she will give you a head of hair that you will be proud of.

Give it to her. Use—

Hung for Minutes Held By Her Hair

Sick Woman Crashes from Seventh Floor in Spite of Friend's Efforts.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Residents in Riverside Drive for two or three blocks west of 93rd Street were horrified to-night by shrieks that came from a rear seventh storey window in the West Point apartments at 330 West 95th Street, when Mrs. Henry Thompson, held Miss Julia Thompson, a young woman visitor from Washington, by her hair and tried to pull her swaying body back through the window. For several minutes Miss Wood dangled in the air and struggled frantically to get out of Mrs. Thompson's clutches, both screaming at the top of their voices, and then her hair gave way at the roots and she dropped straight into the areaway at almost the moment when people rushed in to help the courageous woman save her guest.

The young woman was so badly hurt in the fall that it is not thought she will live.

Miss Wood, who is about 30 years of age, is the daughter of C. H. Wood of Washington. She came from Washington two weeks ago to visit Mrs. Thompson. She was ill and was in charge of a trained nurse.

While the nurse was out of her room to-night Miss Wood opened the window and started to climb to the sill. Mrs. Thompson was attracted to the room by the noise and reached the door just as she was getting out of the window. She ran toward her and caught hold of her. There was a struggle, accompanied by loud cries. The sick woman threw herself forward, and Mrs. Thompson got her hand in Miss Wood's hair as the body dropped outside the window.

Bracing herself as well as she could Mrs. Thompson struggled to hold the wiggling woman up. People in the neighboring houses poked their heads out and were horrified at what they saw. They, too, joined in the shrieks, and the sidewalks were soon full of excited folk. A taxicab driver, hearing the general bedlam, loudly blew his whistle and a policeman ran up.

In the meantime, and but a fraction of a second before neighbors reached Mrs. Thompson's rooms, the young woman's hair gave way, and she shot down into the yard. Mrs. Thompson, overcome by her exertions and the horror of the accident, gave way in a faint.

It was found that Miss Wood had been terribly hurt. Two ribs were broken and both legs were fractured at the ankle. Her right forearm was broken and the left arm was fractured between the elbow and the shoulder. Her right hand was also broken. It was believed that she was also internally hurt.

Grand Lodge Is in Session

WINNIPEG, Sept. 16.—The 88th annual session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Oddfellows convened formally in Winnipeg to-day with what Grand Patriarch Master E. H. Dewart declares is the largest gathering in the history of the craft. The first session was an informal gathering at the Congregational Church, in which Premier Roblin and Mayor Waugh greeted the delegates. Speeches were also made by the grand officers. It is said some important legislation bearing on the insurance of the order will be enacted at this session.

Liquor and Opium Seized in Toronto

Special

TORONTO, Sept. 17.—Twenty policemen under the leadership of Staff Inspector Kennedy of the Morality Department, assisted by Inspectors Dickson and Geddes, last night engineered the biggest rain in the history of Toronto's Chinatown, and brought to light evidence of a wholesale illicit traffic in Chinese whiskey, opium, and other noxious drugs.

Five places were visited, and all told, 98 cases of Chinese whiskey and oriental wines, together with a quantity of opium, were seized. The liquors are valued at from 75c. to $3.50 per bottle, and the total value of the haul will range between $5,000 and $10,000. Lee Jim, 166 York Street, and Lee Baw, 156½ York Street, were arrested, charged with selling opium, and at least three others will be arrested to-morrow, charged with keeping liquor for sale without a license.

Plaintiffs Were Given Judgment

Judge Deroche yesterday gave judgment in the case of Marsh & Henthorn vs. J. W. Evans. The plaintiffs brought the action to recover from the defendant $183.43 for the manufacture of what is known as a bignetting machine. It was alleged by the defendant that the machine when made didn't perform the work which it was represented to do, hence the dispute. His Honor gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the full amount and interest from February last; also costs. The defendant's counter claim for damages was dismissed. Messrs. Morden and Shorey for plaintiffs; Mr. Mr. Wright for defendant.

Vicious Snake Attacks Keeper

Special

BERLIN, Sept. 16.—The reptile keeper at the zoo in Frankfort had a narrow escape from death to-day.

A twenty-foot snake of an unnamed species was apparently sick and unable to take food. The doctor who looks after the snakes ordered a bath for the reptile, and four keepers began to immerse him. Suddenly the reptile became furious and tried to encircle all four men in its coils. Three ecaped and the snake grabbed the fourth by the arm, but the other three prevented him from coiling around the man.

These three man did their utmost to make the snake loosen his grip, but without success. They even tried to force chisels between his jaws, but this did not make him leave go. Finally the men, who had been reinforced by others, resorted to a tug of war, some pulling the snake, and the others the men. The succeeded at last in dragging the snake away, but in doing so he tore out a mouthful of the man's arm.

The rescued keeper fainted from loss of blood and shock, and was taken to the hospital.

Minister Leaves Pulpit to Labor

Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 15.—Declaring that the Church is paralyzed and useless, the Rev. Robert A. Bakeman, assistant to Dr. George R. Lunn, Mayor of Schenectady, as pastor of the United People's Church, preached his farewell sermon to-day, and will go to work as a laborer to-morrow under John Hickey, Superintendent of Cleaning.

Mr. Bakeman was called to the United People's Church last February. He was garduated from Colby College, Waterville, Me., and studied theclogy in Newton, Theological Seminary at Newton, Mass. He has been a preacher for seven years.

"We have no need for professional ministers'," said Mr. Bakeman in his farewell address. "It is time ministers got off the people's backs and went to work. To say there are grafters and trimmers in the ministry is only to say there are grafters in the machinists' trade or any other work. The minister is cloistered; his life is artificial. The minister has about as much influence to-day as a man's grandmother. We must have a pulpit as wide open as truth. The atmosphere of truth is not in pulpits."

Mr. Bakeman said to-night that he would work as a laborer on a street cleaning gang to-morrow, but he might try the civil service examination for general foreman next week.

Pastor's Wife Was a Suicide

Philadelphia, Sept. 15.—Mrs. H. C. Stone, wife of the rector of the Memorial Chapel of Holy Trinity Church, committed suicide to-day at her home, and the congregation of the most exclusive Episcopal church in Philadelphia is plunged into grief.

The tragedy is the result of the enforced retirement of the former pastor of the church, the Rev. R. Marshall Harrison, who was compelled by the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins to relinquish his charge, much against the wishes of the parishioners, because it was felt that he was usurping some of the authority of the rector. Dr. Stone was installed in his place.

The pastor of the Memorial Chapel is the assistant to the rector of Holy Trinity, and, while the congregation of that parish welcomed Mrs. Stone, the members of the chapel congregation refused to receive her. The matter became so acute this Summer that Dr. Stone was forced to go away for his health, and he is now in a sanitarium.

Early this morning Mrs. Stone drained a bottle of poisonous disinfectant. Before lapsing into unconsciousness she telephoned the central exchange operator that she was dying. The call was traced, and the ambulance rushed to her apartments, but when assistance arrived Mrs. Stone was dead. It is feared that his wife's death will seriously affect the health of her husband.

Struck by a Flying Blade

Special

ROME, Sept. 16.—Signor Jughetti, an aviator, was killed to-day by an extraordinary accident. He was dissatisfied with the working of the propeller of his machine, and placed upon the shaft six supposedly steel blades.

Starting the motor at high speed, he stood nearby to watch the effect. One of the blades, which proved to be of cast iron, snapped, and flying through the air, struck Jughetti, killing him instantly.

Bared Secrets of Both Armies

Special

CAMBRIDGE, England, Sept. 17.—Twenty-seven aerial reconnaisances, each averaging seventy miles, were made to-day in connection with the British war manoeuvres. The secrets of both armies were laid bare, every position was unmasked and every ruse defeated.

Given clear weather, the aeroplane has put in the hands of every commander what Wellington said was the greatest qualification for success, viz., the capacity for defining what the fellow on the other side of the hill is doing. This is at least the impression gained by the onlookers at the first day's operations, but whether it is endorsed by the rival commanders to full extent is not known.

Having received word that the Blue Army, under command of General Haig, which in the grand army manoeuvres, commenced to-day, represents an invading force from the North Sea, had started to march toward London, the defending army set out at daylight this morning to intercept it.

The manoeuvres are being conducted on the most elaborate scale held in England for some years. The general scheme provides for the repulse of an invading army from the direction of Germany, the scene of operations adjoining the eastern coast line of England. The mimic war will continue for five days.

It is expected that the Red and Blue armies will clash to-morrow. By that time King George will have reached the scene of operations.

Dope Plea Failed To Free Bigamist

TORONTO, Sept. 17.—His precious plea that Oliver Sawyer had doped him with cocaine and that consequently he had absolutely no remembrance of their alleged marriage in Cobalt on Oct. 27, 1909, being controverted by the testimony of the officiating clergyman, Percy W. Bull, the young Englishman, was convicted on a charge of bigamy by Magistrate Denison, in the Police Court yesterday, and sentenced to 23 months in Central Prison. Barbara Livingtone Northern, the young woman, who, depite Chief Inspector Archibald's warning that Bull was a married man, contracted a second marriage with him, now awaits trial by jury in the Sessions on the same charge.

Rev. J. D. Byrnes, of Cobalt, testified that when he performed the marriage ceremony between Olive Sawyer and Bull at Cobalt, Bull and all parties concerned were perfectly sober and well aware of what they were taking part in. The accused had answered all the necessary questions in a most intelligent manner, and the marriage register (produced) was signed by him in a most legible fashion. About a month later, the witness said that Bull came to him to see if he could effect a concilation between him (Bull) and his wife; and this fact satisfied Magistrate Denison that Bull knew he was married.

Fatal Bull Fight At Los Angeles

Special

LOS ANGELES, Ca., Sept. 17.—Francisco del Valle Frasquillo, a matador, lies dying at a local hospital gored by a bull which he attempted to throw by the horns at a celebration here to-day.

With thousands of Mexicans gathered about the enclosure at a local park, Frasquillo sprang over the wall, roused the waiting bull to rage by waving a red flag, and as it dashed at him, caught its horns.

His hands slipped and the bull threw him into the air, catching him on its horns. Then it dropped him to the ground, gored him through the side and turned away.

Walked Miles to Commit Murder

Special

COLFAX, Wash., Sept. 17.—Wesley Bromwell, aged 25, and his 17 year old wife, Winnie, residents of Cul de Sac, Idaho, shot and killed yesterday A. Neeves, the stepfather of Mrs. Bromwell. Both, the authorities say, made full confessions. They had walked 100 miles in search of Neeves.

Neeves was charged by his stepdaughter with having maltreated her in Idaho and aiding others to do so.

Bromwell shot Neeves five times, according to his statement. As Neeves fell, the daughter shot him through the head.

The Bromwells told Sheriff Carter to whom they surrendered, that they killed Neeves because they could not get justice in Idaho.

Sun Feast at Stonehenge

A sun feast in England, the land of fog, seems strange, yet it is a wonderful fete, rare and striking evocation of a past that is old as history.

Persians, Aryans, Hindoos and Arabians, all European delegates of the principal Asiatic races united by the ties of a common religion meet in the ancient druidical ruins of Stonehenge, near Salisbury, and there with full rites offer their impressive annual reverence to the sun. Upon the appointed date, at an hour before dawn, in silence and draped in white, gold and purple robes, more than a hundred sun-worshippers enter Stonehenge and prostrate themselves upon the earth, while five officiating priests chant their solemn invocation to the sun. And when from out the pale English sky the first beams of the sun lap in the east the bowed heads are raised and from every throat comes opening notes of a hymn of praise.

An harmonious recitative at first, with long, high notes that seemed to tell of grand and awful things; a hymn which thrills the listener. Then with a florid running passage it becomes a national song with theme frantic with war and fighting and revenge; with all primitive man's wild passion of hate and love and of spiritual longing and ignorance held captive. It ends as it begun upon a sad, prolonged and piercing note.

Then, each in order, the pilgrims renew their vows of faith in Allah, in his universal majesty, virtue and infinite love.

Before the solemn dignity of these dark skinned men, robed in the garments of gorgeous antiquity and in the isolated plain where huge blocks of rough-hewn granite seemed the grim guardians of this strange religion, even the idlest spectator was awed into silence. For this revival of man's earliest "fetish" evoked in surroundings that lent it added grandeur seemed more like some well-staged theatrical scene than an incident in real life.

With a fervor entirely oriental the Sun-Worshippers remained in prayer until noon, when they slowly dispersed and prepared to pass from ten centuries before Christ to the workaday world of this year of grace, 1912.

Laziness begins in cobwebs and ends in iron chains. The more business a man has to do the more he is able to accomplish, for he learns to economize his time.

RIOTING IN BELFAST

Ulster Protestants Attack Catholic Home Rulers.

State Closely Approaching Civil War Prevailed Yesterday and Saturday In Principal Works of the City—One Man Saved Catholics From Being Mobbed — Many Persons Are Badly Beaten.

London, Sept. 17.—Belfast yesterday was in what The Daily News (Radical) describes as a state of civil war in nearly all the principal works of the city, and in the shipyard, there were brutal scenes.

In the morning, when the Catholic workmen returned to Harland & Wolff's, they were met with jeers. Notwithstanding the fact that the works were surrounded with military and police, a large force of the former having been drafted in during the night, after work had been in progress for an hour Orangemen paraded from one department to another, threatening what would happen in the course of the day, and so menacing was their demeanor that hundreds of the men went home.

One ship, on which a large number of Catholics were employed, was completed during the day, and was to be removed after the dinner hour to another part of the river. In the course of her journey it was arranged that the electric light was to be switched off and an attack on the Catholics was to be made in the darkness. A friendly Orangeman who disapproved of this warned his Catholic friends, and as a result none of them returned after dinner. The Orangeman was then suspected of spoiling the plot and had to clear out, his comrades describing him as a "traitor."

In the yards of Workman & Clarke there were similar scenes, and one man, named Maguire, who was beaten and kicked while an attempt was made to throw him into the river, lies in a hospital seriously injured.

At the same yard one of the players of the Celtic football team came in for very rough treatment. He was knocked down, kicked, and rescued from the crowd in an unconscious state.

At 4 p.m. there was not a Catholic workman in the shipyard.

On the Catholic side feeling runs high. In one of the foundries where a majority of the workmen are Catholics, the Protestants, who up to yesterday had not been interefered with, were made very uncomfortable. After breakfast time bad feeling was noticeable all over the place, and in a few minutes both parties were at each other and some nasty wounds were inflicted with iron bars and other weapons.

A Tory Plot.

New York, Sept. 17.—A London cable says: While the Tory press, which is anti-home rule and pro-Ulster, is now busily informing the Government that the Belfast football game riots of Saturday, when a hundred people were injured, proves that the home rule bill cannot be carried, The London Daily Chronicle, the leading Liberal paper, yesterday morning presented a different side to the story, indicating that the whole trouble was the result of a Tory plot hatched in the shipyards. The correspondent of The Chronicle writes:

"It now transpires the whole affair was organized amongst the members of the Unionist Club in the Belfast shipyards.

"These people came on the scene provided with Orange bannerettes and armed with revolvers, which they began to use the moment the trouble started.

"Long before the game they gave expression to their desire to "kick the Pope." When the Celtic Club banner appeared its bearer was knocked down and brutally kicked. It would have been too much to expect other sympathizers to look quietly on, and soon there were thousands mixed up in the scuffle."

DISTRUSTS N.Y. POLICE

Lawyer Moss Thinks the Officers Who Captured "Gyp" and "Lefty" on Saturday Have Made Away With Incriminating Notes—Commissioner Dougherty Warmly Denies the Insinuations.

New York, Sept. 17.—A secret John Doe investigation of the circumstances surrounding the arrest on Saturday night of "Gyp the Blood" and "Lefty Louie," two of the four gunmen alleged to have slain Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, was begun yesterday before Justice Goff. The purpose, according to Acting District Attorney Moss, is to determine whether the police suppressed or destroyed any evidence, particularly letters, implicating the two gunmen in the murder, and when and how the clues to their whereabouts were secured.

The enquiry began immediately after the two men were arraigned before the justice yesterday to plead to the murder indictments against them. This matter being put over until Wednesday, Justice Goff called successively into his chambers Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty, Sergt. Young, his secretary, and Detectives Yunge, Myers, Cassassa and McKenna, all of whom were members of the police squad that took "Gyp" and "Lefty" into custody. These were all questioned by the justice and Mr. Moss. What they told was not revealed, but it was learned that Commissioner Dougherty turned over to Justice Goff a box containing papers, memoranda and other documents found in the gunmen's flat, which Mr. Moss said last night had furnished the prosecution "some evidence of importance."

Included in this evidence, Mr. Moss said, were clues by which he hoped to establish the identity of the persons who supplied the gunmen with funds to maintain existence. It was reported yesterday, however, that forty letters containing incriminating references to the Rosenthal murder had been found in the flat, and although Deputy Commissioner Dougherty indignantly denied that any such missives had been discovered, Mr. Moss declared last night that he proposed to have the truth or falsity of the report legally established before the justice.

Another matter which, the prosecutor said, was being investigated, was whether the police examined the two gunmen and their wives at any time before the arrival of Mr. Moss at police headquarters Saturday night. In this connection the district attorney has learned that, contrary to the story told by the police that they "burst into" the apartment, there were no signs on the door of the gunmen's flat that force had been used.

The two young wives of the prisoners, held in $2,500 bail as material witnesses, involved themselves in contradictions, Mr. Moss said last night, when he questioned them separately yesterday as to what they knew of the murder. He was convinced, he said, that they could tell more than they had thus far revealed.

Max Kahn, who was also held as a material witness, to-day may face a serious charge, Mr. Moss said further. Kahn was identified in court yesterday by Grese, the waiter, who has made several other important identifications, as having been near the Hotel Metropole at the time of the murder. The prosecutor indicated that he would lay before the grand jury on Thursday, evidence bearing upon Kahn's conduct from the date of the murder to the date of his arrest.

Gunmen Remanded.

New York, Sept. 17.—Harry Horowitz, alias "Gyp the Blood" and "Lefty" Louis Rosenweig, whose arrests on Saturday night completed the round-up of the gunmen indicted for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, were arraigned yesterday morning before Justice Goff in the supreme court.

The gunmen's counsel asked to enter tentative pleas of not guilty, with leave to withdraw, but decided to wait until next Wednesday before pleading. The wives of the prisoners and Max Kahn, the alleged pickpocket, arrested in the flat occupied by the gunmen, were held in $2,500 bail each as material witnesses.

The gunmen were nattily dressed and took a keen interest in the proceedings. They had no statements to make.

GRAND TRUNK SYSTEM NEWS ITEMS

The annual meeting of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway will, when completed connect the Grand Trunk Pacific main line at Fort George with the city of Vancouver will be held at the office of the company in Victoria on Sept. 18th.

125 members of the International Association of Ticket Agents returning from their 17th annual convention arrived in Montreal last evening from Vancouver over the Grand Trunk. After a brief visit in the Canadian metropolis the party the party will make the Saguenay trip via the R. & O. line. While in Muskoka Mr. A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent of the G. T. R. was chosen to make the presentation of a purse of silver to the Association's President, Mr. J. H. Sterling of the Pittsburg and Lake Erie Ry., on the 25th anniversary of his wedding day.

According to a despatch from Edmonton, contracts for the material required in the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific's new $1,503,000 hotel in that place during the coming year, will shortly be awarded by Mr. Ed. Wilmann of the Canadian Stewart Co. of Montreal who has secured tenders from a number of local firms. Tenders from firms in Winnipeg and Toronto have also to be considered. Excavation is expected to commence within the next few days. The specifications call for 12,000 barrels of cement, 6,000 yards of sand, 10,000 yards of gravel and 1,500,000 bricks. The contract for millwork, plumbing, heating and ventilation, roofing, sheet metal work, and iron work, will also be awarded in the near future.

In order to satisfy complaints made by residents of Ferguson Ave. in Hamilton with regard to the noise made by the shunting of engines in the company's yards, the Grand Trunk is now offering to purchase nearly the entire east side of the avenue at twice the assessed value of the land. Furthermore the company will allow any one who sells to remain on the land for one year rent free providing that the tenant assumes the responsibility for paying the tax and water rates. Some 20 properties are involved in the transaction and the offer of the G. T. R. amounts to $69,840; $1,600 being the lowest amount and $8,600 the highest.

Annual meetings of the Canada Atlantic Transit Co. and of the Canada Atlantic Railway Co. will be held in the Central Station of the Grand Trunk at Ottawa on Sept. 24th.

50 tank cars from the American Car and Foundry Co. Milton, Pa. completing an order for 50 cars, dated July 25th, 1912.

This makes a total of 1,1'8 cars recently received in addition to the G. T. R's present equipment.

The following letter has been received by the General Passenger Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway from Mr. A. Pelson who was in charge of the party of Scottish teachers which made a tour of Eastern Canada over the lines of the G. T. R. last month:—"Now that our tour in Canada has been completed it gives us much pleasure to put on record our sense of indebtedness to the Grand Trunk Railway for much of the success which has attended it. While we were making the preliminary arrangements your representatives in Glasgow rendered as valuable aid and made helpful suggestions. At Montreal you skilfully re-adjusted our arrangements to existing circumstances, placing a special car at our disposal for the entire tour. We also found every official all along the line anxious to assist us."

RAID ON THE CHINESE

Toronto Police Make a Wholesale Roundup.

Oriental Liquors and Opium to the Value of Five Thousand Dollars Is Confiscated In Simultaneous Descent Upon Five Establishments and Two Proprietors of Dives Are Placed In Custody.

Toronto, Sept. 17.—When 25 police officials swooped down on five establishments last night the local Chinatown was practically cleaned out of Chinese whisky, wine and other liquor. The police made their greatest raid since the first celestial settled here. All the joints were raided simultaneously, after several of those higher up in the police department had worked on the plan of action for days. Over 100 large cases, containing 50 or more bottles of all sorts of imported liquor, and a few boxes of opium, were seized and taken in patrol wagons to Court street and Agnes street stations. It is estimated that the value of the liquor seized amounts to well over $5,000. Only two arrests were made, both being keepers of the resorts, but other arrests will likely follow.

The raid naturally was entirely unexpected by the Chinamen. In every place it is said that the celestials were found lounging and consuming liquor and some were smoking opium. Inspectors Kennedy of the morality department, Dickson of Court street station, Geddes of Agnes street station, and Staff-Sergt. McKinney engineered the affair. Under their command twenty plainclothesmen guarded the doors and searched for the "booze."

Except for the club, which is the nightly rendezvous for a squad of Chinamen, all the resorts are grocery stores with the "back room" attached. The police have known for some time that liquor was on the premises, which they believed was illegally sold, but took the necessary time in ferreting out the facts. They had little or no difficulty in accomplishing their task. With a man at the front door of each resort and another stationed in the rear, two plainclothesmen, accompanied by an inspector or sergeant, entered and caught the owners and frequenters completely unawares. The liquor in most instances was found in the back rooms or the cellars. In order to prove that they were getting what they sought the contents of a bottle was poured into a cup and a lighted paper was set to the alcohol. If there was a flare up the stuff was seized. Considerable opium was also discovered, in fact, at 156 1-2 and 166 York street four Chinese were caught smoking.

Advises Motor Battleships

LONDON, Sept. 16.—A remarkable article on the coming revolution in the British navy appears in the current number of the Review of Reviews, under the title Damn Your Coaling Stations! founded on the statement of "a most eminent European naval man," who is quoted as saying: "Give me warships burning oil, and damn your coaling stations."

The writer declares that "one of the immediate steps resulting from the royal commission under Lord Fisher will be the purchase and permanent storage in vast well guarded tanks of 1,000,000 tons of oil fuel."

"We may take it as certain," he says, "that the day of coal in the navy has ended, and that the intermediate stage has arrived when oil will be used to raise steam.

"How long we will be before the final stage is reached, when steam disappears and all the vessels are propelled by that most economical of all methods, the internal combustion engine, depends upon the science and invention of the constructors, who must devise a scheme to secure a minimum of 1,000 horsepower per cylinder."

Discussing the enormous saving in stokers by the substitution of oil for coal, the writer proceeds:

"Pending the final experiments, we may assume that the British navy will shortly be burning altogether oil and raising steam without stokers.

"But to adopt this system in the British fleet means to abandon what has always been considered the greatest advantage—the possession of Welsh steam coal. Needs must when the devil drives, and the exigencies of economy of space, of weight, and above all, the difficulty of securing enough men for the fleet, have forced this question on the admiralty.

"The question of the stokehold is of supreme importance. An oil-fired vessel needs thirty greasers, as against three hundred or more stokers and trimmers needed for coal furnaces. This means in the entire British navy a saving of many thousands of men, who will then be available for other branches of the service.

"An oil-burning fleet," continues the writer, "needs never to run to harbor to replenish its supply of fuel. At all points of the seas it can meet tramp oil-carriers; in fact it will be one of the most lucrative of businesses for neutral vessels to hang about with cargoes of oil waiting a good sale chance.

As to which method will be utilized for using oil as fuel, the writer is in favor of the employment of oil in internal combustion engines. "In other words," he says, "there will be motor battleships."

Heredity never fails to work out in the matter of red hair, but it frequently falls down when it comes to brain.

How Champion's Wife was Buried

Chicago, Sept. 16.—Borne to the grave by seven negro friends of her pugilist husband, with negroes occupying the fifty automobiles that made up the funeral procession, and her funeral sermon preached by a negro minister, Etta Duryea Johnson, the white wife of a black man, was buried in Graceland cemetery on Saturday.

After services at Johnson's home, 334 Wabash avenue, the funeral cortege moved between a line of automobiles, parked on either side of the street, to St. Mark's Methodist Episcopal church, where Rev. John W. Robinson conducted the services. Seven thousand people stood outside.

Mrs. David Terry, of Brooklyn, the dead woman's mother, and her sister, Elean, rode in the touring car with "Jack" Johnson, who is on the verge of collapse. A trained nurse stayed with the negro throughout the ceremony.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

JOHN MILTON

In "The Light Eternal."

THE BISPHAM CONCERT

A large and appreciative audience greeted the famous baritone, David Bispham, in the City Hall last evening, made up largely of Belleville's music lovers, among whom were many vocal and instrumental experts, and that all were delighted with the evening's entertainment was evidenced in the hearty encores and frequent recalls.

Despite the mishap to an ankle about a month ago, Mr. Bispham appeared upon the stage limping, yet smiling, and in apologizing for his physical condition, expressed his thankfulness that "it was not the other end that had been broken." A thoroughly pleasing personality possessing one of the most superb voices with which our city has been favored, the singer fully upheld his reputation as America's favorite baritone, each selection being rendered in a manner that carried all with it. In order that his audience might fully appreciate the various numbers, the artist dwelt briefly, in an explanatory way, on the origin of each, thereby materially assisting his hearers in following him intelligently. It was difficult to decide upon a favorite, for the points were so exquisitely brought to the fore in each rendition that the audience was continually expectant as to the next masterpiece.

But the crowning act of the evening was the demonstration of his dramatic powers in Longfellow's "King Robert of Sicily," recited with piano accompaniment, concluding one of the most enjoyable of musical events.

In Mr. Harry Gilbert, Mr. Bispham had an excellent accompanist, whose solo selections, particularly a rendition with the left hand, were of a most pleasing nature, drawing out the jocular expression from the singer that "Gilbert could play as well with one hand as he could sing with one foot." It was indeed an auspicious opening of the series, and those present were amply repaid for their attendance.

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

Local theatre goers should have no trouble in reasoning out for themselves the business motive that brings about the booking of The Light Eternal at the Griffin Opera House for two nights instead of for the usual one-night stand customary with attractions of its size and merit Were the attraction of any but the highest order it would be financial suicide for the management to book it for one performance is in itself a guarantee of merit . The Light Eternal is now in its fifth successful season, the last two of which have been devoted to the plan of booking now in vogue. In several instances towns of from 25,000 to 50,000 have been played two and three engagements of three nights and a matinee each, making in all from eight to twelve performances of the play in these communities within less than two years.

THE ROSE OF KILDARE

Augustus Pitou, Jr., will present Fiske O'Hara in his latest and undoubtedly most successful play "The Rose of Kildare" at Griffin's Opera House, Friday Sept. 20. It is quite needless to say that this play, like all of the others in which Mr. O'Hara has appeared, is of that clean, refined order of dramas with which he has been identified. Nothing suggestive or vulgar is to be found in the lines of situation, and it is a story full of heart interest and fascinating romance. The story opens at an old Inn on the coast of Wicklow, where Lady Moya Fitzpatrick is awaiting with impatience the arrival of her sweetheart, Gerald O'Donnell from France. O'Donnell is one of the young fire-brands of that period and has gone to Farnce to seek aid from Napoleon for the Irish insurgent cause. He is returning with munitions of war and is expecting to land on the coast near Bray, when a terrible storm comes up and the ship is wrecked. Through treachery in the Fitzpatrick household, the coming of the expedition is made known to the English military authorities and a detachment is sent to the coast to intercept it. When Gerald swims ashore he finds the place alive with soldiers but gets smuggled into the Inn by his friend Dan Reardon. Here he finds his sweetheart waiting for him. He tricks the soldiers into bringing him to Ballymara Castle, the home of Lady Moya, the Rose of Kildare. The ruse is discovered and O'Donnell is compelled to fly to the Wicklow Mountains. He is captured and brought back to Ballymarra, now occupied by the troops, where he condemned to death by a courtmatrial. He is about to be led out to execution when it is revealed to the officer in command, Major Grimston that Gerald's arch-enemy, Brian Burke, has the King's proclamation of amnesty in his pocket and does not intend to produce it until O'Donnell is dead. O'Donnell is released. His enemies are routed and he united to his darling Rose of Kildare. In this production Manager Pitou has won the reputation of being one of the foremost producers of the country, as the elaborate stage settings he has provided for "The Rose of Kildare" exceed in beauty and richness anything heretofore seen in plays of this class. He has also selected a company of unusual excellence to support Mr. O'Hara. With the latter's charming songs, sung as he alone can sing them, the music of the play is a delightful feature .

LEILA McINTYRE

In "The Girl of My Dreams," Leila McIntyre introduces herself as possibly the most striking figure of the season. The town used to know her as one of the vaudeville-team of Hyams and McIntyre—her husabnd, (John Hyams) being the co-star with her in this piece—who established themselves so aggreeably in public favor.

Miss McIntyre has discovered something wholly new and fascinating in personalities . Her appearance is something quite unlike anything ever seen before on the stage. She is a pretty, demure little Quakeress in every sense of the word. But a Quakeress who finds time to dance in quite a fascinating manner. It would avail Miss Mc Intyre little if all her "fetch" were looks. She has developed activity so that her lively dancing, her delivery, and her fascinating personality, are in themselves almost sufficient to carry a musical entertainment into popularity, and the theatregoer who misses the "Dr. Tinkle Tinker" song number, doesn't deserve the good things of life. "The Girl of My Dreams" is announced at Griffin's Opera House for tonight.

Plans have been completed by the White Star Dominion Line for four cruises to the West Indies by the "Laurentic" and "Megantic" vessels employed in the summer months in the St. Lawrence trade to Europe. The 'Laurentic' made two such cruises last winter with many prominent Canadians on board who were interested in the reciprocal trade agreements which have since been satisfactorily negotiated with the principal British possessions in these Islands. Recent statistics issued by the Department of Customs show a largely increased exchange in products between the West Indies and ourselves and the opportunity these winter trips offer to become personally acquainted with the West Indies markets while deriving all the benefit of a winter pleasure trip of a most delightful nature, will, it is expected, attract many Canadians to make the trip this year. The itinerary for the cruises includes the Panama Canal also, and as the giant ditch now nearing completion looms large in the news items it will be an added attraction for scores to make the trip. 1t

Rushing the H. B. Railway

Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, has returned to Ottawa from a remarkable journey over the route of the Hudson Bay railway by canoe, and thence home by steamer through the Bay and the Straits. It was the first time that a Minister of the Crown had ever attempted to see, first hand, the great northern country, and to study for himself on the spot the feasibility of the Hudson Bay route. It was an arduous trip, and only a man of the north used to a life in the open, like Mr. Cochrane, could have ever undertaken such a jurney.

The trip from Le Pas to the mouth of the river Nelson was by canoe. At the Nelson Mr. Cochrane was met by the Government steamer, Stanley. He made a thorough inspection of both Port Nelson and Fort Churchill. Mr. Cochrane has returned much impressed with the feasibility of the scheme. "I have great faith in the route," he stated, and has announced, "I will shove the line for all I am worth."

The difference between the attitudes of the two Governments towards the Hudson Bay Railway is striking. During their fifteen years in power the Liberals, before every election, announced that they would rush the Hudson Bay line. The west, however, had to be content with pre-election promises. After the fifteen years all that was done was to start a bridge at Le Pas. Two weeks before the election the railroad was hurriedly let for the first section, but no work was started. Mr. Cochrane found when he had assumed office that the Government was without any authentic information as to the route, the harbor terminals or the length of navigation in the Bay or in the Straits.

Mr. Cochrane despatched engineers overland to the Bay to examine both ports as to which was preferable, while two steamers, the Arctic and the Minto, were sent by water. Expert harbor engineers were also sent north to start work. "Full steam ahead on the Hudson Bay" was Mr. Cochrane's announcement, and he has more than fulfilled his promise. Work was rushed on the first section. The contract was let on the second, and the tenders for the first section to the Bay have been called for, so that by this fall all of the road will be under way and early next spring work on the harbor and terminals will be started, so that by the time the line reaches the Bay docks and elevators will be ready for the steamers to carry the grain of the West to the European markets.

Same Men, Same Old "Adjunct" Policy

Most people, individually and collectively, object to being smitten in the same place twice. There are exceptions, as is the case with every wise and wholesome rule. The notable exception to this particular rule is Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who continues as leader of the Liberal opposition despite his emphatic assurance to the people of Canada a year ago that he would never again lead an opposition. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's lesson, which would be and was fairly instructive to most people, has not been learned by him. He is allowing those of his former lieutenants in whom the people unmistakably showed an utter lack of confidence to reassert themselves in the Liberal party councils.

While Hon. Chas. Murphy and Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux are acting as the immediate advisers of the Liberal leader in Ottawa—with what success may be gathered from the blunders already evident—Hon. Sydney Fisher is becoming mightily busy in Quebec. Mr. Fisher, it will be remembered, was Minister of Agriculture during the long period in which many of the once flourishing and prosperous agricultural industries were allowed to decline, industries which the present head of the department, Hon. Martin Burrell, is already encouraging by vigorous methods. Mr. Fisher was always a persistent volunteer, making up in self-confidence for the lack of confidence in himself and his administration shown by others.

This ex-Minister, who lost not only his portfolio but his seat in the political avalanche of last September, wants to get back. Sir Wilfrid Laurier for some mysterious reason which can hardly be related to the future success of Liberalism in Canada, seems willing to let him try, or unable to keep him off. Mr. Fisher is reported to have bobbed up as a sort of Liberal prophet in Quebec with a good deal to do with the party organization in those parts.

But that is not all. Hon. W. S. Fielding, the one man of all others, who, with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, sought to draw the Dominion of Canada into the "adjunct" agreement with the United States, is said to be another of the forlorn hopes of the party. From Nova Scotia comes a mesage that the ex-Minister of Finance is to be brought back, if a seat can be found for him in Nova Scotia. Those responsible for this stroke seem to despair of success in what was for so many years Mr. Fielding's own riding, and are endeavoring to arrange a shift in another part of the province. The idea is that the ministers who were chiefly responsible for the disaster which overtook the Liberal Government and party in the general elections a year ago are able to restore the party to its former position of power. The reasoning is obscure. The plan is the more difficult to understand in view of the avowed willingness of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his little group, to break away from those marvelous mistakes of policy which brought them down to defeat. The chief reason for the movement to get these men back into the ring at Ottawa is perhaps to be found in the personal feelings of the individuals themselves, rather than in an altruistic regard for the welfare of Liberalism.

The statement of savings by local school children is a most encouraging one. Youth is the time to encourage thrift, and later in life they will bless the means that enabled them to practice the axiom that "a penny saved is a penny gained."—Hamilton Spectator.

The newspapers of New York are commenting on the fact that numbers of mature middle class married women are in the habit of sitting for hours in the afternoons in certain restaurants in the shopping districts of New York and Brooklyn and there consuming highball after highball. So numerous has the class become that the waiters have named them the "highball mammas." Up to a few years ago the women did not drink in public in American cities, the liquor selling places being mostly bars, where women are not wanted by either proprietor or customer.—Montreal Gazette.

The decline of two points in the Department of Labor's index number of wholesale prices for July, after a continuous rise for twelve months, was followed in August by another drop, the index number standing at 133.4 as compared with 131.8 the previous month. Last year, however, at this date it stood at only 127.2. The decline during August was due chiefly to decreases in prices of grains and fodders, fruits and vegetables, with slight increases in dairy products, fish, metals and coal. These index numbers are percentages of the average prices of some 250 articles during the decade 1890-1899.

The Department of Labor's record shows the influence of labor disputes upon industrial conditions during August to have been not so serious as during July, fewer disputes being recorded as in existence. An improvement, too, over July conditions is seen in the fact that of the seventeen disputes which commenced during August a definite termination occurred in the case of eleven. Transportation in different sections was considerably interfered with by strikes; these were, however, of short duration in most cases, and conditions were generally normal towards the end of the month. About 9,500 employees were involved in trade disputes during August.

According to the record of industrial accidents maintained in the Department of Labor that for the month of August showed that 88 workmen were killed and 305 injured, compared with 108 fatal and 272 non-fatal accidents during the month of July; or a decrease of 20 in the number of fatal and an increase of 33 non-fatal accidents compared with the record for July. The largest number of fatalities occurred in the building trades and in the steam railway service, there being 11 workmen killed in the former and 25 in the latter. In the metal trades and steam railway service, the largest number of non-fatal accidents occurred, the record being 65 in the case of the former and 53 in the latter.

Chamberlain Sinking Fast.

New York, Sept. 14.—A cable to The World from London says: After years of almost complete paralysis, Joseph Chamberlain, whose mind has remained alert until now, is sinking fast and the end may come any day.

During the last five weeks he has ceased to take any interest in political events, lying in bed mentally and physically helpless.

Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, while he ceased to be an active figure in politics some years ago because of ill-health, has continued until very recently to follow with close interest the progress of the tariff reform cause of which he is father, and it has been the hope of his friends that he would live to see his visions realized.

SNOW IN MANITOBA.

Three Inches of Rain In Virden and Frost Is Reported Elsewhere.

Winnipeg, Sept. 16.—Some snow and sleet fell in Winnipeg Saturday, and from Arbor, Man., also comes a report of wintry temperatures and snowfalls.

The weather over the prairie provinces has been much cooler, but no frost is reported except in Northern Alberta, where the lowest temperature was 25 degrees. Very heavy rains have fallen generally in Manitoba, some in Eastern Saskatchewan, and lighter and more scattered rains in other parts of Saskatchewan. There has been no rain in Alberta.

The official report says that 3.40 inches of rain fell in Virden during Friday and Saturday. Portage Plains had a fall of 2.45 inches and Boissevan reports 1.57 inches. Winnipeg only had 1.30 inches, but out in St. James the fields were so sodden that the roads yesterday morning were under water on the flat for two or three blocks.

No rain fell yesterday, but the sky was overcast and extremely cold. A slight frost was experienced at some points in the immediate vicinity of Winnipeg Saturday night, with no damage reported.

H.M.S. Audacious Launched.

Birkenhead, Eng., Sept. 15—The new battleship Audacious, one of the King George V. class, was launched here on Saturday. The warship already has been 18 months in building, the delay in her construction being caused by labor troubles which have seriously affected all British naval construction.

Many improvements have been introduced in the Audacious, the details of which, however, have been withheld by the Admiralty.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by
CHARLES T. RUSSELL
Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

ONLY ONE TRUE GOSPEL OF CHRIST

Perversions of God's Word—True Message Buried Under Human Tradition.

Providence, R.I., Sept. 15.—We report one of Pastor Russell's discourses to-day from the text, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from Him that called you into the Grace of Christ unto another Gospel, which is not another; but there be some that trouble you and that would pervert the Gospel of Christ; * * * let him be accursed."—Galatians i, 6-8.

When we remember that there is but the one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, presented in the Bible we are astounded to find so many faiths, so many "Gospels," presented by so many denominations, all bearing the name of Christ and all bearing marks of some relationship to the Truth—to the Divine Revelation.

St. Paul noted the fact that even in his day the brethren in Galatia had "so soon" turned away, in part at least, from the true Message to another, a perversion. No wonder, then, if during fifteen centuries that Gospel was almost buried under human tradition. And need we wonder that we make such slow progress since in getting back to "the faith once delivered to the saints," the Truth that Jesus declared to be the sanctifying power of God working in His people?

It will not do to say that we have many denominations, but only one Gospel. Denominations were not organized for amusement, but because the founders of each believed that they saw a sufficient reason, a sufficient difference of Gospel, to justify them in forming a new sect. We are bound to admire their zeal for the Truth, which led them often through severe persecutions and through martyrdom towards the Light.

All the same each of us owes the duty to himself, to his brethren, and above all, to the Lord, to search carefully for the original Gospel of the Word of God—no matter what it may cost him to reject the more or less false Gospels handed down by well-meaning brethren of the past.

The new Gospel which the Galatians were disposed to accept was one that is very prevalent to-day, and is as much to be reprehended to-day as when St. Paul wrote. Their new Gospel consisted of a mixing of the Jewish Law with the Grace of God in Christ, as the Apostle shows. They said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, surely; He is the Saviour, He is the Redeemer; we must believe on Him, but that is not enough. We must become Jews under their Law arrangement, and between the Law and Christ we will obtain salvation. Many Christians to-day are making the same mistake by adding something to the Gospel of Christ. They hunger for some command, and desire to be under a Law, as a dog used to wearing a collar and chain feels not himself unless thus restrained.

Such dear Christian people, like the Galatians, do not fully appreciate the Master's statement, "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Such feel lost without Divine commands—Thou shalt, Thou shalt not, etc.—and rejoice specially in holy days and Sabbaths, Church going and formal prayers, because they do not understand that God is better pleased to have us sons than to have us slaves. The poet got the thought correctly when he wrote,

"We can no longer lie
Like slaves beneath the Throne,
Our souls now 'Abba, Father,' cry,
And He the kindred owns."

A measure of bondage to forms, ceremonies and commands is probably reasonable to expect in immature Christians, whom St. Paul styles "babes in Christ." (I. Corinthians iii, 1.) But growth in grace and knowledge must bring such more nearly to the stature of manhood in Christ and to an appreciation of their relationship to God as sons, else they will not make their calling and election sure to the best things that God has provided.

From the most prominent pulpits of Christendom the Gospel of Christ respecting the forgiveness of individual sin, the reconciliation of the individual heart, the individual begetting of the Holy Spirit, and the personal walk in newness of life has been discarded. Long ago this Message was considered too personal. Many of the preachers, having had no such experience themselves, properly enough were chary of talking about what they did not understand. But salaries must go on. Sermons, therefore, must be preached, and something must be said. The Social Gospel has been brought forward to fill the gap. The message of the hour, according to this pseudo-Gospel, is not saintliness, not following in the footsteps of Jesus, not Bible study, but athletics, manliness, position in society, attention to political duties, attainment of honorable positions in the world, and great names which will make the Church register shine—and money withal.

Far be it from me to teach inattention to the duties and responsibilities of life. Nothing in the words of Jesus or the Apostles admonishes or exemplifies carelessness in respect to health, manhood, womanhood, education, good name and a proper provision of the things needful to the present life. The Gospel of Jesus and the Apostles, however, tells us—most distinctly impresses upon all the followers of Jesus—that their consecration as disciples of Jesus means their death to worldly ambitions for wealth, praise of men, political office and the giving of chief concern to the preservation of their earthly lives. It exhorts that these are all to be considered quite secondary to the new embitions, the new ideals, set before us in the Gospel.

The followers of Jesus are enjoined to do good unto all men as they have opportunity. This would include, of course, everything akin to social uplift. Indeed, we cannot imagine that any one could be a Christian—a follower of the Lamb of God—without having a deep sympathy with everything appertaining to the welfare of humanity and a social uplift. But the Apostle's expression, "as we have opportunity," is a limitation. The mission of the Christian is not social uplift. That is not the work to which the Lord Jesus and His followers dedicated their lives—at least not the kind of social uplift generally understood.

The whole work of God in connection with human Redemption is to be an uplifting work for Adam and his entire race. The uplift which God has planned and which He has revealed in the Bible is to be a most thorough one, such as humanity has never conceived. It is to be an uplift mentally, morally, and physically—back to the image and likeness of God—lost in Eden, redeemed at Calvary. This social uplift of mankind which God is interested in, and of which God is the Center and Fulcrum, is the line in which all the followers of Jesus, rightly instructed, are more interested than any other people in the whole world.

However, the followers of Jesus are soldiers of the cross under His Captaincy, and they are not at liberty to follow theories either of their own or of other men respecting the way in which the great work of uplifting the world is to be accomplished. They are deeply interested in everything which men and women can do for the betterment of humanity in any and every sense of the word. And, as they have opportunity, they are glad to give a word of encouragement and appreciation, or occasionally a helping hand. But theirs is a far more important work. They are co-laborers with God—not with men.

God's Plan is first to select the Church, the Body of Christ, to be His joint-heirs in the glorious Messianic Kingdom. Then He will use that Kingdom for the thorough and complete social uplift, which all agree is so necessary. The world sees not the Divine Plan, and even the Message of the Grace of God is foolishness to them; hence also the world may probably think of Jesus and His followers as chimerical. Their theory, God's testimony, is foolishness to the world—and those who follow the Divine arrangement, as St. Paul says, are counted fools all the day long—because they are spending their lives for the accomplishment of things which the world cannot see, understand, appreciate—"the deep things of God." (I. Corinthians ii, 10.)

The Gospel of form and ceremony is not always hypocrisy. If reverential forms and chants and printed prayers always came from the heart and were never merely forms, there would be much in them to approve and enjoy. Still, ceremonies are no part of the Gospel of Christ, and to put them instead of it is to make of them false Gospel. Who will say that either Christ or any of the Apostles presented a Gospel of forms and ceremonies?

The human heart is deceitful above all things, say the Scriptures. It likes to delve into worldliness and frivolity and sometimes into sin, and then to deceive itself into believing that it is the Elect of God and a special subject of His care and sure of heavenly glory. Many such appear to know nothing whatever respecting the Gospel of Christ. Theirs is a Gospel of good works, donations to hospitals, to social uplift and Church work and forms and ceremonies. They feel a burden roll away when they repeat weekly the phrase, "We have done those things which we ought not to have done, and have left undone the things which we ought to have done, and there is no health in us. Be merciful to us miserable sinners."

But any suggestion that these are miserable sinners and need to know the way of the Lord more perfectly, and to become justified saints if they would be heirs of God, they would resent. The Gospel of formalism has done great injury to such people, many of whom, rightly informed respecting the Gospel of Christ, might be greatly blessed, sanctified, and made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.

As an illustration of the religious stupor produced by the Gospel of formalism and ceremony, let me tell you of a gentleman of prominence in London whom I met recently. He said, "I was out to hear you last Sunday. I was one of that audience of thousands, and I want to tell you that you disturbed me greatly. I did not come away from your meeting happy and contented, but the reverse. I was disappointed. Why, the way you presented the matter, showing the terms and conditions of discipleship in the narrow way, and cross-bearing in the footsteps of Jesus, shocked me. I said to myself, Then I am not a Christian at all. I have not even taken the first steps in the Christian way. But when I went home my good mother-in-law said: 'Do not be alarmed at all—stick to your own religion.'"

The Gospel of Christ was waking that man up out of his lethargy of formalism. I told him that I sought to do my duty in presenting the Gospel of Christ in no uncertain terms and that if he should profit by my message and become a joint-heir with Jesus in His Messianic Kingdom as a result of being waked up, he would thank me for it to all eternity.

Of all the various things substituted for the Gospel of Christ the most awful perversions are the Gospels of Purgatory and eternal torture. Yet so perverted is the human sensibility to the Truth that if one said he "heard a real Gospel sermon," the majority would understand it to mean that he heard horrible misrepresentations of the Divine character and purpose to the effect that nearly everybody—all except the saintly—are en route for torture at the hands of demons, and that the saintly few are to get to heaven and to all eternity look over its battlements at their brethren and sisters in torture and to all eternity to hear their wails of distress.

How terrible the perversion which could call such stuff "good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people!" I am glad that the Bible Students, recently in Convention, repudiated such a Gospel as being the one of the Bible. I was glad that they called upon the ministers every-

PERFECT BISCUIT BAKING NEED NOT BE DIFFICULT

It all depends on the heat your oven gives.

Ranges with slow ovens are all right for some kinds of biscuits. But an oven that is chronically slow simply ruins others, and it is useless for many purposes.

Other stoves bake beautifully on one side and not on the other. So you can never depend on them.

"Happy Thought" Ranges are perfect bakers.

If you want a slow oven, a slow fire will produce the desired result. If you want a very hot, quick oven, just build up the fire and keep it going strong for a little while.

This feature saves you money in two ways:

It saves fuel by making it unnecessary to use too much, and by giving you the full heat value of every ounce of fuel.

The easiest, safest, quickest and most economical way to move pianos and heavy furniture is—with a freight elevator.

FINELY finished pianos or furniture require extremely careful handling. When they don't get it, there is a constant expense for repairs and refinishing.

Besides—heavy goods entail an endless labor expense, if they have to be handled up and down stairways. The cost of the labor required to shift them a few times makes a large hole in the profits.

Stop this endless drain.

The same work can be done with fewer men, in less time, and without even the risk of damage to the goods. It also enables you to carry any kind of stock on any floor and to get it just as easily as if it were all on the same floor. Our book, "Freight Elevators and Their Uses," gives an interesting outline of the many uses and advantages of a freight elevator. It is free. Ask for one. Use this coupon.

THE RING

WHEN SMITH GOT SATISFACTION.

Mysterious Billy Smith, who stopped a bullet out in Portland not so long ago, was one of the few professional fighters who liked to fight outside as well as in the ring. Smith never dodged the approach of trouble, but ran in to meet it with open arms and a welcoming smile. He loved to fight; when he was in a ring, it was a scrap and not a friendly boxing match, and when he was outside the rope arena a chip two feet long was ever upon his shoulder.

One night, long long ago, the Mysterious one was matched to meet one Billy Stift, a sawed-off, hammered-down, hard-walloping sort of a fighter, and good old George Siler was put in as referee. The battle proved to be one of the kind a crowd delights to see, with frantic biffs exchanged ad libitum, but it was only in its middle stages when the furious Mr. Smith, seeing Mr. Stift kneeling while taking a short count, rushed in and swatted him abaft his brow. Mr. Siler, of course, gave Stift the decision on a foul, and an inroad of large, thick cops prevented further trouble.

The Mysterious One was peeved. He grew more peevish as the night progressed, and, about half an hour after the show was over, declared his intention of going forth for satisfaction. He wasn't going to return to his hotel until he got it, either, and, judging by the remaining history of that night, he got it in large quantities.

Turning into a cafe to tell his troubles and express his purposes, Mr. Smith was both surprised and delighted to encounter George Siler sociably chatting with about a dozen friends. With a whoop and a roar Mr. Smith hurtled down towards the old referee. "You robbing old horse thief," cried Mr. Smith, "You're too old for me to lick, but I'm going to spat your face and rip your necktie!" And just then somebody, leaning over from somewhere, caromed a heavy beer mug on the chaste countenance of Mr. Smith, and he knew no more. When he woke up everybody had gone, and he was all alone.

Mr. Smith marched out into the cool night air, madder than ever. He betook himself to another cafe, and there large as life and twice as happy, stood Mr. Stift, yodeling Alpine songs with some German friends.

"You——," screeched Mr. Smith "this is one place where no fake referee can save you! Now we'll see who's the better man!" Mr. Smith's idea was alright, but the execution was inferior, mainly because Mr. Stift was the sweetest bar-room fighter of that generation. When the saw-dust had settled back, and the remains had been swept out in the alley, Mr. Smith arose from an ash-heap, somewhat annoyed, and went on in vague, unsatisfied fashion. Turning into still another saloon, the battered knight espied a large, dressy man, downing a cocktail and so thought Mr. Smith, the dressy man laughed at him.

But the large man already had his punch started, and Mr. Smith's wallop clove up only the yielding atmosphere. Mr. Smith lay upon the floor and the large man trampled on him, up and down his system, thoroughly and artistically. The large man, who was Alderman McCarthy of the Chicago stockyards, famed as able to lick anything weighing under 400 pounds, then bought a cigar and went hence, while Mr. Smith slowly revived, arose and departed to his hotel.

"Did you get satisfaction?" asked a friend, as Mr. Smith limped into the room. "Well, not exactly," admitted Mr. Smith. "Not exactly; but I sure did get a lot of physical culture and it didn't cost a nickel."

FANS NOW WORSHIP BIG JEFF TFSREAU

New York, Sept. 13.—The New York National League fans have a new idol. Rube Marquard is no longer the man of the hour. The new hero is Jeff Tesreau, the man who saved the pennant for McGraw's club. Tesreau entered the big league this spring unschooled in its ways and faced the hard sledding of any young pitcher his first season out.

But he has all the essentials of a great twirler—the temperament, the physique and the stuff. Nothing bothers Tesreau. His nerves are of steel and he is built like a suspension bridge.

His feat of pitching two games in three days against the Phillies and winning both, shutting out his opponents in the latter without a hit, was a wonderful performance.

Together with Mathewson he saved the flag for the Giants this year, and McGraw predicts a great future for him. He is a pitcher of the Amos Rusie type, without any of Rusie's eccentricities, and he pays as little attention to flattery as he does to abuse.

The Big Town does not bother him, and he has not had to increase the size of his hat since he started pitching great ball—both good signs.

Tesreau and Mathewson will have to bear the burden of the pitching in the world's series. Little can be counted on from the others, unless Marquard suddenly regains his early season form. It is hard to say just what is the matter with the big Rube, but association with him makes one certain that he broods over his defeats and worries about his decreasing popularity. Marquard will have to come fast to spring the thrills in the title series with the Red Sox next month.

POLO PONIES SELL AT $1650 A HEAD

New York, Sept. 13.—The announcement that Mr. E. S. Reynal had commissioned Van Tassell and Kearney to sell his stud of polo ponies by auction last night drew a notable company of polo players and horsemen to the Thirteenth street market. The consignment, like the crowd, was not so large, as it was select, comprising only five ponies that Mr. Reynal has been playing this season at Newport, Narragansett and Meadow Brook.

Breaking all records of recent years the ponies realized $8150, an average of $1630. August Belmont bought the first three in the catalogue, paying $2100 for Greyhound, $2300 for the bay gelding Wade and $2100 for the chestnut gelding The Critic. All of these ponies are well known among polo players all over the United States.

Goodfrey Preece, a dealer, bought a chestnut gelding Pollock for $1100, and J. E. Davis, M. F. H. of the Meadow Brook Hunt, bought Beacon for $550. This one showed signs of wear, hence the lower price. Mr. Reynal himself showed all the ponies under saddle.

RAND TRUNK SYSTEM NEWS ITEMS

WED. SEPT. 11th, 1912.

The Union Terminals company at Winnipeg has just completed the first dock track that has ever been constructed in the prairie provinces. The new track has been built for the Lake Winnipeg Shipping Co., and the work marks a distinct departure in the history of western transportation. Business men of Winnipeg believe that it will not be long before many such tracks will be necessary for the works of various land and water freight enterprises connecting that city and places north and south. Work is also being rushed on the new double track bridge of the Union Terminals Co., which will connect its yards with Norwood, and will be, when completed, among the most modern in the city. New side tracks are being rushed, and with the completion of a grain freight cut-off the management anticipates great relief of the congestion that temporarily occurs in even so modern an equipment.

Reports received with regard to the progress of harvesting in a number of representative districts on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific show that an average of over 50 per cent. of the grain has already been harvested. These reports are as follows:—

FORTIER, Man.—About 100 per cent. of wheat in stock; 90 per cent. barley; 10 per cent. flax. Have lost little time through rain. No frost reported. Warm weather has started early cut grain to sprout. Threshing was to have started to-day at five different farms but heavy rain last night will delay it for a week. Twine in abundance also labor. Will have largest yield per acre ever reported in district.

RIVERS, Man.—About 50 per cent wheat cut, oats, barley, and flax none cut. Too much rain, harvesting held up. No frost. Ground all right for binders, rain every day. No grain sprouted in stook. No threshing. Plenty twine. Labor short.

JUSTICE, Man.—Fully 60 per cent of the wheat cut and 10 per cent. of oats, but no barley or flax. Have had no frost and local showers have retarded cutting only while they lasted. No sign of sprouted grain in stook. No threshing being done. Have sufficient binder twine and harvest help.

WALDRON, Sask.—About 70 per cent. of wheat, 25 per cent. of oats, 50 per cent. of barley and 10 per cent. of flax cut in this district. Weather very wet and unfavorable since last report. Ground here not too soft for binders. No cut grain sprouted in stook at present. No threshing done yet. Plenty of binder twine, but could use a few more harvesters.

MELVILLE, Sask.—Despite unfavorable weather there is about 50 per cent. of wheat cut, 10 or oats, no flax reported cut. Since last report raining every day but not heavy. Temperature keeps around 50 to 60 degrees above zero. No damage from frost. Ground too soft for binders. No threshing done yet. Binder twine supply sufficient, but labor extremely scarce.

PUNNICHY, Sask.—About 40 per cent. of wheat, 70 per cent. of barley and 20 per cent. of oats and flax cut in this district. Too much rain since last report but no actual damage. No grain sprouting in stook. Very slight frost one night. Ground hard enough for binders to work in practically all our territory. Threshing not commenced. Abundance of twine and labor.

SEMANS, Sask.—It is estimated that 60 per cent of wheat is cut, little oats and no flax. Continual rains have fallen and the weather is still very unsettled and fine weather is badly needed. No damage has occurred from frost. The ground is getting soft now and the binders have difficulty in getting through thick crop. Very little grain has sprouted as the weather has been cool. No threshing has been done as yet. There is a plentiful supply of labor and no scarcity of binder twine. Unless the weather clears at once a promising crop is going to be badly damaged.

WATROUS, Sask.—Crops cut average as follows: 60 per cent. wheat, 50 per cent. oats; 100 per cent. barley, 25 per cent. flax. There has been too much rain but no frost. Ground soft for binders working. No sprouting in stook yet. No threshing to date. Labor supply slightly short. Raining heavey to-day; no work.

BRADWELL, Sask.—About 75 per cent. of wheat cut, 25 per cent. of oats, but practically no flax. Too much rain and cloudy weather but no frost. The heavy ground is soft and cutting on heavy summer fallow is difficult. No grain has sprouted. There is sufficient supply of laborers and plenty of twine.

ASQUITH, Sask.—Harvesting is at a standstill owing to very wet weather. The following percentage of grain is cut. Wheat 90, oats 50 barley 75, flax 10. Since last report we have had rain every other day but no frost. Binders have not had much difficulty unless in summer fallow. Several reported of grain sprouting in stook. No threshing done yet but several outfits getting ready and will not be long if weather would get fine. Lots of binder twine and farm help.

KINLEY, Sask.—Harvesting well on way, 755 of wheat cut, 30 of oats, all barley and a small percentage of flax. Considerable rain since last report causing delay. One or two reports of very light frost. Ground in good condition for binder. No reports of grain growing in stook. No threshing done yet. Plenty of twine and also sufficient farm labor.

BIGGAR, Sask.—About 75 per cent. of wheat cut in this district, 50 per cent. oats, barley practically all cut, flax about 25 per cent. in stook. While we have had too much rain for harvesting, the ground is not too soft for binders to run. There has been no damage done by frost to date. No grain sprouting in stook. No threshing done yet. Any amount of twine to be had, but labor very scarce.

UNITY, Sask.—About 25 per cent. of wheat cut, practically no oats, barley and flax cut. Cutting has been delayed by rain; weather is very cold. No frost experienced. No grain sprouted in stook. Plenty of binder twine. Labor supply fair; some more men wanted.

CHANVIN, Alta.—Wheat 60 per cent. cut, barley 40, oats 35, flax 60. Far too much rain recently and weather very cool. Slight frost but no damage. Work being held up by excessive rain. No threshing done yet. Plenty of binder twine and no shortage of labor reported.

WAINWRIGHT, Alta.—About 50 per cent. of wheat is cut, 25 of oats, all barley and 10 per cent. of flax. It has rained almost daily for the past month, delaying harvesting operations. Two degrees of frost, the lowest record this fall. Farmers have not reported any grain sprouted or soft ground. No threshing done. Twine condition relieved. Laborers scarce.

IRMA, Alta.—Cutting has been delayed to a considerable extent in this district because of too much rain, about 5 per cent. of wheat, 25 per cent of barley, and 10 per cent. of oats cut, flax none cut yet. Ground not to soft. No sprouted grain. No frost to hurt grain. No threshing done. Binder twine and labor scarce.

VIKING, Alta.—About 5 per cent. wheat, very small percentage of oats and practically all barley cut, no flax cut as yet. Has rained pretty nearly incessantly since last report. There has been no frost at all. Generally speaking the ground is too soft for binders. No cut grain sprouted in stook. There has been no threshing done. Supply of binder twine ample now owing to delay in harvest caused by rains. Labor will be scarce when harvest is in full swing.

TOFIELD, Alta.—25 per cent. wheat, 15 per cent. barley and oats cut, no flax grown. Have rain nearly every day for two weeks, very heavy last night. Ground too soft for cutting. Two degrees of frost last week. No labor or twine shortage.

The first grand prize for salmon trout in the $2,000 fishing contest, organized this summer by "Field & Stream," a New York publication has been awarded to Mr. George W. Collier of Bordentown, N. Y., for a fish caught at Lake of Two Rivers in Algonquin National Park on Sunday July 16th. After a terrific battle lasting nearly an hour Mr. Collier succeeded in landing his salmon trout which proved to be 12 pounds in weight, 30 1-2 inches in length and 18 inches in girth. On one afternoon during the same trip Mr. Collier and two friends caught 11 trout that weighed together 35 pounds. Such a record is only one more proof of the unequalled opportunities for sport to be met with in Algonquin Park.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

TO DIE ALONE.

Nogi Evidently Did Not Plan Wife's Suicide.

Tokio, Sept. 17.—The will of Gen. Count Maresuke Nogi, who, with his wife, the Countess Nogi, with the purpose of demonstrating their devotion to their departed sovereign Mutsuhito, committed suicide, was read yesterday.

The Japanese warrior says that he follows the Emperor because his services are no longer required in this world. He had often sought to die, he adds.

The document bears the date of the night of Sept. 12, twenty-four hours previous to the taking of his life, and it indicates that the death of the countess had not then been decided upon. Nogi distributes his property among his wife and friends, and makes donations to a number of public institutions. He says that while his wife lives the house of Nogi may be maintained, but that after her death the line will be extinguished.

The Port Arthur hero suggested that his body be given to a medical college, requesting that only his teeth, hair and nails be buried in the grave.

Peace Soon Says Envoys.

Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 17.—Reports of a rupture in the Italo-Turkish peace negotiations are unfounded. On the contrary, unexpected good progress has been made towards an arrangement for peace. Several points which at first appeared irreconcilable have been settled and after yesterday's meeting at Ouchy, a village on the Lake of Geneva, the delegates at the conference appeared to be most hopeful of reaching a settlement.

Paris, Sept. 17.—The terms for peace between Italy and Turkey have been practically arranged, with the exception of a proposed loan to Turkey of between 500,000,000 and 600,000,000 francs, concerning which Italy is now communicating with English, French and Belgian financiers, according to a telegram received yesterday by The Paris Temps from Rene Puaux, one of its editors at Geneva.

Wheat Exceed Flour Rates.

Buffalo, Sept. 17.—That the trunk lines are charging a higher rate for the shipment of wheat than for flour is the substance of a complaint under investigation here yesterday by Special Examiner Mackley, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Eighteen railroads are defendants in the dispute and the complaining corporation is the Federal Milling Co. of Lockport, N.Y. The specific charge alleges discrimination in favor of the flour manufacturers of Minneapolis and other millers in the northwest.

The railroad rate on wheat from western points to Chicago is nearly two cents higher per hundred pounds than the rate on flour. Inasmuch as wheat is grown west of Chicago, the eastern corporations claim discrimination in favor of the western flour manufacturers.

Edward Kidd, M.P., Dead.

Ottawa, Sept. 17.—The death yesterday morning at North Gower of Edward Kidd, M.P. for Carleton, causes the first break by death in the ranks of the Parliament elected a year ago. Mr. Kidd was stricken with paralysis several weeks ago. He was born on Sept. 9, 1849, in Grenville County, of Irish parentage, and followed the pursuit of agriculture from youth, being latterly in the chees industry. He was returned to Parliament in 1900 and 1904, but resigned in favor of Premier Borden, then leader of the Opposition. Mr. Borden was elected for both Carleton and Halifax in 1908, and chose to set for the latter, and at the bye-election in Carleton Mr. Kidd was again chosen and re-elected in 1911. He was a member of the Church of England and was unmarried.

Rabies at Brantford.

Brantford, Sept. 17.—A case of rabies has been discovered here. After a dog had inflicted a severe wound on a little girl, Doris Maddis, of William street, an analysis was made of the animal's head and hydrophobia was found.

The little one is being sent to Toronto for pasteur treatment.

Sentenced on Two Charges.

Brockville, Sept. 17.—Roy Gibson, convicted before Judge McDonald for an indecent assault upon Mrs. Walter near Gananoque, and also of the theft of certain parts of a motorboat engine, was yesterday sentenced to one year and nine months in the Central Prison, the terms to run concurrently.

Tribesmen Fight Turks.

Cettinje, Montenegro, Sept. 17.—Severe fighting occurred Sunday between the Malissori tribesmen and Turkish troops on the Montenegrin frontier. Shells from the Turkish battery landed on Montenegrin territory, and the Montenegrin Government has lodged a protest with the Turkish legation here.

To Carry Out Pact.

London, Sept. 17.—A Pekin despatch to The Daily Mail says that at a secret sitting of the National Assembly yesterday the acting Premier, Chao Ping Chuh, alluding to Mongolia, said that under present conditions China was powerless and must settle the question as best she could without forfeiting her territorial rights.

With reference to Thibet the acting Premier said that China must negotiate a settlement with Great Britain according to the treaties made by the late administration.

Dealing with the financial situation he said that China was hard pressed and must resort to foreign loans, as internal loans were impracticable.

The War Minister declared that China could pacify Mongolia with assistance, but in the event of relations with a foreign power becoming strained the forces which China would be able to employ were insufficient and she would be obliged to surrender part of her rights.

Bryan on Roosevelt.

Denver, Colo., Sept. 17.—One term for President and the necessity of selecting Governor Woodrow Wilson for that office in November was the central thought of campaign addresses delivered yesterday by William J. Bryan in his tour of Northern Colorado.

At Fort Collins he emphasized this point, and scored Col. Roosevelt for asking a third term.

"Roosevelt is an eleventh hour convert to Progressive principles," said Mr. Bryan, "and should not be trusted until he has proven his sincerity."

He said that Col. Roosevelt never had fought the people's battles, but had opposed the Progressives, both Republican and Democratic in Congress. He charged that the Roosevelt campaign is being financed by the trusts.

Lineman Electrocuted.

Brantford, Sept. 17.—Herbert Roberts, lineman of the telephone company, was electrocuted here yesterday in mid-air in the presence of several spectators on Dufferin avenue. He was suspended by his belt from a telephone wire, which sagged, putting him in contact with another wire, across which an electric light wire carrying 2,200 volts, had fallen some distance down the street.

Fellow employes hastily secured a rope and lowered his body. Doctors worked over the victim for an hour without avail.

Coroner Ashton has ordered an inquest.

Archbold to Appear Again.

Washington, Sept. 17.—John D. Archbold, George W. Perkins and Col. Roosevelt are to be asked by the Senate committee investigating campaign contributions to produce any communications they may have pertaining to "financial transactions" between the first two men and members of Congress or between them and Mr. Roosevelt when he was President.

Investigation of this phase of the campaign contribution question was authorized by the La Follette-Penrose resolution just before Congress adjourned.

RAIN AT VIENNA.

Great Eucharistic Procession Is Badly Marred.

Vienna, Sept. 16.—The brilliancy of the great procession concluding the 23rd Eucharistic Congress was greatly marred yesterday by a heavy rainstorm. Rain fell continuously, drenching many thousands in the procession as well as thousands of spectators along the route.

Parts of the parade showed little but the lines of umbrellas, beneath which tramped Catholic societies, clergy, venerable bishops in full canonicals, and others through mud, ankle deep, and under such conditions that it was impossible to hold the celebration of mass in the open air on the top of the Burgtor court as was intended.

The miners from the Tyrol in quaint costume headed the procession. Then came the various Catholics societies and the representatives from foreign countries in national groups.

The second division was composed of the clergy and bishops and civil authorities to the number of 10,000. It was headed by the seminaries, and these were followed by politicians. The clergy, to the number of 80,000, were in full vestments.

The court division, a mile and a quarter in length, formed the last part of the procession.

Following these dignitaries came the archdukes in state coaches and last of all the Emperor. Behind the monarch rode the most striking figure in the whole procession, the papal legate, Cardinal Van Rossum, bearing the host.

Wants to Join U. S.?

London, Sept. 16.—Jamaica's probable future as a dependency of the United States has a prominent position in The Morning Post. A gentleman who is closely connected with Jamaica says that so far as the sentimental side is concerned, it is unfortunately true that the younger generation of whites and educated negroes believe that the prosperity of the island lies in the direction of a commercial union with the United States.

Even political union they regard with complacency unless Great Britain adopts a policy of colonial preference and thereby assists the West Indies. The increasing production of sugar, coffee, cocoa, etc., offers no alternative to the ever-increasing cry for association with the United States, either by reciprocity or by a political union, or at least closer connection with Canada.

An additional impetus to the movement toward the United States may arise upon the completion of the Panama Canal. Old West Indian planters say that the growth of feeling in Jamaica in favor of America is only natural, but that a preferential treatment would restore the allegiance of Jamaica to Great Britain.

Alaskan Railway Sold.

Juneau, Alaska, Sept. 16.—It is reported here that the White Pass & Yukon Railway, which operates between Skagway and White Horse, Yukon Territory, 14 miles, has been sold to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway system, and the actual transfer will take place January 1 1913. The deal is said to have been negotiated by W. B. Close of Chicago, who is now in the north.

The Grand Trunk Pacific has always declared its purpose to build a branch from the transcontinental main line north to White Horse and Dawson.

Found Ten Skeletons.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Sept. 17.—Workmen unearthed ten skeletons while working in Middle street, Youngstown, opposite Old Niagara. It is believed they were soldiers killed in the war of 1812 or one of the earlier wars. No buttons were found with the bones, however.

Russia Wants New Treaty.

Washington, Sept. 17.—State Department officials are noting with satisfaction the launching of a movement in Russia, under Government auspices, to arrange for a new treaty of trade and commerce between Russia and the United States.

Although only three and a half months intervene before the expiration of the existing pact, there has been absolutely no progress during the past three months in the negotiations for a new treaty.

Forget to Make Peace.

Ottawa, Sept. 17.—There is a report up from Montreal that Hon. L. P. Pelletier is to meet Sir Rodolphe Forget to-day, and that an offer is to be made to patch up the difficulties besetting the Conservative party in their Quebec district.

It appears that Senator Landry also declined to attend the banquet at Levis, replying that in view of the charges he made at the dinner given to the Hon. F. D. Monk at the Garrison Club a few weeks ago, he could not see his way clear to be present. The Senator specified his accusations against Hon. Mr. Pelletier and asked that a committee be appointed, alleging that if the charges were not proven he might be classed as a prevaricator all the rest of his life. A copy of the document was also sent Premier Borden.

Martial Law Suspended.

Constantinople, Sept. 17.—The Council of Ministers yesterday adopted several important measures. The first related to the suspension of martial law in Constantinople; the second to the extension of the Albanian concessions to all other parts of the Empire, and the third to the engagement of English advisers for the departments of public safety, police, posts and telegraphs and statistics. It is understood that advisers of other nationalities are to be engaged for other departments.

Tornado Ruins Obstruct Roads.

Syracuse, N.Y., Sept. 17.—Scores of farmers, their residences and barns destroyed and crops ruined, the result of Sunday's tornado, early yesterday started their task of reconstruction, aided by hundreds of willing hands.

At night fall they had made but little headway, the ten-mile strip in the township of Salina devastated by the storm presenting a scene of chaos.

MONTREAL, Sept. 16.—A fair amount of business was worked over the cable in Manitoba spring wheat, owing to the fact that cables were stronger at an advance of 1½c. CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Sept. 16.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Sept. 14 were 1600 cattle, 3650 sheep and lambs, 2800 hogs and 600 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale consisted of 1100 cattle, 2700 sheep and lambs, 1150 hogs and 350 calves.

There was very little change in the condition of the market for cattle as compared with a week ago. The supply of common and medium stock was larger, but there continues to be a scarcity of good to choice steers, for which there is considerable enquiry. There was an increased demand for lower grades, owing to the scarcity of better lots. The demand was rather slow early in the day, as buyers expected that drovers would have to accept lower figures, but the latter were firm in their views, and when butchers and packers were convinced that no important change was going to be made, the trade steadily improved, and by noon few were left unsold. A few full loads of good eastern steers sold at $6.25 to $6.50, and odd lots of choice cows brought as high as $5.50 to $5.75 per 100 pounds. There have been no northwestern ranch cattle on the market for the past two weeks, owing to the fact that present prices ruling here will not permit of them being shipped to sell at a profit.

Owing to the continued heavy demand for lambs in this market from all sources of late, a stronger feeling has developed in the market, and prices have advanced 25c to 50c per 100 pounds. The supply was fairly large today, for which the demand was active from butchers and packers, and sales of Quebec stock were made at $5.50 to $5.75, and Ontario at $6.25 to $6.50 per 100 pounds. There was no change in sheep, for which the demand is only fair, and supplies ample to fill the requirements. There were some choice milk-fed calves on the market, for which the demand was good, and sales of such were made as high as $15 each.

The tone of the market for hogs was stronger and prices, as compared with a week ago, show an advance of 5c to 40c per 100 pounds, which is attributed to the fact that supplies coming forward are not sufficient to fill the requirements of the trade, and in consequence some of the packers have had to turn their attention to the western market, consequently unless receipts increase in the near future values will likely go higher. Demand was good. Selected lots sold at $8.65 to $8.80 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $6.75 to $7; do., medium, $5.50 to $6.25; do., common, $4 to $4.50; canners, $2.75 to $3; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $5.50 to $5.75; do., medium, $4.50 to $5.25; do., bulls, $3.50 to $5; milkers, choice, each, $60 to $70 do., common and medium, each, $40 to $50; springers, $30 to $35.

Sheep, ewes, $4 to $4.25; bucks and culls, $2.50 to $3.75. Lambs, $5.50 to $6.50.

Hogs, f.o.b., $8.65 to $8.80.

Calves, $5 to $15.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Sept. 16.—Cattle—Receipts, 22,000; market steady; beeves, $5.75 to $10.85; Texas steers, $4.75 to $6.40; western steers, $5.70 to $9.15; stockers and feeders, $4.20 to $7.15; cows and heifers, $2.90 to $8; calves, $8 to $11.

Hogs—Receipts, 30,000; market weak, 10c lower; light, $8.25 to $8.85; mixed, $8.05 to $8.85; heavy, $7.85 to $8.70; rough, $7.85 to $8.05; pigs, $5.75 to $8.15; bulk of sales, $8.25 to $8.70.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 42,000; market steady; 10c lower; native, $3.50 to $4.65; western, $3.60 to $4.65; yearlings, $4.70 to $5.85. Lambs, native, $4.85 to $7.65; western, $5 to $7.70.

MIDDIES ARE DROWNED.

Chicago, Sept. 16.—Five naval apprentices were drowned and five are missing as the result of the capsizing of a cutter from the United States naval training station at North Chicago, Ill., late yesterday afternoon. The bodies of five victims were recovered and identified and it is believed that the five boys unaccounted for were drowned.

The known drowned are: R. C. Harlan, aged 18, Bloomingdale, Ind.; I. L. Southworth, 18, Pittsburg, Pa.; J. Wallace, 18, Turner, Ind.; J. A. Patton, 23, Stanton, Ohio; W. N. Amtrobus, 21, Indianapolis, Ind.

The party, in which were twenty-four apprentices, left the training station shortly after two o'clock in charge of Gunner's Mate Negis and after cruising about for two hours headed for North Chicago.

A few minutes later, while the cutter was north of Lake Forest, a squall struck the boat, the sails were lowered and an anchor was thrown out.

When within 200 feet of the shore, the cutter overturned and its occupants were thrown into the water.

Capt. W. F. Fullan, commandant of the naval training station, saw the danger of the apprentices from his headquarters and sent a motorboat to the rescue, but this craft also was capsized before it had gone far and the men in charge of it were obliged to swim back to the shore. Later a force of rescuers were sent along the shore to where the cutter had been wrecked. Many of the boys swam to land and others floated ashore on oars and pieces of wreckage. A number were rescued from the surf by officers of the training station and cared for at houses near the scene of the wreck.

Gunner's Mate M. N. Negis, who was in charge of the cutter in which the boys were drowned, after aiding in the rescue, disappeared. He is said to have told friends that he held himself responsible in a measure for the wreck and that he feared it might affect his mind.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

MR. FLINT DISCUSSES THE MYSTERY OF DEATH

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—For countless millions of years every animal, including man, has found a sepulchre in this earth. To all appearances, everything living, and which shall hereafter live in the form of animal life, wil meet the same fate.

No man desires, or is willing to die, unless he has been so torn and bruised from contact with disease and adversity that he craves death as a boon, just as the Buddhists pray for a dreamless sleep.

Long before the Christian era the philosophers and wise men of nearly all nations endeavored to solve the question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Socrates said as he drank poison: "You may kill the body, but you can't catch me," meaning that his soul would continue to live. Plato also taught the immortality of the soul. Job, clearly in some passages did not believe in immortality. He says: "All flesh shall perish together and man shall turn again unto dust. * * * * For I know that Thou wilt bring me to death and to the house appointed for all living. I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness, and the shadow of death. Man dieth and wasteth away, and where is he?" But he also says: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."

It is difficult to find passages in the Old Testament which show that the Israelites entertained the idea of immortality. It is true that the witch of Endor brought the spirit of Samuel to interview Saul; and David mourning over Absalom said: "He cannot come unto me, but I shall go to him."

Nearly every race entertains the idea of immortality. The Indians killed the dog and horse of the deceased Indian, and placed weapons and cooking utensils upon his grave to be used by him in the other world; and every race shows its belief in a future life by embalming its dead, so the body shall not decay, and be re-animated by the soul; or by doing something which they think will be of service to the deceased upon his resurrection.

Christ taught that the soul was immortal, and Paul reasoned out the matter clearly.

Addison in his Plato, says:

"It must be so, Plato, thou reasonest well.
Else, whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire—
This longing after immortality?
Or whence this secret dread and in ward horror of falling into

Hamlet says: "To die—to sleep—no more—and by a sleep to say we end the heart ache, and the thousand natural shocks the flesh is heir to—'tis a consummation devoutly to be wished. To die—to sleep—perchance to dream! Aye, there's the rub. For in that sleep of death, what dreams may come, when we have shuffled off this mortal coil?"

This natural dread of death may be the parent of this desire and belief in immortality. Materialists claim that death ends all; that there is no future life. They say there is no soul. Thought is but a peculiar of the brain. They point to the imbecility of old age, to insanity. They say a blow upon the skull wil cause insensibility and paralyze the mind or soul. They point to idiots and ask if the soul is distinct from the body, why should an injury to the brain, or a disease of the brain, affect the intelligence of the soul. Aside from the teachings of all religons, is there any evidence for a belief that the soul is immortal?

Addison wrote: "The soul, secure in her existence, smiles at the drawn dagger and defies its point. The stars shall fade away, the sun himself grow dim with age, and nature sink in years! But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth, unhurt amidst the war of elements, the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds."

Nothing can be more cruel than the effort to destroy the confidence we enjoy that the soul is immortal, and that we shall in another world rejoin those we have loved and lost. It is because I believe that a reasonable answer can be given to these disturbing assertions that I pen these lines in the hope that they may comfort some hearts that are filled with anguish at the thought that they have lost their dear ones forever. The brain is undoubtedly the organ of the mind. The brain can be used for any special mental process only after a material place in it has been prepared or organized for such process. If a man suddenly is found unable to speak though he can understand what is spoken to him, the cause is a clot has been formed in the brain. If a man suddenly finds he cannot read, the cause is that the special brain sent for reading, has been injured. An organist discourses beautiful music through his organ just as long as the chords and strings are perfect. Disarrange any material part of the instrument and discords follow. The organist is uninjured but the organ will not truly convey the proper sounds. The brain is the organ used by consciousness. It can become impaired, so as to incorrectly render what consciousness would convey, but consciousness, which used the organ, is not impaired. The brain consists of two perfectly matched hemispheres. In the human being only one of these is the organ of the mind and personality. The other hemisphere is not used for any mental act. It has only power to receive the sensations and move the muscles of its corresponding half of the body. This fact shows that brain matter of itself can neither think nor do anything because if it could, then both hemispheres would share in mind, and in the attributes of personality, which is not the case. Scientists hold that thought is a function of the brain as steam is a function of the tea kettle, light a function of the electric circuit. These objects produce effects. If thought is produced by the brain then when the brain perishes, thought is no more; hence no immortality. What is the brain? Simply a mass of cells, blood, tissue, fibre, etc. Is it possible or reasonable to suppose that these materials constituting the organ called the brain, think, scheme, plan and perform everything that the human mind is capable of performing or conceiving? The answer is, that it is not conceivable, and that the brain is simply the organ of consciousness. Now when that organ decays, does it reasonably follow that consciousness dies? Is it not evident that something (call it mind, brain, soul, intellect) will continue to exist just as the organist who gave us the music exists, after the destruction of the organ?

Suppose you admit that thought is a function of the brain, and therefore thought dies with the brain. Then the question comes up: What brain?

A man of sixty years has had seven or eight brains, because every particle and atom in his body has changed every seven years. Nothwithstanding all these changes memory of all the principal circumstances in his life exists. How can this memory exist, if it is not the function or attribute of something else than the body? What do you mean when you say: I will do so. What is this "I"? It is not any part of your body. You know it is something that dwells in you, apart from blood, bones, tissue, etc. Science can take a human body and tell you every atom of its composition. Science cannot find this ego—this "I."

A writer says: "The mysterious spiritual "I" is behind the brain using and educating the brain for its purposes. The education of the brain by this "I" constantly goes on. The brain has no knowledge or thought. The brain of a baboon is almost precisely the same form as that of a man. "I am not the brain. I possess and use it. It is mine, but it is not me—and the ego, the "I" is not flesh and blood. It dwells within the body and is not destroyed by death.

I am yours,
JOHN J. B. FLINT.

Faces Murder Charge.

Hamilton, Sept. 16.—Crown Attorney Washington announced yesterday morning that James Bruce would be charged with murder in the death of Miss Rose Ziepe, into whose case an inquest was held Friday evening, following her death some weeks previously at the City Hospital after she had eaten some chocolates taken to the institution by Bruce for his wife. The analyst's report submitted at the inquest Friday evening showed that there was strychnine in the girl's stomach, but that there was no poison in the chocolates.

Nogi's Act Lauded.

Tokio, Sept. 16.—The dramatic death of Gen. Count Maresuke Nogi, the soldier hero of Japan, and that of his wife, the Countess Nogi, who, coincidentally with what was considered the supreme moment of the nation—the departure from the capital of the body of the late Emperor Mutsuhito for its final resting place at Monoyama—committed suicide, the general by gashing his throat with a sword, and the countess by stabbing herself in the abdomen, is regarded by the great soldiers of Japan and by the general's other countrymen as a magnificent act of patriotic duty. But the nation being in the deepest mourning and the new Emperor being forced into seclusion by the death of his father, it is impossible to confer the usual posthumous honors and, consequently, Gen. Nogi officially is not dead.

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

By concealing my colour, I resolved, if seen, to pass in the dark for a Kaffir, and to complete the disguise borrowed Affricander's kaross, a short cloak of zebra-skin. On my back I slung my rifle, and prepared thus to steal downward among those who were intent on my destrucion, with my hatchet in one hand and a poisoned assegai in the other.]

To divert the attention of all, or of any who might be watching my retreat from the base of the rock I lifted up the dead body of the Hottentot, and uttering a shout flung it headlong down among them. This was a most unexpected event as they had forgotten all about him, or the fact that his body had been up beside me; and all rushed with tremendous cries to the spot where it fell.

The time was one of dreadful excitement to me. I stole out, crept softly downward on my hands and knees, crawling amid the very trees which were piled up to destroy me, under or over the stems and between the branches, often close to the toiling savages, till I was among the long grass of the plain, and I heard the voices of my besiegers die away behind me, as I stole away to where their horses, four and twenty in number, were standing all linked together.

As I drew near the horses, an armed Hottentot, whom I had failed to perceive before, started forward with a bearing of suspicion and hostility. Something in my air, or the outline of my figure, dissatisfied him; and he was just openng his huge mouth to utter a shout of alarm, when I thrust the assegai into it, and he fell wallowing in blood, while I, excited to the utmost degree drew a long and painful breath.

I cut the rope that linked the horses together, and mounting the nearest one, rode off at full speed, followed by the whole like a herd of wild cattle, for fear was added to the fury with which they galloped when the dead trees were set on fire and a roaring pyramid of flames rose around the solitary rock in the plain.

I heard the fierce crackle of that red and flaming sheet of fire, which cast my dark and absurdly elongated shadow before me over the wild prairie. I heard a shrill yell of astonishment and dismay from the Kaffirs for the loss of their horses, and then every sound was lost to me, in the dull and monotonous rush of the hoofs, while, surrounded by the whole riderless troop, I rode fast and furiously towards the west.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Maddened or encouraged in this wild race by each other's presence, the horses flew on, many of them neighing and snorting as if in sport or triumph. Often they pressed so close upon the flanks of the one I rode that I was fearfully crushed and its speed was impeded; but anon the wild herd would open out, yet all press on together in this bewildering and aimless race.

In less than ten minutes the flaming rock and yelling horde were three miles behind us. My horse was not pursuing exactly the route I wished him to do. I pulled strongly on thee bridle, but pulled in vain, for the animal seemed to have a head of iron. Instead of obeying the reins, he only gave a snort of defiance, for he had got the bit between his teeth, and laying back his ears wickedly flew on like the demon horse of some fantastic story or German ballad.

I endeavred to turn him by wrenching each rein alternately. In this process the bit-ring gave way, the bit itself slipped from the animal's mouth, the head-stall parted with the strain and my horse all unbridled, was utterly beyond my contro.

I still retained the useless bridle in my hands, and held on by my knees and stirrups for I dared not throw myself off while now the horse flew madly onwards. I conceived the idea of stunning the animal by a blow with the handle of my hatchet between the ears but this only served to excite his fury and accelerate his speed.

With a sudden bound he dashed on, distancing his snorting companions, through rivers, over a vast plain, until he halted, in a wild and silent place, a few miles distance from a range of mountains, over which the pale moon began to rise.

As he paused in his mad career, I sprang frm the saddle and knee-haltered him.

One circumstance I had to thank him for, at all events. He had borne me to a most satisfactory distance—some twenty miles, at least—from the now dismounted Amaponda Kaffirs; but how little could I anticipate that he was bearing me once more to Mariqua.

I was breathless, faint and weary.

In a runnel I gladly quenched my thirst, and freed myself of the horrid paste with which I had so successfully disguised my colour ere leaving that perilous rock in the plain, and now repose was necessary till daybreak when I could look around me. As usual, when encamping in the bush, I cut down with my hatchet a quantity of brush wood, and placed this in a circle round the spot where my horse and I were to pass the night together, for wild animals are always in fear of traps and snares, and though they might with ease have leaped over my frail barrier, they would not, I knew, venture through it.

I cut a quantity of grass for my horse, and after a final examination of my loaded rifle, and thanking heaven that I was again free, lay down to sleep, and slept soundly, too.

When I awoke, the sun was shining brightly, and the air was warm and balmy. Starting up, I looked around me. I was in a wild place, covered with foliage and luxuriant greenery, but I could see that the place was the abode of snakes scorpions and puff-adders innumerable, so that it was a miracle I had passed the night unbitten.

By a single bullet I brought down a fine guinea-fowl when on the wing, and had it plucked and prepared for my breakfast, cooking it ere it was cold. I was too much famished to be very fastidious. A fire I made readily enough by untwistng a cartridge and springling the powder among some dead leaves and dry branches. Therein I broiled my fowl in such a fashion as might have made Soyer faint; but, nevertheless I relished it greatly, and on this bird and a bunch of wild, honey-pot grapes made a regular bushranger's breakfast.

My next task was to repair my bridle as well as I could, and remounting, to set on my journey once more. On clearing the bush among which I had passed the night, I found my runaway nag had halted just in time, for I was but a quarter of a mile or so distant from the edge of a long and lofty range of cliffs, up the back or gradually slopping ascent of which he had galloped.

From these cliffs I had an extensive view of a vast green plain, bounded by a chain of hills that seemed faint and blue in the distance, and over all that space my eye wandered, searching, but in vain, for a village, a kraal, a spire, a windmill, even the smoke of a solitary house, or anything that savoured of culture or civilization; and my heart began to sink, for I had neither guide map, nor pocket compass, and had now little more than a dozen cartridges remaining.

And lower still did my heart sink, when, on drawing close to the cliff's giddy verge, I discovered what was in the immediate foreground.

I shrank back instinctively, and then creepng forward on my face peeped over again.

There, in a green place overhung by the rocks, and about a hundred and fifty feet below me, were a party of armed Kaffirs—twenty or more at least—squatted round a fire, at which they were preparing a repast, composed of birds and other animals recently shot by them, and the odour of their cookng came plainly upward to my olfactory nerves on the soft morning air. Their horses were knee-haltered near.

If mine were to neigh but once, they would dscover me; and it was a singular chance they had not heard the rifle shot by which I brought my breakfast down.

where to declare themselves in no uncertain terms, and I was glad to note through the newspapers a very general repudiation of the torture Gospel. Nothing that the heathen have is as bad, and the wonder is that missionaries have made any progress whatever in heathen lands. For the real Gospel, I believe the real heathen are in readiness, hungering—the Mohammedans also.

Faith-healing is another of the false gospels opposed both to the letter and the spirit of Jesus' teachings. Not a single one of the Lord's disciples was healed miraculously, nor a single Prophet of old. The miracles which Jesus performed were wholly upon outsiders, not His disciples, and were illustrations of how Himself and His Church in Kingdom glory will bless, heal, uplift and restore all the families of the earth—all the willing and obedient. St. Paul blessed napkins and handkerchiefs to be sent to the sick, but never one of these was sent to the brethren. When Timothy was sick, St. Paul instead recommended a change of diet.

Many dear Christian people are misled by the spurious statement of Mark 16: "These signs shall follow them that believe," etc. They cling to the passage even after being given abundant proofs that it was added to the Scriptures in the Seventh Century, and that it was omitted properly from the Revised Version. So deeply seated is the love for the Gospel of healing, that this passage is clung to by some even after it is pointed out to them that they would not dare to eat and drink poisonous things, as it mentions.

The Gospel of Christ, as applied to this Age, is the very reverse of the gospel of healing. Jesus, who was perfect, laid down His life in doing good for others. His Apostles did the same. Indeed the stipulation of discipleship is, He that loveth his life and seeketh to save it will lose it; he that loseth his life sacrificially for My sake and for the Gospel's shall find it. The Gospel of Christ is the Gospel of self-denial and suffering and patient endurance—joy in the Lord and health of spirit, rather than joy and health of the flesh. True, godliness and contentment do often bring to God's people an increase of health through their rest of mind. But this is neither promised to them nor to be prayed for by them. On the contrary, they are to follow the example of the Redeemer in laying down their lives for the brethren.

In combating the errors we have incidentally presented the Gospel of Christ. It is a Message that God proposes to bless the world through the Seed of Abraham, and that Jesus glorified is that Spiritual Seed. It is a message respecting His Kingdom which shall shortly be inaugurated with power and great glory for the blessing of Adam and all his race with human Restitution, giving to all fullest opportunity of return to the Heavenly Father's love through the merit of the great Sacrifice accomplished at Calvary. It is a Message, too, that the Redeemer, before taking the Throne of His glory, in harmony with the Divine Program, is now calling, choosing, and proving a "little flock" of believers justified through faith, in His blood.

These are to be made perfect through suffering, through sacrifice, by walking in the Master's footsteps. They have the promise that if they suffer with Him, they shall also reign with Him; if they be dead with Him, they shall also live with Him. Whoever sees, hears, appreciates, this true Gospel of the Grace of God in Christ finds in it the power of God unto salvation. The more fully he receives it the more does he possess the power of the Truth, which, if co-operated with, will work in Him to will and to do the Father's good pleasure and eventually make him an heir of God and a joint-heir of Jesus Christ the Lord to the Heavenly Kingdom and eternal life in glory.

Blind Pigs Raided.

Kingston, Sept. 16.—As a result of a raid on Saturday afternoon by Provincial License Inspector Morrison, County Inspector Morland and City Inspector C. W. Wright, two ex-hotelmen have been summoned to appear before the county magistrate charged with having liquor on their premises and a very large quantity of wet goods was confiscated.

It is understood a charge is to be laid against another man for selling liquor to the two who have no license to sell liquor on the premises.

Deckhand's Injuries Fatal.

Brockville, Sept. 16.—Robert Gates, the deckhand of the steamer Alexandria, whose left leg was severed by having it caught between a rope and a snubbing post at Iroquois, died yesterday in the Brockville General Hospital from shock. He was 22 years of age and unmarried.

An inquest was opened and adjourned to get the evidence of the boat's crew.

Owen Sound's New Industry.

Owen Sound, Sept. 16.—By a majority of 234, the ratepayers of the town on Saturday declared in favor of granting a loan of $60,000 and other concessions to Hugo A. Gutenkunst of Milwaukee for the establishment of a malleable iron industry in Owen Sound. There was no real opposition to the bylaw, only 28 votes being cast against. Work will be commenced at once on the new plant, which will comprise two large foundry buildings when completed.

The agreement calls for the erection of a large plant to cost not less than $100,000 when completed and to employ no fewer than 150 men in the first year. In turn the town grants a loan of $60,000, also a grant of $4,000 with which to purchase a four-acre site.

The new concern will have a capacity of 25,000 tons, and is to be running by New Year.

GUNMEN WALKED STREETS OF NEW YORK FREELY

"Gyp" and "Lefty" at Mardi Gras and Once Headquarters Intending to Give Up — Hired Two Flats in July—Preparations Made to Care for Suspects Now Traced Out by Their Business Deals.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—"Gyp the Blood" Horowitz and "Lefty Louie" Rosenzweig, or Rosenberg, the last of the gunmen wanted for the death of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, who were arrested by Second Deputy Police Commissioner George S. Dougherty and several men of his staff on last Saturday night, went to Centre and Grand Streets, opposite Police Headquarters, one day less than a month ago, and for several minutes argued on the street corner as to whether they would enter the building and surrender themselves. Finally the fear that their wives might not be provided for properly through the time of their imprisonment persuaded them to abandon their first plan, and, arm in arm, they walked away down Centre Street, passings dozens of policemen, and returned to the little flat in Glendale where they were finally arrested.

The hunted men, wanted as slayers and described in thousands of circulars sent through the country in the most detailed manner, walked about the streets of this city for a month or more previous to their arrest. Twice they attended the Mardi Gras in the last week at Coney Island, and were preparing to pay another visit to Coney Island when Mr. Dougherty and his men broke in on them.

Never throughout the time that the police were searching for them were they in hiding. Constantly they appeared in public, and trusted to their very boldness and to the fact that they were known personally to less than a dozen detectives on the New York police force to preserve them from capture.

Death Sentences Before Cabinet

OTTAWA, Sept. 17.—Five death sentences against which appeals for clemency have been made are waiting to be considered by the Cabinet. The one in which there is the chief interest is that of Mrs. McGee, of Prince Edward Island, who poisoned her six children, only one surviving. She has been declared sane. There is a strong feeling against hanging a woman, yet the heinousness of her crime is such that it is very possible that clemency will be refused. Mrs. McGee has been sentenced to be hanged at Charlottetown on October 10. There are two Montreal cases; Cummins, who has been reprieved to October 4, and Tacoboffe Sylvia, whose execution has been postponed until November 15. A reprieve has been granted until Nov. 12 to S. Klyoshk, who was sentenced to be hanged at Sarnia. The hanging of F. Eberts of MacLeod has also been postponed until November 4, pending the trial of an alleged accomplice.

Revised Vote On Reciprocity

OTTAWA, Sept. 17.—A blue book giving final details of votes cast in the general election of September 21 last shows that out of a total of 1,850,000 voters on the lists of the nine provinces, 1,305,528 exercised the franchise.

In Ontario the actual vote cast was 480,572 out of a total qualified list of 693,485. In Quebec 321,030 out of 455,288; Nova Scotia 113,000 out of 136,994; New Brunswick 79,072 out of 101,112; Manitoba 77,686 out of 88,588; British Columbia 43,559 out of 83,081; Saskatchewan 89,013 out of 142,414; Alberta 69,775 out of 107,228.

The figures show that in all five eastern provinces the vote was more largely recorded than in the four western provinces.

IS THE SUN GROWING COLD?

PASADENA, Cal., Sept 17.—Work was begun to-day on a forty-foot tower to surmount the observatory of the Smithsonian Institution on Mount Wilson whereby attempts will be made to ascertain whether the sun is growing cold.

The tower will be built according to plans drawn by Dr. D. C. Abbot, director of solar research of the institution, who is en route to Washington, D. C., from Algeria, where another station for measuring the sun's rays is maintained.

BELLEVILLE IS TO GET AN ELECTRIC RAILWAY

It will be welcome news to this progressive city to learn that there is now every likelihood of the proposed Electric Railway (for which a charter was granted) being taken up and the road constructed and linked up with a proposed line through Prince Edward district, tapping one of the most populous and richest agricultural districts in the Province.

While the city end would take in Point Ann where works employing over one thousand men are situated, only three miles from our city, Trenton, also would be included and possibly Tweed.

That this would be a paying proposition from the beginning experts tell us there is no doubt, and state that the strange part is that it should be so long in accomplishment. However, no less than three distinct and separate corporations are now interested in this project and there appears as already stated, every likelihood that the early spring will see operations started on a large scale.

Two Masked Men Looted Mail Car

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 17.—Two masked men held up the Memphis Special, Southern Railway, westbound at 1.30 o'clock this morning near Stevenson, Ala. The mail car was looted, but the amount secured is unknown.

The men boarded the train at Stevenson, entered the mail car and covered the four clerks with pistols. three of the clerks were bound, the fourth being ordered to open all sacks of registered mail, from which the robbers filled a bag with packages supposed to contain valuables.

After the car had been thoroughly ransacked the fourth clerk also was bound, and one of the robbers pulled the emergency cord, the train coming to a stop in a thick wood. The engineer, after waiting for a few moments for a signal to proceed, went back to investigate, discovering the mail clerks almost suffocated under mail sacks, which the robbers had piled on top of them.

Madoc Man Broke His Arm

The Model School is Not Yet Finished—A Big Budget of Mining News—Prospects Bright.

Special

MADOC, Sept. 16.—Mr. Foley, son of L. Foley of the Irish Settlement, in climbing a fence lost his balance and fell heavily to the ground breaking his right arm above the wrist.

It will be nearly two weeks before the Model school will be completed.

Mr. Hudgin's new residence will be finished this week.

Will the C. W. R. R. come to Madoc by the way of Actinolite? The road bed is ready for ties and rails and there is but one stream to cross.

The Hungerford Talc Co. of Eldorado have purchased the new talc mine close by the old one for a little over $10,000. Three thousand has been paid down. The mine was pumped out and a drift made, which showed a large deposit of A 1 ore. For the present they will cart some of the ore to Eldorado with the prospect that they will erect a mill here.

The Longnecker Co. have taken an option on the Palmer mine and are sinking a shaft there, for it is showing up well in high grade iron pyrites. They intend to use a diamond drill and go down several hundred feet.

Mines around Madoc are looking bright. Work in the Blair-Spurr mine will soon commence.

We are informed of the finding of another iron pyrite mine.

At our fall fair next week we are expecting a large crowd and that all will be well pleased.

ENGAGED FOR 20 YEARS.

The long delay was the result of the woman's determination to nurse her invalid father until his death, which occurred last February.

King George at The Manœuvres

Covered Fifty Miles in the Saddle Across Country—The Invaders Scored.

Special

LONDON, Sept. 17.—King George followed the army manoeuvres throughout the day with energy. He traveled long distances in an automobile, but he was six hours in the saddle, during which he covered 50 miles across country. He kept Minister Seely and a group of officers waiting for two hours at a point where he had appointed to meet them. As His Majesty is a stickler for punctuality, his non-appearance created a surprise. It turned out later that the King had been paying an unexpected visit to the defenders in the distant trenches.

There were only a few air reconnaisances to-day, and these were made less satisfactorily than those of yesterday owing to a mist which prevailed. Some of the aeroplanes got dangerously near the enemy.

The expected battle did not begin to-day, but there was much skirmishing with varying results, and on the whole the invaders succeeded in making an advance. The country where the fighting went on is much enclosed, and this resulted in reckless work or else the enemy was not wary. Scouting parties were frequently trapped and captured.

The fight for the possession of London will probably begin at dawn.

SEPTUAGENARIAN WEDS YOUNG GIRL

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Sir Max Waechter, who saved the famous view from Richmond Hill, near the Star and Garter Hotel, by presenting Glover's Island and the Freehold of Petersham Lodge to the town of Richmond, was married yesterday at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, to Armatrude, the twenty-two year old daughter of the late Colonel Bertie Hobart.

Sir Max's first wife, a daughter of Sir Thomas Caxe, died two years ago The wedding was private The honeymoon will be spent on the continent Sir Max is seventy-five years old.

N. Y. POLICEMAN TAKEN AFTER A HARD FIGHT

Williams, Charged with Blackmailing Broker, Tries to Draw Revolver Against Detective—Took Three to Subdue Him—Policeman was Waiting in Hall for Young to Pay Him $100—Broker Told Capt. Wakefield.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17—Charged with having extorted $300 from Joseph H. Young, who said he was a broker, and lived at 208 West Twentieth street, Patrolman John A. Williamson, attached to the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, was locked up last night in the Tenderloin Police Station in West Thirtieth Street. The accused policeman was arrested by Detective Edward O'Brien of the West Seventeenth Street Station, where Capt. Wakfield is in command. As there are no cells in the West Seventeenth Street Station, the prisoner was taken to the Tenderloin Station for the night. He will be arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court this morning.

According to Capt. Wakefield, the complainant, who is 66 years old, came to the West Seventeenth Street Station on Sept. 5 and said that a man representing himself to be a policeman had been blackmailing him. He said that on Aug. 27 he had been sitting on a bench in Central Park, when a man sat down on the bench with him. According to the entry on the police blotter at the West Seventeenth Street Station, made last night after Williamson's arrest, Young further asserted that the stranger after a few minutes' conversation, displayed a police shield and informed him that he was under arrest. Young pleaded to be let go, with the result, he alleged, that the stranger, who later proved to be Williamson, demanded $100. Young told him, according to the police entry, that he did not have that much money with him, but produced a business card showing that he had offices at 74 Wall Street. He further promised to pay the amount on the next day.

On Aug. 28, accompanied by Williamson, who was off duty, Young declared he went to the Seamen's Bank and drew $100, which he paid to the policeman. On Sept. 4 Williamson renewed his demands and received $200 in Young's office, at 74 Wall Street, according to the complainant, who on the next day went to the West Seventeenth Street Station and reported the case. He was unable to tell the name or shield number of Williamson, and Capt. Wakefield told him that if the blackmailer renewed his demand for money he should seek some pretext upon which to notify the station house.

Sunday, Williamson made a demand for another $100, according to Young, and Young promised to pay the money last night at 6.30 o'clock. Williamson agreed, according to Young, to wait in the doorway at 206 West Twentieth Street and to blow his nose as a signal to Young when the coast was clear so that he could pay over the money. Young notified Capt. Wakefield, and the latter assigned Detective O'Brien to the case.

Shorly before 7 o'clock, Young sauntered from the doorway of 206 West Twentieth Sreet, and immediately a loud sneeze was heard from the vestibule. O'Brien who was close at hand, jumped in and arrested Williamson, whom he dragged kicking and fighting to the sidewalk. The two policeman fought desperately, and the struggle attracted a large crowd of spectators. Williamson attempted to draw his revolver, but was disarmed by O'Brien, who wrested the weapon from him and threw it away. The detective was finally obliged to blow his whistle for aid. The whistle summoned two patrolmen in uniform, who helped O'Brien, and dragged Wiliamson, a sullen prisoner, to the station house.

First Deputy Commissioner McKay was notified by telephone of Williamson's arrest, and directed that he be stripped of his shield and suspended.

SIXTEEN ARE KILLED

English Train Jumps Tracks and Crashes Into Platform.

Chester to Liverpool Express Is Badly Wrecked When Engine Is Derailed and Cars Dash Towards Station—Several Persons Are Cremated in Burning Car—Hundreds Take Part in the Work of Rescue.

Liverpool, Sept. 18.—Thirteen persons were killed and fifty injured by the derailment last evening of the express from Chester to Liverpool at Ditton Junction, about eight miles from Liverpool. The train had passed over the long bridge spanning the Mersey and was running down the incline leading to the junction, when at the crossover points the engine jumped the rails and crashed into the buttress of a bridge spanning the line.

The coupling of the car next the engine parted and the train of nine cars sped on to the station. The leading cars crashed into the platform with terrific force and were wrecked. One car was overturned and caught fire. In spite of the efforts of a fire brigade it was soon consumed. Several bodies in this car were cremated, but some of the injured were rescued from windows.

The engine driver was crushed to death between the engine and tender and the fireman had both legs broken. He was pinned under the locomotive for two hours. Hundreds of laborers and railway employes took part in the work of rescue, while the waiting-rooms were turned into an emergency hospital.

The work of extricating the dead and injured by the light of bonfires was continued until a late hour. All the passengers in the first two cars were killed. The fourth car became a roaring furnace and the terrible cries of the injured and appeals for help, together with the difficulty in taking the passengers from the wreckage, caused harrowing scenes.

At midnight the death roll numbered sixteen. Several of the bodies are still unidentified, but apparently all aboard the train were local residents.

Women are Long Livers

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The greater longevity of women than of men is shown by recent French insurance statistics, the advantage on the feminine side being almost one-third.

Thus the average age of death of feminine annuitants on one company's books is 70, while for men it is barely 50. Another company has several centenarians, all women, on its books. These annuitants have already received their money back five or six times over. The company is thinking of revising its tariff, making the scale for women much higher.

A distinguished doctor, when asked to account for women's longer lives, said:

"Men live much harder, and smoke and drink too much, even though they rarely work too much. Women are wiser and think of the future, rarely smoke and drink one-tenth as much, while their preoccupations and moral sufferings are much less intense.

"At 40 a woman is in the plentitude of her physical powers, while a man at the same age has probably contracted organic weaknesses which will shorten life."

Heavy Fine for a Juryman

Special

TORONTO, Sept. 18.—When the name of Mr. Benjamin Milne, a furniture dealer, was called by Coroner E. B. Hardy at the inquest into the death of Mr. John Merrick, of Uxbridge, at the city morgue last night, there was no response from the jury box, and a fine of $40 was imposed upon Mr. Milne.

After listening to the evidence given by C.P.R. trainmen, Dr. Henry A. Beatty, the C. P. R. surgeon, and others, the coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death. According to testimony Merrick walked out on the platform of a moving train on which he was riding near Craighurst on the afternoon of August 28th last, and fell off. He was brought to this city and died in the Western Hospital on September 8. Death was due to hemorrhage of the brain.

INDIAN CURE FOR CANCER

An Indian cancer treatment brought to the notice of the Paris Academy of Medicine by Professor Maurice Letulle, is a combination of arsenic and phosphorous in albumen. It is used both internally and externally.

The tonic properties of the arsenic are said to be practically neutralized in the combination, and the slight fever following internal administration is supposed to be due to the changes set up in the cancerous tissue. Many cases of alleged cure or benefit are given.

The preparation is claimed to check the cancer, even where operation can not be attempted, and in the stationary or improved condition the patient may retain general health and strength. When applied externally the effect is believed to be to prevent the return of cancer after operation.

An example of this is the case of a woman of eighty-two from whose face a cancer was cut two years ago, and in whom symptoms of a return of the disease were checked by this remedy from India.

CONCRETE

A portion of the King Edward Highway is to be built of concrete, the contract for its construction having been let on Sept. 11th. by the Honorable J. E. Caron, Minister of Agriculture and Highways of the Province of Quebec. The King Edward Highway is the Canadian section of the International Highway, connecting Montreal with several large cities of the United States. Ultimately, it is expected that this road will continue as far south as Miami, Florida.

It was the original intention that the entire highway should be built of macadam; but the Honorable Minister, who has under his jurisdiction the Canadian branch of this work, has become interested in concrete roadways and has decided upon this important undertaking as a good place to try it out. Governments and municipalities are gradually becoming to recognize the necessity of a more permanent form of roadway constuction. That concete is the material which best fulfills all the requirements of a permanent roadway, is a fact that will ultimately obtain world-wide recognition.

RAILWAYS IN B. C.

Hundred Millions to be Spent in Next Few Years

Sir Richard McBride estimates the amount to be spent in railway construction in British Columbia during the next four years at $100,000,000 and expresses the opinion that the expenditure will in all probability be over that amount. Mention of the figures brings one to a realization of what is being done and what is contemplated by the different railway companies that are anxious to do business on the Pacific seaboard. Acitivity is not onfined to any one road, but to all of the four which already have lines in British Columbia, namely, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Great Northern. The Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and also the Pacific Great Eastern, which is reckoned practically as the Grand Trunk Pacific. Work has been begun on the large pier of the Canadian Pacific Railway which will cost three-quarters of a million dollars, and excavation is proceeding on the site of the new depot. The Canadian Pacific Railway will spend more in British Columbia during the next few years than for many years past. The Great Northern will double track its lines between Vancouver and New Westminster.

WESTERN RELICS OF RARE INTEREST

Interesting Historical Objects Gathered at Selkirk—Links With the Long Past

Few places in Canada can show more relics of Canadian historical interest than Selkirk, Manitoba. These were displayed at a Winnipeg exhibition. The first to be seen at the end of the room was a gun, the property of Magnus Harper, which was used with the powder horn at Seven Oaks. A pair of snowshoes were of special interest and wonderful workmanship. They were brought from the mouth of the Mackenzie river over 30 years ago. The fine gutted work of the shoe is seldom seen in the present days. They are the only kind that can be used to much purpose in the far north. In the case at the side were a number of interesting historical articles. A bayonet which was used in the "Thin Red Line" at Inkerman by one of the Sutherland Highlanders is one of the first. Then came the axe which was the property of Senator John Sutherland, and is over 100 years old, yet still fit for use. A picture of Sir John Moore and the battle of Corunna was an heirloom of one of the early settlers. Of interest also was the spinning wheel, the property of Mrs. Polson. Behind the simple machine was a row of blankets spun by the wheel and though over 100 years old they look as new and fresh as many of the pieces of work which one sees to-day. Besides the spinning wheel were the other instruments for the art, the card, the reel, the clipping shears, and a number of other domestic articles, compasses of somewhat rude construction, a pot hanger, a catfish gaff, an old bow tie for cattle, the yard stick, the dog whip and the stone sledge.

An Old Hammer

An interesting article was the old steel stone hammer which was used by Duncan Macrae, one of the first masons in the valley. He was the man who did most of the mason work on Lower Fort Garry, on St. Andrews church, the old St. John's cathedral and the old Kildonan church. The gauge of the Hon. William Fraser was also to be seen, and side by side an old pot hanger which bears the date 1770. A whip saw and the stillyards for weighing, a pair of old tongs of prehistoric style, an ox hauling pin, a sewing champ, and a pair of candle moulds, were also of special interest, as also were the grain sickle and flail, a number of tiny Indian brooms, and an old shoe last which had done many a good day's work. Side by side were a white man's cradle and an old Indian cradle for the papoose which had served its excellent purpose for 99 years and looks still good for the century.

Of more recent years but of no less interest was the mace of the first Manitoba legislature, which had been loaned by the provincial government and which was carried first over 40 years ago. A fine rabbit robe from the early days was seen at the end of the southern case in the museum.

In the centre of the room was one of the cannon which was brought out to the settlement by Lord Selkirk himself and which was picked out of the Red river some time ago. It is now located at Dauphin but was sent down specially on loan to the exhibition. Behind it was the first bell that was in use in Rupert's Land and its deep resonant tones were just such as were needed in those early days of scattered settlement. The bell bears the date 1826 and was in use for many a year at York Factory. Loaned by the Hudson's Bay Company were a couple of sleighs of unusual interest, the first, a gentleman's cariole, and the other a dog pack sled all packed up ready for the journey.

Next came a table made by one of the early settlers, John Francis. It was surmounted by an old Indian mat as strong and substantial as on the day when it was made. The western wall of the room had in the centre the portrait of Hon. Donald Gunn, justly termed the "Nestor of Manitoba," for his work on the history of the province. A number of old chairs were to be seen underneath, the most interesting being that which was the property of Hon. William Fraser.

On the northern side was the charter of the Hudson's Bay company which extended over four big pages of parchment. The document was loaned by the company officials. Beside it was a picture of the company officials from the year 1872 till 1881. Near it also a York boat, in miniature, the work being very cleverly executed, and in front were six pictures giving scenes from western life and lithographed by William Day.

The seal of the Red River Settlement was also on view side by side with the shoe buckles which Lord Selkirk wore in 1812, the year of the first settlement in Winnipeg. An Indian tom-tom, a rogan and a number of moccasins of fine manufacture made the first Indian exhibits. Most interesting in this section were the full leather dresses of an Indian woman and man with loon neck vest, all of which were many years old.

Six picture scenes from western life adorned the walls and were loaned by the provincial government, and gave some idea of the life of the earlier days, the times of the buffalo and Indian warfare.

Outside near the arts building was the other section of the museum, which included a log hut brought from St. Peter's reserve. There were several boats of varied construction, an Eskimo canoe, a birch lined canoe, and the old-time dug-out boat. There were also an old Red river cart, several plows of English and Scottish make, as well as the ruder Red river type.

Perhaps the most interesting historic relic was the sleigh in which Monkman drove Lieutenant-Governor Schultz, as the latter came to be, in 1869 from Parkdale to the mouth of the Red river, whence he escaped east from the plotting designs of Riel on his life

Left a $10,000 Gold Brick to Heirs

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 17.—A ten thousand dollar gold brick swindle perpetrated three years ago on W. R. Marion, a wealthy resident of South Bend, Wash., who has since died, was disclosed yesterday, when a cheese-shaped "brick" weighing 100 pounds was declared at the United States assay office here to me made of copper, coated thickly with pure gold.

Mr. Marion, who is believed to have bought the "brick" from a half-blooded Mexican who visited him three years ago, evidently discovered that he had been swindled, but did not complain. The success of the confidence man was brought to light only when his widow began an investigation of an apparent shortage of $10,000 in her husband's estate.

Search of his effects revealed the "golden cheese" reposing in the bottom of a trunk and disclosed a draft for $10,000 drawn by Mr. Marion in favor of himself and cashed by him at a Seattle bank in October, 1909.

New Empress of Japan

Her Majesty Sadako, the new Empress of Japan, has been well educated, according to the modern methods of her country, receiving a Western education modified by Japanese ideas. A Tokio Correspondent observes:

'Her Majesty has often betrayed sterling and gracious qualities that will make her an ornament to the throne and a mother to the people. As a student at the Peeresses' College the young Princess Sadako showed untiring ability in all branches of knowledge, and was especially marked for her womanly demeanor. She always walked to and from school like anyone else, and in her studies never fell below fifth in her form. The young princess evinced admiration and respect for her teachers, and on all appropriate occasions still invites them to be present. Her method of bringing up the young princes has won the admiration of the nation. They are being educated after the manner of their father, the new Emperor, in the plain and frugal manner of a soldier. Certain companions from among the sons of the nobility are chosen for them as playmates, and they have good times like other boys, playing in the afternoon in the imperial gardens. The young princes attend school regularly every forenoon at the peers' College, play from two to four o'clock with their playmates, and spend the rest of the evening at indoor amusements. Not infrequently the imperial parents join in the children's fun and add to the afternoon's pleasure.'

In future the Empress will drive with the Emperor in the imperial carriage and will be present at the court receptions, as will the wives of officials and state dignitaries. This innovation cannot but improve the position of the Japanese women, who have hitherto been almost nonentities outside their own home.

Tried to Shoot Two Policemen

TORONTO, Sept. 8.—Frank Griro, the man who gave himself up to the police some time after the murder of Frank Tarro at the corner of Front and Church Streets about a year ago, is again in the custody of the police. This time there are three charges against him—carrying a loaded revolver, attempting to assault the police, and vagrancy.

Since his acquittal on the charge of shooting Tarro, Griro has been traveling about in the Ward with a "gun." On a number of occasions he has, according to the police, threatened people, and some of his acquaintances became so fearful of him that they sought police assistance.

Affairs arrived at such a state that many Italians were terrorized, and the police started out to find Griro. Until yesterday afternoon, when he was caught, at the corner of Terauley and Louisa Streets, no policeman had secured any evidence against him as to carrying arms.

Yesterday, however, he landed in the wrong place. Policeman Sullivan and Scott happened to be together, and when they approached him he tried to pull a gun from his hip pocket. Griro almost had his hand on it when the two officers overpowered him.

Shortly afterwards Lily Griro, wife of the accused came to the Agnes Street station with a lunch for her husband. The sergeant at the desk took the lunch and also had the lady locked up. She is charged with vagrancy, and may be able to explain some of the movements of Frank Griro for some time past.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA

FISKE O'HARA and MARIE QUINN in "The Rose of Kildaire," Grifins Opera House, Sept. 20th

THE ROSE OF KILDARE

As an interpreter of Irish songs, Fiske O'Hara, who comes to Griffin's Opera House on Friday Sept. 20th, in his latest play, "The Rose of Kildare" stands pre-eminent among the delineators of Celtic character on the stage to-day. His beautiful tenor voice, schooled under some of the best masters, is one of those sympathetic organs whose tones reach the heart, or somewhere under the vest, when heard in one of the rare old folk songs. His rendition of Irish ballads is especially characterized by feeling and the youthful freshness of his voice has a charm in it that goes far toward lending the interpretation of the song a natural simplicity that art alone could never give. Mr. O'Hara has several songs in "The Rose of Kildare". It is interesting to note that they were written by one of the authors of the play, Edward Paulton, well known as the adapter of "Little Boy Blue," "Erminie" and many other successes. Mr. Paulton had the songs in mind when he wrote the play evidently, for none of them is dragged in after the usual style of interpolation, but has had a place created for it and it is created for he place. The result is that the songs all fit and naturally they are successful. Plan now at Doyle's. Prices 25c to $1.00.

THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS.

Before a large audience which assembled last evening at Griffin's Opera House the musical comedy, "The Girl of My Dreams," was produced. It was anticipated that this would be an especially good performance and such proved to be the case. From start to finish the comedy was enacted in such a manner that nothing but praise was heard. All present appreciated very much the production, which has proved so successful wherever it has been presented. Perhaps one of the chief reasons for its popularity is the fact that the music is by Karl Hoschna, composer of Madame Sherry and The Three Twins, which productions are of a high order. The Girl of My Dreams is produced by a well balanced company and the majority of those in the female chorus oppeal to the audience owing to their tender age. No better balanced musical comedy has been presented in this city for a long time and the management is to be congratulated upon the success attending his efforts in inducing such a company to visit this city. From the number of recalls, John Hyams and Leila McIntyre, who take the leading roles, were favorites with the audience who were not slow to appreciate the worth of these two clever actors. The young lady portrayed the Quaker Girl in a most pleasing manner. The songs rendered were catchy and rendered in a manner that could not but please. The chorus singing was especially fine. Throughout the comedy there is an almost unbroken succession of amusing situations, bright lines and lively songs, and every member of the company endeavors to make the most of every opportunity. The scenery and costumes are superb.

The sale of seats for the Rose of Kildare opened at Doyle's Drug Store this morning. For those who wish to live a couple of hours amid the romance, fun, poetry and song of Old Erin, the performance of this popular star is a real treat. Possessing a tenor voice of unusual power he is one of the best exponents of ballad singing now before the public and his engagement here is an event of rare interest to all music lovers. He brings with him a delightful play of Irish life, played by one of the best companies ever seen in Irish drama and mounted with a wealth of handsome scenery and costumes.

When a man does not get even with another he is never satisfied until he gets a little more so.

WEDDING BELLS.

PATRICK—ASELTINE

At 11 o'clock this morning a wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Aseltine, Grove Street in this city, when their youngest daughter Miss Pearl was united in marriage to Mr. Charles Edward Patrick of Toronto. A number of guests were present to witness the interesting ceremony which was performed by Rev. E. Howard of Bayside. As the wedding march was played by Miss Mae Oliphant the bride entered the drawing room leaning upon her father's arm. She looked beautiful in a gown of white chiffon over silk. Miss Mae Baxter of this city was bridesmaid and she was attired in a dress of lavender voile. Little Miss Ila Mairs, a niece of the bride was flower girl. Mr. Howard Aseltine a brother of the bride did honors for the groom. The drawing room where the ceremony was performed was appropriately decorated with flowers for the auspicious occasion. At the conclusion of the ceremony a sumptuous wedding repast was partaken of. That the bride had many friends was evidenced by the display of presents, which were numerous and beautiful. Mr. and Mrs Patrick left this afternoon for the west. After enjoying a trip and visiting several places of inerest they will return to Toronto and reside. The bride's going away gown was a tan and brown suit.

Son Shot Roomer: Got Three Months

TORONTO, Sept. 18.—To a charge of "shooting with intent to kill" John Jones, a boarder in his mother's house at 288 Church Street, Henry Tilley pleaded guilty in the Police Court yesterday, and was sentenced by Magistrate Ellis to three months in Central Prison. Tilley, after three years' absence, paid his mother a visit last Saturday night. He found roomers in the house, among them being Jones, whose step-fatherly display of authority in the house irritated Tilley.

"We quareled," Jones explained, "over his mother. She threw a chair at me, and he pulled a revolver and shot me."

To which Tilley added: "I didn't like his treatment of my mother. Besides, he came at me with a chair. He seemed to be trying to run the house, and I objected."

Jones had a bullet-hole in his leg, but was able to limp into court and give his testimony.

Reasonable Criticism

Criticism in civic affairs will do a world of good and the result is bound to be productive of greater care in administration and more attention to these who are selected for office.

At the same time, let public interest and criticism be mixed with common sense, for while we may grumble and growl there is absolutely no sense in believing all the silly rumors that idle persons set afloat, often without caring or ascertaining whether there is a grain of foundation for it.

There is always this to be remembered, that the city fathers, or aldermen, are ratepayers like ourselves. They are as much interested in preventing extravagance and anything that will injure the city as those who elect them to office. They pay taxes the same as the rest and have no more money to throw away on taxes, consequently how ridiculous it is to charge them with indifference or not caring how much they lead the city to spend.

On the face of it such talk is unfair, as anyone can see who pauses to study the situation. If the aldermen spend money it is because they see broadly that it will be money well spent in the long run, and if they consent to exemptions, etc., it is not because they admire such, so much as the feeling that the city, in order to get new industries, must do what others are doing. There is much about the aldermen that may not be defended, but those are not things to charge them with generally. For every alderman around the Council Board is as much interested in keeping down the tax rate as are others. They have a right to this fair statement of their position. There is much to consider and weigh without blaming anyone unduly.

The present Council have not been above criticism, owing in some degree possibly to a too large membership and to the undesirable effects of the Ward System; but next year, under the General System, the less efficient members will be weeded out, and there is certain to be a better administration of our civic affairs. In order, however, to secure the most efficient service from the aldermen it will be necessary for the citizens to take a more active interest in our municipal administration than has heretofore been the case.

Prices of Implements

An interesting discovery has lately been made in the Western Provinces regarding implements. Of late American makers, owing to the increased cost of labor and raw materials, have in some instances raised their price to their American customers, and, as the law provides, the Canadian valuation for duty has been raised accordingly. At first the Liberals blamed this on the Tory instincts of the Minister of Customs, but when it was shown that he was absolutely obliged to increase the valuation of such articles, they turned round and attacked the Dumping Act.

As everyone knows, that measure was framed and adopted by the Laurier Ministry. According to the free trade doctrine which Sir Wilfrid still occasionally professes, it is a ban upon cheapness. But why abuse a Conservative Government, less than a year old, for enforcing a statute which the Liberals themselves passed after much deliberation?

The discovery, made by the Tariff Reform Committee, a Democratic Club, of New York, is that in a good many cases American implements are sold for less in Canada than in the States. The list does not include reapers, mowers or threshers, but does include ploughs, churns, cultivators, disc-harrows, hay-presses, hoes and axes. The committee reckons that on a complete outfit of these articles the American farmer pays $300 more than the farmer in Canada, which, as the average value of farms in the United States by the census of 1910 was $31 per acre, is the equivalent of ten acres of land.

Evidently, then, the Dumping Act is not very despotically employed, whilst the advocates of reciprocity are wrong when they take the price of all American implements in Canada as the American price plus the Canadian duty, and argue that if the duty were removed they would cost just so much less on the Canadian side.

In all probability the American makers would cut their Canadian price still lower under reciprocity until they had floored the Canadian maker, whereupon they would augment it to a higher figure than any now being paid by the Canadian settler.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier declares that he is rejoiced to be freed from the responsibilities of office; and yet it is hard to take this declaration seriously, in view of the fact that Sir Wilfrid is working hard day and night, and shouting himself hoarse in an effort to secure his return to those very "responsibilities." But the Liberal chieftain, it is safe to predict, cannot "come back."

At the recent Congress of Teachers held in London, Professor Stanley Kidd of South Africa, advocated some plan for standardizing the English language throughout the Empire. He said that "the time has come for some control to be applied to the imperial tongue. Professor Kidd takes a narrow view of what the English language is and should be. Growth and expansion in a living language are as necessary as in any other living thing. The English tongue is spreading simply because of its power to change and to absorb the words from other tongues.

Volume VII. of the British census report gives the population of England and Wales as 36,077,492, and the aggregate land area 37,138,430 acres, or a little more than an acre to each individual of the population. But the acreage given is the aggregate, and includes agriculturally unproductive areas, such as the sites of villages, towns and cities, streets, highways and railway lands. So that the workable land in England and Wales does not measure up to even an acre for each man, woman and child. When we come to consider the immense areas comprised in public and private parks and estates devoted to pleasure and sport, we see that the actually cultivated area of England and Wales does not equal anything like an acre to each of their teeming and congested population.

Several highly esteemed Liberal contemporaries are making themselves quite hoarse shouting demands at Premier Borden as to his naval policy. Why should they be in such haste for information when the London Times says:

> "Unavoidable causes have prevented the Canadian Ministers from receiving the full information they desired in its final form; but they expect to receive it soon after their return to Canada, when it will be considered by the Canadian Cabinet. We can look forward with confidence to the announcement which Mr. Borden will make, in due time and in the appropriate place, of the policy which he and his colleagues decide to adopt in the light of that information."

When Premier Borden and his Cabinet Ministers have fully discussed this secret information they will produce their naval policy, not before.—Brockville Times.

LONDON PRESS OPPOSED TO CHURCHILL'S NEW PLAN

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Winston S. Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, prognostigated a policy of federation for Great Britain in a speech at Dundee this week, which, to say the least, has drawn attention from the Liberal defeat at Midlothian.

"It is amusing," says The Saturday Review, "to note the way in which Mr. Churchill is turned on or turns himself on, to make a noise when his party has lost the day."

Mr. Churchill's idea is not new, but he has carried it further than any of the Liberal leaders had done before. He pointed out that he was speaking for himself alone—not as a representative of the Government. According to Mr. Churchill's plan, not only Scotland and Wales should receive Home Rule, after Ireland, but England should be parcelled out into provinces, each with a separate Legislature and Executive, one Parliament for Lancashire, another for Yorkshire, one for the Midlands, one for Greater London and so on.

The United Kingdom would become known as a collection of locally autonomous States under the supreme authority of a central Parliament, which, eventually would deserve the title of imperial by including representatives of the self-governing colonies.

The scheme has met with almost universal condemnation, although The Daily Mail admits that there is 'a good deal attractive in the federalist idea, and if it be taken up seriously by the young statesman, who has at least political imagination and breadth of view, it will require to be considered on its merits."

The Daily Telegraph says that Mr. Churchill has "occasional inexplicable lapses of common sense. If his inspiration be not always of a quality which belongs to the highest statesmanship, his intelligence, as a rule, is of that practical quality which avoids gratuitous errors and retains a sense of see in proportion and a measure of sanity."

The Outlook declares that Mr. Churchill "is once more the irresponsible windbag of the Cabinet. He was never easy under the cloak of dignity he assumed on taking over the Admiralty."

BALFOUR'S PREDICTION.

A recent speech by ex-Premier Balfour on the Government's ideas of federation following Irish Home Rule will be recalled. He declared that federation would be the means of introducing diversity into unity, and readnig the lessons of history backward. It instances Canada, the Cape Colony and German federation, saying:

"In every one of the cases mentioned you start with separate communities and then you set yourself to work to build up out of them some loftier and more splendid building, to introduce architecture, when there was only before an unformed heap of atoms, and, in doing so, you have necessarily got to consider the feelings of those separate communities which you wish to bring together into an ordered whole; and the best way to do that is by a Federal system, which leaves traces and sometimes more than traces, of their original independence but, which passes over it to a higher community, which is created and brought into being."

The United States, which Mr. Churchill cited, is declared by practically all his commentators, not to be an analogous case.

Another suggestion, as ingenious as The Saturday Review's as to the reasons in the back of Mr. Churchill's mind for the promulgating of federation proposals, is that he is considering the ultimate development of the women suffrage question. The Daily Telegraph, which ventilates this supposition, declares that Mr. Churchill sees a means by which the Government is to get out of its difficulties over the feminine demand for votes.

WOMAN'S LOCAL VOTES.

"There is one thing," it says, "on which the whole body of independent women are agreed, whether they belong to the suffragist party or follow Mrs. Humphrey Ward. It is that women should be allowed a large scope for their politcal and social activities in local parliaments and municipal governments. Nothing could satisfy the conditions of the problem better than the formation of the local parliaments Mr. Churchill has in mind."

"Women might be permitted to have the vote for these subordinate assemblies. Thus the fury of suffragettes would be abated and the Liberal ministers, who have been hitherto marked out for an attack by the militant feminists, would be free from anxiety.

"That seems to us one of the explanations of Mr. Churchill's scheme to bring back the Heptarchy."

Assuming The Telegraph's supposition to be correct, the British federation would be an unlooked-for development of the women's suffrage agitation.

Judging by the reception Mr. Churchill's proposals met with on all sides, however, there is little likelihood of the realization of what one critic calls Mr. Churchill's "mad, impracticable, insane, reckless, unworthy and ludicrous idea of England seeing her ancient Parliament split up into an agglomeration of glorified county councils."

TRUSTEES BACKED UP

Ottawa School Board Has Support of French Parents.

French-Speaking Parents Are Anxious That Their Children Shall Learn English, But Will Not Back Down In Their Demand for Instruction In Their Own Tongue, Says Trustee Genest.

Ottawa, Sept. 18.—Trustees of the Ottawa separate school board show no signs of backing down from their stand in opposition to the Ontario Government bilingual regulations. The board is being backed in its stand by supporters of the schools.

"If we get as fair treatment as they are getting in Quebec Province, we will be ready to go down on our knees and express our thanks and will be quite satisfied," said Trustee Genest of the separate school board, who moved the celebrated resolution which the board endorsed, refusing to carry out what the Ontario Educational Department orders in reference to bilingualism.

"People have a misapprehension regarding our attitude. It is not only the board, but the parents who object. What they are doing is telling their children to take their books and walk out of the separate schools when Protestant inspectors come. That is what they will do, too."

"Do you know of parents who have stated they intended to tell their children that?" asked a reporter.

"I do," declared Mr. Genest. "There is not a French-Ceadian father or mother in Ontario, or for that matter, in Quebec, but is anxious to have their children learn the English language as well as the French, so that they may be better able to fight the battle of life, but they object to regulations that will prevent their children getting an education. Most of the separate school pupils leave school at the age of 14, or before, and they cannot learn properly if they are not taught the subjects in their own languaie."

"There will be no backdown, so far as I know," said Mr. Genest when told that at Toronto Rev. Dr. Burke, president of the Roman Catholic Extension Society, had hinted that the Ottawa separate school board would back down in their attitude.

Mr. Genest says several boards elsewhere are in sympathy with the Ottawa one, and will take the same course they took. He will probably have something more to say regarding this at the next board meeting.

THE CAUSE OF CONSTIPATION

Constipation is, in some cases, the direct result from a torpid or slow acting Liver, brought about by the withholding of the flow of bile. This conditon is commonly allied with more or less indigestion and dyspepsia, partly due to the constipation itself.

Many persons have found it compaartively easy to overcome such conditons with a treatment of Rexall Liver Salts.

Collector Got 2300 Specimens

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Leo. E. Miller is back from South American swamps with a stuffed cock of the rock and a rat weighing nearly 50 pounds. Mr. Miller also narrowly missed forming the acquaintance of a tribe of cannibals who, from very obvious evidence, had eaten two Colombian rubber hunters shortly before before he wandered into the outskirts of their hunting grounds and was warned by a friendly tribe of the Uitoto Indians that their neighbors especially relished the flavor of Americans.

Mr. Miller, whose home is in Indianapolis, was sent to the tropical jungles of the southern continent eighteen months ago by the American Museum of Natural History to make a biological survey of the country. He was especially requested to bring back, if possible, information or specimens of the Rupicola, or cock of the rock, a bird about the size of a crow, of which very little has been learned.

Mr. Miller finally found the cock of the rock away up in the headwaters of the Magdalena river. He was able to obtain nests, eggs, and the young of the species. He also had an interesting few minutes with a tribe of monkeys when he carried off one of their young, a fine, healthy baby simian. The monkeys screeched and scratched, but with the aid of his Indian guides Mr. Miller was able to drive them off. In all Mr. Miller collected from 2,300 to 2,400 specimens of birds and animals. Among the latter were monkeys, sloths, deer, tiger cats, squirrels twenty inches long and several rats weighing 50 or more pounds each.

Entering Colombia at Buenaventura on the Bay of Choco, Mr. Miller penetrated into the Cauca Valley between the western and central ranges. After he had worked his way to the Choco coast westward through very unhealthy tropical swampland he proceeded south along the western range to the Macai mountains; he then climbed 15,200 feet to the top of the central range. After descending he explored the headwaters of the Magdalena river and the sources of the Amazon as far as the Caqueta territory. In all he cut his way 1,500 miles on foot through jungles and bamboo tangles where his progress at times was most discouraging.

Mr. Miller employed guides from the tribe of Uitoto Indians to pilot him through the worst morasses in the swamps. He obtained some valuable and interesting data concerning their habits and customs. The tribe lives in conical huts of bamboo with grass-thatched roofs, which are generally built on poles extending twenty feet from the ground. Bamboo ladders, which can be pulled up after them, reach from the huts to the ground. The Uitoto loves white grubs and ants as well as turtle eggs. The latter he cooks after placing them in the bottom of a canoe and mashing them into an omelet with his bare feet. They are then broiled with the heat of the sun and mixed with farina. The tribe uses the skins of boa constructors for their hammocks and constructs a very serviceable drum out of a section of the trunk of a tree, which they hollow out and cover with the skin of an animal.

The tribe of Andoque Indians which, Mr. Miller learned was fond of white men, use a bowgun ten feet long, with which they were infallible marksmen at distances which an ordinary shotgun will carry. Mr. Miller decided to avoid making their acquaintance.

BASEBALL.

JOHNNY EVERS—THE CUB "COME BACK."

You know John J. Evers, second baseman extraordinary of the Cubs. He is a real conflagration, is that keen little, umpire-fighting bundle of nerves, and he has kindled more distinctive fires around where the Giants play than any firebug in baseball He is a real, unadulterated Nemesis, that's what Johnny is.

You might think that this little, active body would not be sill long enough to be sketched and interviewed. But he did—he is surprisingly quiet and passive off the diamond, although it does not seem natural—and probably is not. Evers, you remember, succumbed to a nervous breakdown last year, and it was thought that his ball playing days were at an end.

Probably his doctor has taught him the art of relaxation and rest—anyway, he managed to hold still while he was talking to me.

Johnny is an extremely bright fellow. Brains are his biggest asset as a ball player, and it is not surprising that he has some ideas on the game himself. He emits conversation in a low, dry tone with a scholarly teq.

It's all science," says Johnny. "The days of the old free-hitting, loose-playing game are over—it's science combined with instinctive ability. Youngsters who would make good in the olden times are now sent back to the minors for more polish and seasoning . There is lots to know that the public does not know about and little imagines. One grows to be instinctive, too, I think, and develops a sense of what's what that is both involuntary and unconscious."

Johnny paused and lit a cigarette, maybe to soothe his nerves, but at least proving that a fire has to smoke, no matter how small.

"Take, for instance, that famous case when Merkle of the Giants failed to touch second. Why, I didn't know at the time that I was putting him out when I touched the bag myself. I was just settling on that for my life's trade, and was taken sick with painter's colic, a disease contracted from the poisons in the paints.

"Well, one day after that I happened to attend a ball game . It was on Labor Day, I remember, Sept. 6, 1902. The Troy team was playing the Cuban Giants." Here Johnny paused to light his cigarette—maybe I was getting nervous.

"So—," he blew a spiral at an offending fly, "I was a-settin in the grand stand near the player's bench, watching them practice, when I heard the manager of the Troy team moaning the loss of his shortstop. It seemed that this player had been taken suddenly ill, which left the team in a bad hole at the last moment. Well, sir, I heard him grumbling and swearing at the state of affairs until something happened to me—I could never describe it—I only know that I left my seat without a word to any one and vaulted over the rail to the players' bench, walked up to the manager, and told him that I was a ball player and to put me in the game as substitute for the sick shortstop.

"That was instinct, I guess—I don't know what else. I had never even hoped to be a ball player before.

"Well, the manager looked me over in a surprised sort of a way—I felt myself getting smaller than I already was and then said: 'Get in a suit, kid; I guess you will have to do.'

"I did! And I did pretty well, too, for the sick player was never able to get his job back again. I played regularly from the first game.

"The Cubs got me from there the following season, 1903, and I have been with them pretty regular ever since.

Yes, indeed, we echoed to ourselves. He certainly has been a regular—a regular demon, that's what . Ask the fans, the umpires, or the New York club.

"But it's all instinct," continued Johnny; "all instinct and science—the two qualities are related—it's instinctive for some to be scientfic for some to be instinctive—.

John's cigarette had gone out—he was getting nervous, I guess, or tired of talking so much.

"Lovely weather," he said; looking nervously at me.

Lovely weather—oh, yes—I understood.

"Good day," I said

High Jumping Record Broken

Ottawa, Sept. 16.—Hon. Clifford Sifton's champion jumper, Confidence, broke the world's high jumping record held by himself, at the closing day of the Central Canada Exhibition here on Saturday. The handsome hunter went over the bars while they were hoisted at 8 feet 1-2 inch. The previous record was 7 feet 10 3-4 inches made by Confidence at Cobourg not very long ago. In making his record leap he kicked over the under fence, but cleared the top bars without touching them. He was ridden by Jack Hamilton, who has been riding the Sifton jumpers for several years.

Confidence is a bay gelding nine years old. He is hackney bred, and there is a very interesting story in connection with his discovery. Five years ago Mr. Ed. J. Jones, the well known Ottawa horse dealer, was up in Peel County, Ont., looking for jumpers, and came across a farmer by the name of Hyat, who said he had the best green jumper in Western Ontario. He trotted out a well set up bay which looked well to Jones. A dicker for the animal started, the farmer asking $250 for him. Jones said he would not give that much, as he didn't know what the animal could do. Finally he offered $240. The farmer held out for $250.

"I'll show you what he can do," shouted the farmer, and he pulled a halter over the hunter's head, and mounting him sent him at the gate five and a half feet high. He went over with a lot to spare, and Jones had the money in the farmer's hand before he dismounted. That's how Confidence first broke into prominence.

Jones sold him to Senator Beith, who in turn sold him to Crow & Murray, and from those owners he was sold to Mr. Sifton. It is said he is worth from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars to-day.

Jones was also the man who purchased Hercules and Ironsides for the Sifton stables.

Hung Upside Down To Cure Diseases

Dr. W. E. McKechnie, in a recent issue of the Lancet, gave details of a remarkable cure effected by him in the case of a boy of 14 years, who had been continously ill since the beginning of an illness five years before. The boy was stunted in growth and the parents had given up hopes of a cure, as he had undergone much treatment without any benefit. Dr. McKecknie diagnosed liver abscess with, perforation of diaphram and pleura and secondary abscess in the base of the lung, with adhesion of lung liver and pleura to the diaphragm in the neighborhood of the perforation, with intermittent partial evacuation of the cavities in the liver and lung via the bronchi and trachea. The boy it should be stated, was continually coughing up pus. Dr. McKechnie came to certain conclusions, and acting on these, his treatment was simplicity itself. His own description is given in the following paragraph:

"I made the boy hang suspended over the edge of a table, head downward, the whole body hanging vertically upside down, the legs and thighs lying on the table and thus supported him. In this position he was made to cough and squeeze his chest until no more pus came out. By this means the abscess cavity was completely emptied and he was made to repeat the process five or six times a day. At first he got rid of large quantities of pus, but it rapidly diminished, and in about six weeks he ceased to have pus and was cured. His progress was remarkable . The whole boy altered, and a year afterward he had grown several inches and caught up with his younger brother. He became active, bright and cheerful, and was able to do his lessons with ease, instead of being very backward as he had been before.

"I think this is a good example of a simple application of the principle that we should allow the force of gravity to drain abscesses. This simple procedure cured in six weeks, without operation or pain, a condition which had lasted five years, had baffled other modes of treatment, threatened the life of the patient, made it a misery and prevented his growth. No other treatment was employed by me. I suggest that this postural method of treatment should be tried in abscess of the lung and bronchiectasis before resorting to the more formidable surgical procedures."

MUST FIND A MARKET

Canada Will Have to Get Rid of Surplus, Says Laurier.

Sturgeon Falls, Sept. 18.—The chief tendency of the speakers at Sir Wilfrid Laurier's opening meeting of his Ontario tour was to criticize the course of the present administration rather than to give an account of their own stewardship or reasons why the Liberals should again be placed in power at Ottawa. But a notable exception to this was the leader himself, who diverted the whole of the hour in which he occupied the platform to the advocacy of wider markets for the sale of Canada's future surplus supplies.

He asserted with a deal of emphasis that reciprocity is not a dead issue but that the "shallow" loyalty cry employed at the elections a year ago by the opponents of the pact resulted in a false step being taken by the electorate, from which the public will recover in the near future of its own accord, because markets must be found for Canadian products, which he anticipates will be left in the producers' hands, with results ruinous to the latter.

Mayor John Parker and council, backed up by the local members, met the Laurier party, and the former presented the civic address of welcome. Angus McInnis of Cache Bay read an address in English, while Theo. Legault spoke in French and Z. Mageau, M.P.P., the local member, gave the principal local address to the crowd.

G. A. McGaughey, mayor of North Bay and president of the Liberal Association, introduced Sir Wilfrid and complimented Sturgeon Falls and Z. Mageau, M.P.P., for the district, in being able to bring their leader here. The defeated Liberal candidates of the district also spoke.

"I thank Providence that I was born under British institutions," declared Sir Wilfrid Laurier. "Believing, as I am sure you will agree with me, that there is more freedom under the British flag than any other, because it is government of the people, for the people and by the people. But the people make mistakes sometimes and they did on Sept. 21 last.

Sir Wilfrid stated that he asked the Lord to forgive the people, for they knew not what they did, but he knew that the people individually could play their respective parts and retract past wrongs.

"I have no quarrel with those who voted against me," he continued, "but I do ask the people to consider the question with the best of judgment at this time, and I am sure they will realize their mistake.

"While other nations have reached the summit of their expansion we Canadians are just beginning to evolve; we have resources untold in every commodity, which have only to be tapped to produce ten times as much as the country can consume and therefore must find a market elsewhere," he said.

Sir Wilfrid said Canada already was in the position to supply Britain with all she wants and yet more, therefore wider markets must be sought to facilitate the disposal of enormous surpluses, which will accrue from year to year especially as the country is further developed. It was with the idea of disposing of such surpluses that he advocated the development of lines from east to west, and the same ambitions prompted them to look for foreign markets. He deprecated the annexation cry because, he said, loyalty was all his opponents had as an argument.

Hon. Charles Murphey dealt with newspaper rumors relating to members of the Borden Cabinet. The only combination they evidenced being the desire to combine to loot their friends and country, he said.

When referring to reciprocity he declared that the late Government was not defeated and never would be on a square deal, but rather slandered out of office, and to-day the slanderers were continuing their practices. "Today it is our business, too," said he, "to expose these falsifiers and changers of policy and recount some of the injuries that have been done during the past twelve months."

Hon. G. P. Graham dwelt upon the powers of the Minister of Railways in changing the location of railways after the people had sought for redress. He declared that Hon. Frank Cochrane had changed every plan his predecessor had endorsed to increase his own patronage prestige.

He also declared that the people of Sturgeon Falls had to thank Hon Frank Cochrane for their not being any C.N.R. line through their district.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux and Hon. W. L. M. King also spoke.

Men Developing Back to Apes

LONDON, Sept. 17.—"We are drifting toward the day when the average Englishman's face will be that of the typical criminal," is the gist of a statement by Dr. Forbes Ross. This horrible consummation, however, will not be reached till 2,000 years hence.

Dr. Ross gives two reasons for his forecast—first, the tendency of the better classes to curtail their numbers; second, the tendency of the more dissolute and less intelligent to increase out of all proper proportion.

Dr. Ross's picture of the average Englishman of the future follows:—

"The face of a typical criminal, with prognathous jaws, receding forehead, broad, flat nose, well marked canine teeth, small eyes, short neck, head set well back between the shoulders, and a depraved gorilla countenance."

"The better classes at the present day," concludes Dr. Ross, "cannot keep pace with the fearful stress of taxation, and are being replaced by a mixture of sheep and wild beasts." Needless to add, this outburst is reported as a serious argument against Lloyd-Georgism.

Dr. Ross is one of the few doctors in England who disagree with the rules of medical etiquette as regards advertisement laid down by the professional societies.

Marking Linen.

When using marking ink for linen make your initials on the linen with an ordinary lead pencil and then trace with your ink over the pencil marks. The pencil will prevent the ink from spreading and giving the linen a blotted appearance.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

CANAL BEGINS IN 1913.

Welland Project Will Then Be Rushed to Completion.

St. Catharines, Sept. 18.—Supt. J. L. Weller has issued a statement to the effect that construction work on the new Welland ship canal will commence early next summer, and will occupy five years in building. The cost will be about $50,000,000.

Tenders will, it is expected, be called for next winter, and work will be well under way by the end of 1913. Mr. Weller's opinion is that the work is in many ways as stupendous as the Panama Canal project. It will be almost as great an engineering undertaking as regards the locks, the walls of which will be just as high as those of the Panama Canal.

The plan to be followed is that the work is to proceed at various points, and be rushed to completion. Fifty to seventy-five steam shovels and several dredges will work at different sections at the same time.

Plans for the waterway are now almost finished and will be sent to Ottawa in a short time.

A large force of draftsmen and civil engineers is now engaged in offices here, while many drillers and engineers are at work along the route of the new waterway. In spite of the great work navigation will not be impeded in the least, but more rapid progress will be made during the winter, when there will be nothing to hinder.

The old channel will be used from Port Colborne as far as Thorold. There the new course will commence, and diverging somewhat to the east, will strike Ten Mile Creek and enter Lake Ontario near McCalla's Grove, three miles from Port Dalhousie, the present outlet. The length of the new section will be eight miles, and the total length of the waterway, when completed, 25 miles.

At Welland the east bank will not be touched, but widening will be done on the west bank.

Mr. Weller estimates that the canal will occupy about five years in building.

YOUNG MAN ARRESTED.

Owen Sound, Sept. 18.—With his head covered with bruises and cuts, George Green, aged about 70 years, a Fenian Raid veteran, is lying dead, and William Smith, aged 22, now under arrest, may have to answer to a serious charge.

Last Thursday Smith went to the Green home on East 11th street, where he had formerly boarded, and asked to be taken in again. He was refused and thereupon attacked another boarder named Weaver.

While the fight was in progress Mrs. Green ran out and 'phoned for the police. When she returned she met Smith leaving the house, and discovered her husband lying on the floor, bruised and insensible. She called medical aid at once and Green was removed to the hospital, where he died that morning without having recovered consciousness.

After viewing the remains the coroner's jury adjourned until to-night for a further hearing on the case.

George Green came to Owen Sound last year from Williamsford, where he had lived for many years. He was a frail old man, rather eccentric and was subject to fits. It is thought that he may have fallen down stairs and injured himself. This is the theory advanced by Smith.

Checked Flow of Water.

International Falls, Minn., Sept. 18. —Only one important point was brought out yesterday at the sitting of the International Waterways Commission, the fact that the Minnesota & Ontario Power Co. retarded the flow of water from Rainy Lake into Rainy River in July of last year, with the result that navigation was rendered exceedingly difficult, if not altogether impossible along the river route.

The commission will meet Thursday at War Road instead of Kenora, which will be visited on Saturday.

Canada No Longer Aloof.

London, Sept. 18.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Mr. F. E. Smith, M.P., landing yesterday after a tour of Canada, declared the Dominion showed a general desire to stand aloof no longer from the Empire's naval interests. Strong, definite action was welcomed by all classes. At the present rate of progress, said Mr. Smith, Canada promised to reproduce America's extraordinary development. Incidentally he remarked that he found no great amount of interest in America in the home rule controversy.

Must Not Be Raised.

Ottawa, Sept. 18.—That pending the conclusion of the enquiry now being conducted ito western freight rates, these are not to be increased by the railways was laid down as a rule yesterday by Chairman H. L. Drayton, K.C., the new head of the railway board, who took his seat for the first time.

R. E. Cook To Be Reinstated.

Ottawa, Sept. 18.—Following the investigation conducted by the public service commission into the Government Printing Bureau, which brought about the dismissal of R. E. Cook, the announcement made last night after the meeting of the Cabinet Council, that the Government would appoint an assistant superintendent of printing, is regarded as significant.

The Marine Commission recommended the reinstatement of Mr. Cook and it is believed that he will be given the new position.

Rescued "Oliver Mowat's" Crew.

Kingston, Sept. 18.—The schooner Oliver Mowat, the oldest schooner running out of this port, went aground on Yorkshire Island, Lake Ontario in a heavy fog yesterday morning, and members of the crew had to be taken off in a yawl.

The schooner was running light on the way to Oswego to load coal. The steamer Donnelly of the wrecking company was sent to raise the vessel. Luckily no lives were lost.

TO CHECK INVASION.

British Manufacturers Will Fight American Products.

London, Sept. 18.—Twenty leading British manufacturers discussed a campaign to oppose the American invasion at a luncheon given yesterday by Ralph D. Blumenfeld, editor of The London Express, which is promoting a movement against American automobiles.

The formation of a big British corporation or the combination of existing companies and the establishment of a protective tariff were the definite plans proposed. Several of the manufacturers made speeches, in which they all agreed that the British factories and workmen should supply the home market with low-priced machines, many thousand of which are now coming to England from America.

A letter sent by the Duke of Westminster, read at the luncheon, disclosed the fact that the Imperial preference league is raising a fund of $2,500,000 to be used in preparing a propaganda in favor of an Imperial tariff and an imperial preference scheme, which would give some of the colonial market to British manufacturers.

There was much talk of gaining the colonial market. A difference of opinion prevailed regarding the quality of American low-priced cars. S. F. Edge, a well-known automobilist, contended that the British stopped an invasion of American bicycles and boots by producing better articles, but that American cars were in a different class.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

The French army manoeuvres were brought to an end with a sham battle yesterday.

Five new big engines have been ordered for the Intercolonial Railway. These are in addition to the ten ordered some time ago.

It is understood that the contract for a new customs warehouse at Montreal has been let by the Government. The building will cost $999,000.

The Government has just let the contract to a British shipbuilding firm for the construction of a fine new ship for the Dominion Hydrographic Department.

James Donnelly, 15 years old, son of Mrs. C. Donnelly, was shot in the abdomen yesterday while playing with a rifle on the C.P.R. track at Sault Ste. Marie, with Russell McFadden, a playmate.

Following the death of Jas. Robertson, who was killed when he fell down an elevator shaft in Toronto yesterday, Hugh Taylor, elevator operator, was placed under arrest on a charge of manslaughter.

May Take Over Schools.

Winnipeg, Sept. 18.—At the recent session of the Manitoba Legislature an amendment to the Manitoba school law was introduced by Hon. G. R. Caldwell, Minister of Education, and enacted, having the effect of permitting the segregation of Roman Catholic children in separate school rooms under the public school system. Out of this has grown the proposition that the Winnipeg Public School Board shall take over the parochial schools maintained in this city by Roman Catholics.

It is understood that the minority is urging that this shall be done, but has encountered tacit opposition from the public schools. However, a settlement satisfactory to both parties appears in sight by the proposition to establish in Winnipeg the system which is in operation at Halifax and which is said to work well there. Under such an agreement the Catholics will build their own schools and the public school board leases the building and administers the schools.

Free Fight In Parliament.

Budapest, Sept. 18.—The Hungarian Parliament, which began its opening session yesterday, was the scene in the afternoon of a free fight between the police and the deputies. The violence was unprecedented and the din of the trumpets, motor horns and cow bells continued all day long.

The commandant of police called upon individual deputies to leave the house. About one hundred of them gathered in the centre of the chamber, while their leaders, Count Apponyi and Count Zichy, stood at the gangways and were joined there by Count Andrassy and Count Semsey, who are not affiliated with any particular party. All attempts to induce them to leave peaceably failed. The police advanced to expel them and a terrific struggle ensued, in which clenched fists were used freely.

Buy Street Car Lines.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 18.—The City Council Monday night adopted a resolution instructing the city legal department to take steps to acquire the Duluth Street Railway as city property.

The action of the council was due to the strike, which has been in progress for a week, attended by more or less serious rioting, and the alleged refusal of the manager of the street railway company to arbitrate differences with nine of its employes. A special election will be called to pass on public ownership. An act of the Legislature, which assembles next January, will be necessary to authorize an issue of bonds.

Brakeman Fatally Crushed.

London, Ont., Sept. 18.—Brakeman Higgins, aged 25 years, son of Conductor Higgins, of Stratford, was caught between cars at Forest yesterday, and so badly crushed that little hope is held out for his recovery.

Ideal Weather for Harvest.

Winnipeg, Sept. 18.—The weather yesterday was much warmer than it has been for the last three or four days, and was ideal for the remainder of the harvesting and threshing. The majority of the places heard from report clear, bright skies, with field operations progressing satisfactorily.

Frost appeared at a large number of points in Saskatchewan and Alberta Monday night, with six degrees reported at Coronation, Alberta, and Moose Jaw, Sask. There were heavy frosts over northern Manitoba, but none in this vicinity, and south to the boundary high temperatures prevailed.

Threshing is completed on the farm of McLennaghan and Stevens, adjoining the town of Portage la Prairie. Threshing machines show the crop as going thirty-nine bushels to the acre and the elevator weighs forty pounds of No. 1 northern quality. The whole of the Portage plains, it is expected, will show similar results.

Steam Barge Missing.

Kingston, Sept. 18.—Enquiries are being made for the steam barge Adiramled which has been engaged in the coal trade between Lake Ontario coal ports and Montreal. The vessel has mysteriously disappeared with its crew, and it is feared may have been lost.

License Inspector Quits.

Durham, Sept. 18.—Thomas Davis, South Grey's license inspector, has resigned his post, his duties to cease on October 1. The poor pay allowed for the position and the dissatisfaction of the temperance people were the chief causes of the resignation.

Shoplifters Sentenced.

Toronto, Sept. 18.—In the police court yesterday Mamie Stewart of Brantford was sentenced to six months in the Mercer for shoplifting in Eaton's.

Florence Libby of Fairbank denied attempting to steal a quantity of cloth from the same store on Monday afternoon. She stated that she had forgotten that it was on her arm when she walked out of the store. Mrs. Libby was committed for trial on a bail of $100. When the magistrate had given his decision she collapsed.

C.P.R.-Allan Merger Denied.

Montreal, Sept. 18.—Once more an official denial of a statement that the C.P.R. and the Allan Steamship Lines had merged has been issued here. This time Mr. Andrew Allan has been responsible for the contradiction, and the cause of it was a report of the merger cabled from London.

Mr. Allan said all the talk about the C.P.R. and the Allan Line had been caused by their entering into a mutually satisfactory arrangement in regard to the handling of business at St. John, N.B., in the winter.

Battleships to Burn Oil.

London, Sept. 18.—Oil fuel, The Daily Express yesterday said, is to supplant coal in the newest British battleships. Ismay Is Mum.

Douglas, Ariz., Sept. 18.—"If the Mexican Government should permit the United States troops to cross the international line to protect Americans in Mexico a revolution much more serious than the present one would be the result."

This was the opinion expressed by Gen. Sanjines, who spent several hours is Douglas yesterday. There would be no safety in Mexico for either those permitting so extreme a move or for Americans, the general said.

Sues Gaynor for $100,000.

New York, Sept. 18.—Mayor Gaynor was served yesterday with a summons in a $100,000 libel suit brought against him by Ald. Curran, chairman of the aldermanic committee, investigating graft in the police department. Curran alleges that the mayor made remarks derogatory to his character in connection with the investigation.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Sept. 17.—There continues to be a good enquiry for new crop Manitoba spring wheat from foreign buyers, and some business is doing by exporters who are long on ocean freights at much lower rates than are demanded today, as the prices bid for wheat based on present freight rates are away out of line. NERVOUSNESS
RESPONSIBLE FOR MANY TROUBLES.

Do you suffer from palpitation of the heart, headache, cold hands or feet, creepy sensations, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervousness, hysteria? These symptoms show a condition of

EXHAUSTED OR DEBILITATED NERVE FORCE.

The natural function of every organ is absolutely under control of the nerve centres, and thus nervousness may bring on DIABETES, KIDNEY DISEASE, INWARD DISEASES, and other troubles so often seen in run-down, nervous girls and women, simply because the organs have not a healthy nervous system to control them.

Every girl and woman should keep her NERVOUS SYSTEM STRONG AND WELL BALANCED. RESTORATONE TABLETS will do this. They purify the blood and restore the nervous system to its normal healthy standard and put the power of resistance in the tissues. They are a composition of great value as a food for the nerves, a tonic to all organs and a regulator of diseased conditions peculiar to girls and women. The profitable experience of others should be sufficient reason why you should give them a trial. One box will convince you of their merits. Read the rules for health on circular accompanying each box.

Price 50 cts. a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50. If you cannot procure RESTORATONE TABLETS at your druggist's, they will be cheerfully sent you postpaid on receipt of price, by writing THE RESTORATONE CO., LIMITED, Toronto, Canada. 3

Condition That Is Regrettable

Canada imported from New Zealand during the year ending March 31st, 1912, 2,139,844 pounds of butter. From the United States also came 929,318 pounds.

The above paragraph is the cardinal feature of the annual report of Chief Commissioner Ruddick of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. It conveys a lesson to farmers of this country that should not go unheeded. For years Canada has held an enviable position as a producer of high class dairy products, and there is no apparent reason why it should not only be maintained but expanded. Canada is essentially an agricultural country and is destined to continue such for many years to come. We have the soil that is capable of producing the finest goods in all departments to a practically unlimited extent, and why it is necessary to import large quantities of an always staple article like butter is hard to comprehend. The reason for such importations it would appear at least is in a large measure the fault of the producers. The Governments, federal and provincial, have spent large sums, and are still engaged in the work of educating Canadian farmers to improve and enlarge the output. Splendid facilities are now in vogue for getting adequate returns from the land. A healthy rivalry from without is a good thing in any kind of business. However, the fact remains just the same that the importation of so large a quantity of butter is a sad reflection on the mercantile vision of those in a position to produce the goods now being so profusely imported. A reason may exist in the west for not making the dairy industry the prime factor, but even in that section there is no excuse other than the well known fact that farmers out there go in more for specializing in cereals and leaving mixed production very much alone. The same reason cannot be offered in Ontario, whose lands are not producing anything resembling capacity. True it is that the manufacture of dairy goods requires a lot of help. The work is laborious. No person will deny it, but at the same time a much large volume could be produced with the same help and equipment as at present, if a little more interest and vigor were put into the cause. Canada, with its splendid climatic conditions should not play second fiddle to any country in the production of agricultural products. The present importations are not, to say the least, creditable to all concerned. They are regrettable indeed.

New Regulations For U. S. Press

WASHINGTON, D.C., Sept. 17.—Postmaster-General Hitchcock has issued instructions for carrying into effect the new newspaper and periodical law, first returns under which must be made by October 1.

The law requires that publishers shall file on the first days of April and October each year, both with the Postmaster-General and with the local postmaster, under penalty of denial of the use of the mails, a sworn statement of the names and addresses of the owner, publisher, editor, managing-editor and business manager, of their newspapers and periodicals. Religious, fraternal, temperance and scientific publications are excepted. For a corporation, the names of the holders of more than one per cent. of the stocks, bonds or other securities must be given, and, in the case of daily newspapers, a statement of the average paid circulation for the preceding six months, is required.

All editorial or other reading matter appearing in a newspaper or magazine for the publication of which pay is accepted or promised, must be marked "Advertisement," under penalty of a fine of not less than $50 or more than $500.

"Although this law was not favored by the Postoffice Department," said Postmaster-General Hitchcock, "it will be administered faithfully and impartially. In framing the act Congress doubtless had in mind the leading daily newspapers, but it will also affect nearly eighteen thousand weeklies. Many of these publications are having a hard struggle for existence and will find the making of returns a considerable burden.

LIKE A CENSORSHIP.

"In my judgment, and I so expressed it to the Congress—the provision will be harmful, as it will require the continuous use of valuable space in the publications and, at the same time, be resented as a censorship of the press."

Particulars of a change of time, which will be of interest to residents of the cities and towns along the Eastern lines of the Canadian Northern Railway and the Central Ontario Railway will be found on another page of this paper.

The solid vestibuled train service and convenient schedules of the Canadian Northern Railway offer exceptional opportunities to the every day traveler who appreciates a maximum of travelling comfort. a17d1t

This convention will run concurrently with the Child Welfare Exhibition and be favored with the best authorities in Canada and the United States as speakers.

Gunmen Walked New York Streets Freely

This information was the most important result of yesterday's investigation into the death of Herman Rosenthal, the second which had been made since the arrest of "Gyp" and "Lefty." The day was marked by many other developments, however.

Next in importance, perhaps, to the information obtained about the movements of the gunmen was the attempt made by the District Attorney's office to throw discredit on the capture of the men by Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty.

Assistant District Attorney Frank Moss, acting in place of District Attorney Whitman, who is now in Hot Springs, made it clear that he had his own opinion of the accuracy of Mr. Dougherty's acount of the arrest of the gunmen.

Mr. Moss incorporated in an information which he handed to Supreme Court Justice Goff his suspicion that material evidence had been suppressed by the police, and as a result Justice Goff sat yesterday morning in a John Doe proceeding as a committing Magistrate, and called before him not only Mr. Dougherty, but the latter's secretary, George Young, and several of the detectives who had taken part in the capture of "Gyp" and "Lefty."

The hearing was not concluded and will be continued this morning. At its expiration, however, Mr. Moss admitted that, so far as he had been able to learn, no letter had been discovered in the flat occupied by the gunmen and their wives. It was the story brought to him late Sunday night, that forty letters had been found in the flat which started Mr. Moss on a private investigation.

New York, Sept. 17.—An amazing story credited to "Gyp the Blood" and "Lefty Louie" by their counsel, former Magistrate Charles F. Wahle, will be investigated to-day by acting District Attorney Moss in his John Doe hearing to establish all facts possible in connection with the gunmen's arrest.

Wahle, who also represents the other accused gunmen, had a long conference with "Gyp" and "Lefty" late yesterday, after which he announced that they would not "join the chorus of confessors in the Rosenthal murder," adding that the two gangsters had nothing to confess.

"Gyp" and "Lefty," according to their story, had nothing to do with Rosenthal's murder, but they knew they were being 'hunted.'

"Any story that they have made a confession or are about to make one is nonsense," said Wahle. "They insist that they had no part in the murder and they know nothing about the circumstances."

The two gangsters told Assistant District Attorney Moss the same thing when he questioned them on Saturday night.

"Why didn't you surrender if you were inocent and had clean records?" he asked.

Evidence was unearthed yesterday which showed that Morris Goldstein, a member of the Jack Zelig gang, rented and furnished two flats in Williamsburg ten days after the murder of Rosenthal for the gunmen charged with the assassination who had escaped arrest.

Later Goldstein fitted out a flat at 756 Woodward Avenue, Brooklyn, as a hiding place for "Lefty" and "Gyp" The police believe he is the go-between for the man or men who were supplying the gangsters with money.

Goldstein runs a pool and billiard establishment at 235 East Broadway. Police were hunting throughout the East Side for Goldstein last night, but he was nowhere to be found.

Goldstein and Lefty Louie have been friends since boyhood. They both were born in Suffolk Street, and as children they belonged to the same street gang.

After a man has been married six months, he never takes a friend home to dine without first letting his wife know.

Why Have "Nerves?"

This is the reason why women have "nerves." When thoughts begin to grow cloudy and uncertain, impulses lag and the warnings of pain and distress are sent like flying messages throughout limbs and frame, straightway, nine times in ten, a woman will lay the cause of the trouble to some defect at the point where she first felt it. Is it a headache, a backache, a sensation of irritability or twitching and uncontrollable nervousness, something must be wrong with the head or back, a woman naturally says, but all the time the real trouble very often centers in the womanly organs. In nine cases out of ten the seat of the difficulty is here, and a woman should take rational treatment for its cure. The local disorder and inflammation of the delicate special organs of the sex should be treated steadily and systematically.

Dr. Pierce, during a long period of practice, found that a prescription made from medicinal extracts of native roots, without the use of alcohol, relieved over 90 per cent. of such cases. After using this remedy for many years in his private practice he put it up in form of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, that would make it easily procurable, and it can be had at any store where medicines are handled.

MRS. LILA B. HAWKINS, of Zeus, Va., writes: "I had been failing in health for two years—most of the time was not able to attend to my household duties. Female weakness was my trouble and I was getting very bad but, thanks to Doctor Pierce's medicines, I am well and strong again. I took only three bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' and used the 'Lotion Tablets.' I have nothing but praise for Doctor Pierce's wonderful medicines."

By JAMES GRANT

This group was startling enough in itself; but what were my emotions on recognizing among them the figure of Vonga, and in another, whose smaller and more graceful form was partly hidden by a large striped European shawl, Mariqua.

Mariqua here in pursuit of me, doubtless, and with intentions that were not all loving probably; for I now perceived that my quondam wife was armed with a rifle, and it was a weapon which I knew she could use to some purpose.

To advance would be to attract the attention of those whose solicitude about my movements would soon prove very troublesome; to retire would bring me again among the Amapondas, who were now doubtless following up the trail of their runaway horses, and were perhaps within a few miles of me. So for some minutes after making this startling and most unwelcome discovery I was completely bewildered.

I knew that, to reach the provinces of Colesberg or Richmond, my route must lie south-west, and that ultimately I should certainly gain the shelter of civilized men at last; yet my way must lie through that very plain which my pursuers could overlook.

One fact was clear enough—the danger of lingering where I was. Already the Kaffirs had begun their breakfast, and some were actually preparing to move. I could see the impatient Mariqua hand her rifle to a Fingo slave, and mounting a pure white horse—Mariqua, doubtless now inflamed by pride, passion, and revenge, 'like a beautiful wild beast upon the trail.'

I imagined I could see—even at the distance we were apart—a cruel look in her dark eyes when she handled her rifle—a look like that of Miami, in the "Green Bushes," when she fires at her recreant lover.

Compunction was past now, and flight was still my sole object—flight and escape. A long belt of forest, that extended southward from the base of the cliffs, seemed to offer me shelter and concealment. Descending with all the speed I could permit my nag to use on such a steep and broken ground, I made a detour of a mile or two round the angle of the cliffs, rode through the wood, and after an hour or so of devious troublesome progress, impeded by underwood below, baboon ropes and branches above, by fallen trees and the wondrous luxuriance of the foliage, I was once more on the open plain, and free, as I hoped, to pursue my lonely way unseen and uninterrupted; but I hoped for this in vain, for barely had I emerged from the wood, when a yell pierced my ear, and a musket shot whistled past me, barking a mimosa tree close by.

Turning furiously, I unslung my rifle. About fifty paces from me was a mounted Kaffir, whom I recognized to be one of Vonga's men—an advanced scout, apparently—galloping rearward at full speed, no doubt to announce that he had seen me, and to state where my trail would be found.

His death would be my only safey. I levelled at him fairly between my horse's ears, and fired both barrels; but either it was the rearing of the animal, or that my nerves were unstrung by all I had undergone, for, though a dead shot, I missed him. Reloading in hot haste, and using my knife as a goad, being without spurs, I urged my horse to his full speed over the plain, towards where the blue mountain ridges were rising and for nearly twenty miles I rode on at a gallop, stopping only at an occasional time to breathe the animal, to look back, or to avoid some rent in the dry soil or jungle, where perhaps the puff-adder and scolpendra lurked.

On looking back about midday, on the distant verge of the level plain, I could see a line of black dots appearing, and once or twice a flash of light—the silver sheen of a gunbarrel. These were doubtless my pursuers, Vonga and his men, coming on.

And now before me stretched a vast river, rolling in sunny light from the south to the north, and barring all further flight—the Great Orange River, I supposed it to be, and such it proved eventually—and the sight of that broad expanse of silvery water filled me with despair.

I reined in my horse above the stream, and a cold perspiration broke over me with the thoughts of recapture—torture—death.

I conceived the idea of urging my horse into the stream, which at its narrowest part seemed fully one hundred and eighty yards broad; but I knew not his power of swimming, or his tricks. I was little or no swimmer, and the brute might "turn a turtle" with me, and leave me to drown. Seen now, and with these unwearying savages on my trail, concealment on the north bank was hopeless.

Besides, my way lay beyond this bridgeless stream, for there were those whom I now despaired of eluding unless I crossed it.

"To cross it; but how—how? Heaven help me heaven aid me!" I exclaimed, with fervour, and leaped from my horse.

The invocation was not uttered in vain, for suddenly a happy thought inspired me.

Close by the river bank there grew several large trees covered with a thick rind, or bark, resembling that of the corkwood; and with my hatchet I proceeded to cut off a flake of this, about six feet long and three feet broad. Green and full of sap it was, and I had trouble in getting it detached unbroken, and in such a state as to suit my purpose; but it was soon achieved, and as there were neither sight nor sound of my pursuers yet, I proceeded to work quietly and steadily to form it into an impromptu boat, by tying a tough vine trailer round it amidships to keep the bark curved in its natural form.

I then stopped up the ends by huge plugs, or masses of the thick red clay that lay by the riverside. Next, cutting a branch to serve as a paddle I stepped in and shoved off, in the hope that, if I failed to cross the stream, I might at least reach an islet in the mid-channel.

My progress in such a craft was slow—slow as the crawling of a snail, though I paddled vigorously on each side alternately, and got it out into the mid-stream, when, with intense mortification and anxiety, I saw the clay dropping out and disappearing fast from stem and sern; but a more pressing fear came over me when I heard the yells of Vonga's men becoming louder and louder, and saw them, their horses covered with white foam, their eyes and teeth shining their crane's feathers and tiger-skin karosses, their brandished assegais and leveled rifles, their wild ferocious, and most fantastic tout ensemble—and, horror! there, too, was Mariqua—as they came crashing down the steep bank at full speed, and leaping from their horses, betook them to their weapons, sending shot after shot, and making the water start in silver spouts around me.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Often have these Kaffirian episodes came back to me in my dreams, causing me to start and wake with horror and affright; for again I seem to see the brawny and naked forms, so lithe, so sinewy, and shining with oil, their fierce visages and crane's feathers, their gleaming eyes and sharpset teeth; and I seem also to hear their yells, with the crack of the rifle and the hiss of the launched assegai, in my dreamy ear. And Adrian Africander and the day in the chasm often come in those visions of the night, and the black ingratitude of this "man and brother," as the preachers would call him, was indeed bitter as the winter wind, though fearfully avenged at last.

Whether it was the fierce impatience of Vonga's men, or that they were bad marksmen, I know not; but, thank heaven, all their shots fell wide of the mark, and untouched by them, I paddled my frail craft, which was filling fast, towards a rocky islet, and had barely reached that spot and swung myself by the branch of a drooping tree upon dry land, when the roll of bark which had so well served my purpose filled with water and sank slowly out of sight.

The islet was a mere rock, about a quarter of an acre in extent, but covered with verdure, for there the snowy jasmine, the blue plumbago, and the pink geranium were all growing together, and the place was literally alive with wild doves, which rose into the air like a white cloud, and flew hither and thither with affright when the muskets from the bank I had quitted opened fire upon me, sending streaks of red fire and spouts of white smoke out of the green jungle and mangroves, while the reports rang in the welkin, and the round bullets starred the rocky face of the isle.

Bathed in perspiration, for the heat of the day was intense and overpowering, I lay down on my face under the cover of the rocky crest of the place, and selecting one or two Kaffirs whose woolly caputs were more prominently visible than others for a quiet pot shot, I sent a pair of conical rifle balls at them, and had the satisfaction to see them toss up their black hands, and tumble over with a yell that indicated agony and fear.

The men of the chief, Vonga—who, like Mariqua never sought concealment, but rode about gesticulating and exposed to my fire, of which they evidently had no fear—manifested no intention of swimming off to the isle. Perhaps they were deterred by the presence of two huge hoppopotami, each weighty as five or six oxen, whom the sound of the firing had brought out of the tall herbage of the fens and the muddy ooze of he river. One of those enormous and most repulsive-looking brutes, with a brown and hairless body fully fourteen feet long, kept wading close by the islet, as if to bar any attempt I might make to escape on the southern side.

Punch and Judy.

Italy boasts of the first Punch and Judy show. It originated in that country in the seventeenth century and was introduced into England during the reign of Charles II.

Tattooing In Persia.

Until the last generation tattooing was almost universal in Persia. Today it is rare among the upper classes, but is still affected by the lower classes. Women are tattooed not so much with a view to decoration as to avert the "evil eye" or to hide a blemish or to cure a malady.

Tax on Bachelors.

In some of the towns of Hungary a special tax is levied on bachelors, ranging from a few cents to about $20 per annum.

Octopus and Conger Eel.

Conger eels hunt for the octopus and when found proceed to browse on its limbs. The octopus tries to hug the slippery, slimy conger tight, but in vain, and, finding its limbs growing fewer, discharges its ink in the face of the foe and under cover of the turbid water beats a hasty retreat.

An English Ounce.

The precise weight of an English ounce was fixed by Henry III., who decreed that it should weigh 640 grains of dry wheat.

The Cuckoo.

The cuckoo is too flighty a lady to be willing to sit in a nest and hatch out eggs, so she lays in the nests of other birds, one here and one there, and to complete the deception she abstracts an egg from the nest she lays in so that the addition of her own egg won't be noticed.

Champagne Bottles.

No machine has as yet been invented in France which can supersede manual labor in the manufacture of champagne bottles. The men performing this difficult work are well paid.

The greatest depth of the sea yet discovered is 32,080 feet.

Beets, Carrots and Parsnips.

Beets, carrots and parsnips all contain a large percentage of sugar. Carrots and parsnips when young and tender are very nutritious.

Vanity of Elephants.

Elephants are passionately fond of finery and delight to see themselves decked out with gorgeous trappings. The native princes of India are very particular in choosing their state elephants and will give fabulous sums for an animal that exactly meets the somewhat fanciful standards they have erected. For these they have made cloths of silk so heavily embroidered with gold that two men are hardly able to lift them.

Liquor Cases Tried at Kingston

Special

KINGSTON, Sept. 18.—Joe McConnell was before Police Magistrate Farrell this morning charged with selling liquor without a license. The charge was proved against him and he was fined $100 or 3 months in jail.

Before Col. George Hunter and J. W. Bradshaw at the Court House, John Fisher, a brewer, was charged with selling liquor to Charles Fraleck in a local option township. He was found guilty and fined $20 and costs or a month in jail.

Charles Fraleck was charged with keeping liquor for sale in a local option township and without the license required therefor. He was sent to jail for four months without hard labor. The sentence was given on account of it being the second offence. It was suggested that the liquor be sold and the proceeds given to the Consumptive Hospital.

The decision in the McIlroy liquor case from the township of Portland, which was to be given at this sitting was postponed until Saturday, on account of the absence of the defendant's solicitor, Mr. Rigney, who was out of the city.

One in Twelve Accused of Crime

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept .18.—One man in every 12 residing permanently in Atlantic City has been accused of some crime, and will come up for consideration before the October term of the grand jury.

At this term 600 new cases have already been listed. With these will be considered 200 referred to the October term and disposed of at special sessions.

Two hundred more are in the hands of the special counsel for the Attorney-General in connection with gambling and election of cure officers, which must be tried by the October jurymen.

About 800 of these cases concern men, the others being confined to women.

The voting population of Atlantic City is 10,000.

A ROMANCE OF WRECKING: PLUCK IN LAKE SUPERIOR

SARNIA. Ont., Sept. 18.—Towing 265 feet of the wrecked steamer W. C. Moreland, the tugs Fisher and Reid of the Reid Wrecking Co.'s fleet steamed into Sarnia early this morning, signalling the close of one of the most remarkable wrecking feats ever undertaken in the history of the Great Lakes.

From the time that the new steamer Moreland went ashore on Sawtooth reef, Lake Superior, in November, 1910, until this morning, when the after end of this once magnificent craft was tied up to Clark's dock at Sarnia, wrecking history has been made. Never before in the annals of the Great Lakes have men undergone such hardships, or has there been a finer exhibition of nerve, daring and pluck to wrest a prize from the relentless grasp of the elements. In this unequal fight the Reids and their men never lost hope. Often the Moreland was floated and everything was in readiness to tow the wrecked steamer into a sheltering port, when with a suddenness that was appalling, a raging storm would compel the wreckers to look after their own safety and again abandon the steamer to the elements. These were but a few of the incidents which are woven into the wrecking story of the Moreland.

To-day what is left of one of the finest steel boats of modern times is tied up at the dock at Sarnia, with steam pumps working. It is the prise for which the Reids and their men fought for nearly two years. The valuable machinery of the boat, the boilers, the anchors and the chains, the pumps, in fact the most valuable part of the once proud steamer has been salvaged. It is estimated that the portion of the steamer which has been saved is worth between $150,000 and $200,000, as the machinery can be made as good as new. Just what disposition will be made of the boat is not known, but a marine man stated that with the expenditure of $125,000 the Moreland could be made as good as new. She will be taken to Detroit later.

Fell 450 Feet, Then Had Lunch

Special

PARIS Sept. 18.—H. De Astley, the English aviator, with Miss Mary Davies as a passenger, went from Bonn to Liege to-day, whence they started for London at noon in a monoplane. While trying to descend near Ronchn camp, near Lille, the lever would not work, and the machine came down violently a distance of 450 feet. Astley and his woman passenger had a marvelous escape.

Four Engineers Lost in Rapids

Special

LE PAS, Man., Sept. 18,—Henry McKay, of Grand Rapids, who arrived here, has brought some further details of the recent drowing accident there. It appears that at 10 o'clock Friday morning, just below the Denichards Rapids on Crosse Lake, where the camp of Gunn's Hydrographical Survey party was pitched, the four men, who belonged to the party, had left with supplies, but drifted with the canoe on to Smith's Island in a southeast gale and were not seen since. Having noticed that the men appeared to have some difficulty to steady their canoe when at a distance from the land, Engineer Gunn, when the time for their return elapsed, started out in search for them, and not finding them where they should have landed, went up the eastern shore as far as Station Three of the work, which he reached about sunset.

Not finding them there he retraced his course in the hope that he would find them at camp, but when he arrived about midnight they had not returned. The next morning he sent word to Grand Rapids for help, and when this arrived started up the eastern shore as far as the narrows at the northern extremity of Crosse Lake, a distance of eight miles.

In the meantime Mr. McKay and others arrived from Grand Rapids, and, canoeing between the islands and the eastern shore, finally came across the upset canoe and some clothes which had been washed ashore, and which left no doubt that the worst had happened, and that the men, seeing that they had no chance to escape, had disrobed themselves the better to battle against the elements. The missing men are Hugh M. Cochrane and William McMillan of Lindsay, Ont, and George A. White, and Fred McLennan of Winnipeg.

"Niobe" Goes Home for Crew

OTTAWA, Sept. 18.—The Atlantic fleet of the present Canadian Navy, H.M.C.S. Niobe, is to sail to England in November to take on a new crew. The Niobe has been undergoing repairs ever since her disastrous visit to the coast off Shelbourne County a little over a year ago.

JUMPED FROM MASONIC TEMPLE.

CHICAGO, Sept 18.—Prevented from jumping to his death in the interior of the Masonic Temple Building by wire nets, C. R. Rasmussen climbed to the roof of the twenty two storey structure and jumped off.

His corpse crashed on the roof of an adjoining building, fourteen storeys below, with such force that the plaster was knocked from ceilings within the structure.

Suicides had become so frequent in the interior of the Masonic Temple that wire nets had been stretched to protect people in the rotunda from bodies falling from the upper floors.

Every bone in Rasmussen's body was broken. He was an insurance solicitor, and was 22 years of age. There was no apparent reason for his act.

LIBERALS, CONSERVATIVES, AND WIDER MARKETS

One would fancy that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Mr. Lemieux, with their immediate followers, were the only statesmen in the land who were in favor of wider markets for Canada. It really is to laugh. The Conservative party stands, to-day, as it has always stood, for wider markets, whether with France, Germany, England or the United States. But, while this is so, the Conservative party does not stand for wider markets at all costs—does not stand, for instance, for wider markets that would involve a sacrifice on the part of Canada which might imperil the position of our farmers or our manufacturers or for wider markets that would tend to make us merely an adjunct of the United States. Even the most ardent advocate of reciprocity in the recent election must surely question with himself whether or not he was right in his advocacy, in view of the shocking disclosure of the hypocritical attitude of President Taft, who at the very moment that he was extending the olive branch to Canada was writing a private letter to ex-President Roosevelt, setting forth that, did reciprocity pass, Canada would in the end be nothing more than the tail to the American kite. On top of this we have seen in the last few weeks, through the violation of the Panama treaty, that the American Congress, even in the face of public opinion, has no regard for sacred treaty rights but will violate them whenever for chaep political purposes it may seem desirable. If, then, this Panama Canal treaty could be so lightly avoided, how much easier would be the avoidance of a mere trade agreement—and especially if it seemed to the advantage of the States that it should be avoided, despite that such a step might have a decidedly unsettling effect upon Canada and Canadian trade.

However, in respect to wider markets that involve no sacrifice on our part, we fancy that the Liberal leaders will not convince many people that they have the first, original and only claim to credit for a desire along those lines. The Conservatives themselves want wider markets and realize that an expanding country like Canada must have them. But they also realize this, that so far as the United States are concerned their markets will be open to us much more freely in a few months, that at present, and without any concession on Canada's part—and for the simple reason that Democratic victory in he Presidential contest, seems assured. With it will of necessity come lower duties and consequently a readier entry of outside products, including Canada's, into the American markets.

The Democrats are committed to this policy, and what is more the people want it.

Wider markets will come to Canada—and at no sacrifice to herself.—Kingston Standard.

Douro Farmer Killed on Rail

Special

PETERBOROUGH, Sept. 18.—Mr. John White, for many years a resident of Douro Township, and who for the past nine years had lived near Norwood, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon by the C. P. R. express arriving at Peterborough at 4.17 p.m. It seems that Mr. White and his nephew, Mr. John Baskin, were attending to some business opposite the station, and that as the through express approached at full speed they rushed to cross the tracks to the station platform. Mr. White had almost cleared the tracks, in fact had one foot on the platform when the train struck him. He was thrown under the wheels and terribly cut and mangled, death, of course, being instantaneous. The accident occurred in full view of many people who were waiting at the station to take the train which follows a few minutes after the express.

The Coroner, Dr. Kincaid, of Havelock, who was coming up on the train viewed the remains. An inquest will be held later.

The deceased, who was a resident of the Township of Douro for many years, removed to Norwood about 9 years ago, and has since that time carried on the occupation of a farmer. He was 58 years of age and leaves a wife and a large family to mourn his loss. The sons are Albert and Fred, in the West, and Wm. and Robert at home; and the daughters are Mrs. F. Haskill, Norwood; Violet, Victoria and Annie, residing at home.

Greeted by Son He Went to Bury

MONTREAL, Sept. 18.—Called to Sudbury, Ont., to claim his son's body, and leaving his wife at home preparing the best room in the house for the reception of the body, Mr. J. B. Souchereau of 1308 Wellington Street, found at the end of his sorrowful trip that he was but the victim of a grim practical joke.

Albert Souchereau, always of a roving disposition, decided a few weeks ago that home ties were too galling for him, and determined on an impromptu trip. He eventually landed in Sudbury.

He had been there about a week when early one morning a messenger knocked at the door of his home in Verdun and left a telegram. It was presumably signed by the station agent at Sudbury, and tersely asked for a representative of the family to come and get their son's dead body.

Mr. Souchereau immediately set out and took a neighbor with him, Mr. Durocher. He was foresighted enough to order a coffin in advance, to be delivered at Sudbury, and also retained the services of a local undertaker to look after the last sad ceremonies here.

Meanwhile the mother was heart broken. She assisted the undertaker to prepare the parlor for the reception of the son's body, hung draperies and completed the decorations of a stand on which to rest the coffin, and the candles were in readiness.

During this time Mr. Souchereau with his neighbor, was speeding towards Sudbury. He, too, was grief-stricken.

On arrival at the station he was met not by a mournful delegation, but by his own boy, healthy and plump, the direct antithesis of a corpse.

Designs for the Cartier Movement

MONTREAL, Sept. 18.—Experts on sculpture to-day are busy deciding on the merits of models submitted for the monument to be erected next year to Sir George Etienne Cartier at the foot of Mount Royal. The one likely to be selected is by Laliberte, a Montreal sculptor, who has turned out a beautiful design, comprising a high pillar on which Cartier is seated, while figures representing commerce, marine, etc., surround the base, representing the various provinces.

Another popular choice is the design of Mr. Lionel McCarthy, which involves a high column, but there are many figures which are considered unnecessary to the monument.

The design submitted by Mr. Herbert, the famous Canadian sculptor, is out of question, as far as a choice is concerned. His design also represents a high figure, but there is no connecting link between the top of the column and the base. The figures at the base, representing the different provinces, are represented as joining hands around the pillar.

The monument will be erected at the foot of the mountain, and the committee are obliged to take the impossible mountain background into consideration. Thus, a beautiful design by L. M. Kilpin, a Canadian, is not suited to the purpose, because it represents a flat terrace scene.

Cardinal Against Votes for Women

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 18.—Cardinal Gibbons told 550 men at the City Club luncheon yesterday afternoon that if a historian ever has cause to write the 'decline and fall of the American Republic,' it would not be due to an invading army, but to the criminal sloth and negligence and the political apostasy of our own citizens.

Before his address he said in an authorized interview:

'Equal suffrage, in my opinion, would tend toward increasing divorce, which is a social blot on the United States and is the greatest evil of the day. If women had equal political rights with men there is a probability that on the slightest provocation she would seek divorce. Given such equality she might overstep the bounds. Women under present conditions are too prone to go to the divorce courts, and political equality might have the effect of turning their heads.

'Divorce is now to easy to get. If a husband leaves home for a couple of weeks and his wife wants freedom she is likely to use his absence as a pretext. Nowadays if a woman cannot get a divorce in her own state she goes off to Nevada, where it is made easy.

Many a man who knows his place is unable to keep it.

ENGLISH WOMEN ASSAILED

Dr. A. Maeder, of Zurich, contributes an article to Imago, a scientific review, on the English woman.

He divides the women of England into two classes, which are represented by the extremes of the masculine and the doll-like types.

"The first may be immediately recognized," he writes, "by the build, which shows masculine traits, the face being angular with something rough about the features, while the gait has something disagreeably decided, energetic and heavy.

"The impression of a want of womanliness is received everywhere in London. Compare, for instance, two theatrical performances, the one in Paris and the other in London. In London dancing and ballet are merely gymnastic exercises, completely lacking in womanly character and feminine grace.

"The English idea of beauty is that of a Botticelli 'Madonna.' No full, ripe forms are aimed at, but the attainment of the straight line. The undeveloped girl is the ideal of the English woman, who wears short white skirts at 50. The Rubens type is never seen.

"To this ideal much of the refusal to eat sufficient food on the part of the English girl is no doubt due. I gained the impressions that many of these girls did not desire marriage, or or at least wished to put it off as long as possible.

"The other type, the doll, which we very seldom see here, is quite infantine and undeveloped. She seemed to me like a pretty plaything."

St. Catharines, Sept. 19.—At a meeting of Victory Lodge, Sons of England, held Tuesday night, it is reported that among other matters discussed, was the appointment of a Catholic by the public school board as the principal of the new Alexandra public school, recently opened. Special objection was taken to the action of the Sons of England who are on the board. Orangemen have also expressed their disapproval, and it is now stated, the teacher will send in his resignation rather than start religious strife over the position.

TRAGEDY IN HAMILTON

W. G. Will Slays His Wife, Then Kills Himself.

After a Drinking Bout, Former Member of the Bisley Team Returns to His Home and Demands Money of His Wife—When She Refuses He Kills Her With a Shot Gun, Then Suicides With Second Barrel.

Hamilton, Sept. 19.—With a double-barrelled shotgun, William G. Will, 114 Tisdale street, yesterday afternoon murdered his wife, and a few moments later turned the weapon on himself and blew his face and part of his head off. Both he and his wife were dead when Inspector Coulter of the east end division and a squad of police arrived at the house a few minutes after having been notified of the affair. Deputy Chief of Police Wheatley was also on the scene a moment later. According to information gathered by the police, Will had been drinking yesterday, and about 4.45 p.m., he went to the house and demanded money from his wife, who he knew had received $32 from their 18-year-old son yesterday morning. Mrs. Will refused to give him the money, Will began to abuse her and threatened to kill her. He at once started to make good his threat by grabbing his gun. Mrs. Will ran out of the back door and started down the entrance way to the street.

Will followed her, and just as she reached the front line of the house, he emptied the contents of one barrel of the gun at her, and the charge struck her in the side of the face as she turned to look at him. Mrs. Will fell to the ground and expired almost instantly. Will then ran upstairs to his bedroom and with the muzzle of the gun against his chin, emptied the other barrel of the weapon.

Coroner Anderson was promptly notified and ordered an inquest. The remains of Will and his wife will be viewed by the jury at the city morgue to-day. The double funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon to Hamilton Cemetery.

Will was 44 years of age, and his wife a year older. They had been married about 20 years and had three children, two boys 18 and 16 years old respectively, and a daughter 13 years of age. Will had been employed for years as a carpet layer by R. McKay & Sons, and was considered a steady worker. He was a staff-sergeant of B. Company, 13th Regiment, of which he had been a member for 25 years. He was a good marksman, and two years ago was a member of the Bisley team. By his fellow militiamen and others who knew him well, he is said to have been of an agreeable disposition. He had been somewhat addicted to drink of late, but had lost no time from his work on that account.

Mrs. Will was well connected in the city.

New Ocean Route For Steamships

NEW YORK, Sept. 18.—The American's London cable to-day says:—

The movement to make Galway, on the west Coast of Ireland, a trans-Atlantic port, to connect with Canada and the States, seems about to culminate in practical results. For a quick mail and passenger service the route will, of course, be unrivalled, the ocean passage being cut down to about four days for steamers going at quite an ordinary speed rate.

One of the leading continental firms of bankers has been subjecting the whole scheme to a close study during the past six weeks, with a view to financing it on a broad basis, and the decision of this firm may now be given any day.

The Mayor of Dublin has just received a proposal from T. M. Kirkwood and friends, Toronto financiers, that the Dublin council should guarantee six per cent. interest on a bond issue of $1,500,000 for twenty years, Toronto people to establish a fast line of steamers from Galway to North Sydney, Nova Scotia, giving a ten-day service between the two ports, the water transit not to exceed 4 1-2 days.

In return for the interest guarantees the Toronto people will carry all mail matter in and out free for twenty years.

Mr. Kirkwood argues that as the service will attract a good portion of the travelling public to the Dublin subline, the city council will score a big gain, while the undertaking is a very remote risk.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 18.—Thirty thousand Oddfellows, from all parts of America, marched through Winnipeg streets this afternoon. The mayor proclaimed a half holiday. Fourteen special trains brought Oddfellows from Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Joseph Oliver, of Toronto, was second in the contest among seven for the position of deputy grand sire, being defeated by Daniels, of Georgia.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

CONDEMNS MIDWAYS

Sideshows at Ontario Fairs Unworthy, Says Official.

J. Lockie Wilson Reports That the Grant of $10,000 For Wet Weather Insurance of Exhibitions Will All Be Needed This Year—Fakirs Are Still Found Everywhere and Police Cannot Get Convictions.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—This year's grant of $10,000 by the Ontario Government for wet weather insurance will all be required to meet the losses sustained by the agricultural societies. J. Lockie Wilson yesterday stated that the reports showed that the losses were less general last year, when the full amount of $10,000 was also required, but the amount would hardly suffice to meet the requirements. It is divided on a pro rata basis, the maximum to a society being $300. No grant is made to societies in cities of 30,000 or over.

Mr. Wilson entered another vigorous protest against the midway sideshows. He was very sorry, he said, to see, especially at the larger shows, that more and more concessions were granted to all kind of fakirs. Ninety per cent. of these shows were absolutely fakes. The actors, too, were of a pretty low type of humanity. It was absolutely untrue that the young men and women from the farms required such amusements, and it would be in their best interests if they were eliminated.

At the Ottawa Fair the midway was so located that those desiring to visit the splendid exhibit in the horticultural building had difficulty in reaching that building.

Mr. Wilson also stated that the provincial detectives who have been at the fairs collecting evidence against fakirs with trick gambling devices, had been discouraged by trial magistrates allowing the convicted offenders to go on suspended sentence. Thirty convictions were, however, obtained last year. He has a number of devices used by fakirs at fairs to get easy money from would-be gamblers.

Making due allowance for the bad weather the Ontario fall fairs had been a success.

Hudson Bay Route Feasible

QUEBEC, September 18.—The steamship Beothic, of the Hudson Bay line, arrived in the port of Quebec Tuesday. She brought interesting news of the developments now starting in the Northern sea.

The Beothic on her previous voyage carried to Hudson Bay and James Bay engineering parties numbering about 100 men to commence laying out the terminals for the Hudson Bay Railway.

Mr. Evans in the interest of the Department of Public Works, disembarked at Nottaway and is proceeding northerly with a small party to examine the resources of the Nottaway valley.

The North Railway survey party in charge of J. F. E. Lavoie started on the survey of this line southerly to a junction with the Transcontinental August 23rd, and is expected to reach the point of connection by the end of the year. But the most important news concerned the experience of the ship in navigating these waters which are yet so litte known.

Captain Wayte said:

"The difficulties of navigation in Hudson Strait and Bay and James Bay between June and January are due to several causes, the most of which are remediable by the usual safeguards provided in navigable waters by the governments controlling them. The Straits, Hudson Bay and James Bay are exceptionally free from submarine obstacles, such as rocks, reefs and shoals along the routes which navigation takes to the present commercial points; the soundings are unform and change so gradually as to be a very safe guide in fog or when observations are not obtainable as soon as the waters have been correctly charted and the soundings plotted in the chart.'

"The Beothic left Charlton Island near the mouth of Nottaway river August 26th, and arrived at Sydney September 5th, making the voyage of about 2,500 miles inside of ten days, and having not once to stop or slow down for ice or any other cause in James Bay, Hudson Bay or the Strait."

WANT PULP EMBARGO

Canadian Manufacturers Would Stop All Export.

Deputation Will Wait on the Premier to Urge That Exportation of Raw Material Be Prohibited—Millions of Cords of Pulpwood Is Being Sent Into the United States and Forests Are Endangered.

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—Legislation which will absolutely put a stop to the exportation of pulp wood from Canada to the United States is being urged on the Government by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

It is learned from an absolutely reliable source that a big delegation, composed of leading members of the association, will wait upon Premier Borden shortly, and place the matter fully before him. It will be pointed out that, with the rapidly increasing consumption and demand from the United States, and the corresponding growth of the export of raw pulp from Canada across the line, Canada's forests will soon become depleted, while the profits which should accrue to Canadians by paper manufacture in Canada, are going into the pockets of Americans.

Should the Government introduce legislation which would prohibit the export to the United States from any province in the Dominion, of raw pulp wood, the United States would be compelled to buy the manufactured paper here, and the result would be the opening up of a large number of big paper manufacturing industries throughout the Dominion, which would employ many thousands of workmen, pay millions annually in wages, and give Canada prominence as a paper manufacturing country.

Notwithstanding that Ontario, New Brunswick and Quebec have taken steps through the medium of provincial legislation to practically put a stop to, or place a restriction upon the export of pulpwood cut on crown lands to the States, millions of cords of excellent pulp timber are annually being shipped to American centres from private owned lands, chiefly from Quebec. The wood is manufactured in American mills and the benefit which Canada should derive goes to the pockets of the workingmen and manufacturers of the United States.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association hopes to prevent the export from private-owned property through a federal enactment, which would be universal. The question is an important one, and it is thought likely that it will be found among the number of big matters which Parliament will take up during the coming session.

SATCHEL MISSING

A lady's satchel containing a small purse and a pair of gold rimmed spectacles was lost upon the street and was advertised in this paper. The police have every reason to believe that the satchel is in the hands of a party who up to the present time has failed to give it up. On Tuesday a child picked up a satchel answering the description of the one lost, and was about to take it home when a woman appeared upon the scene and stated she would take the article and give it to one of the policemen. She took the purse from the child, but the police have not as yet seen the missing article. Whilst the child does not know the woman who took the satchel a good description has been furnished the police and they are working upon the case.

RIGHT HOME

Doctor Recommends Postum from Personal Test.

No one is better able to realize the injurious action of caffeine—the drug in coffee—on the heart, than the doctor. Tea is just as harmful as coffee because it, too, contains the drug caffeine.

When the doctor himself has been relieved by simply leaving off coffee using Postum ,he can refer with full conviction to his own case.

A Mo. Physician prescribes Postum for many of his patients because he was benefited by it.

"I wish to add my testimony in regard to that excellent prepartion—Postum. I have had functional or nervous heart trouble for over 15 years, and a part of the time was unable to attend to my business.

"I was a moderate user of coffee and did not think drinking it hurt me. But on stopping it and using Postum instead, my heart has got all right, and I ascribe it to the change from coffee to Postum.

"I am prescirbing it now in cases of sickness, especially when coffee does not agree, or affects the heart, nerves or stomach .

"When made right it has a much better flavour than coffee, and is a vital sustainer of the system. I shall continue to recommend it to our people, and I have my own case to refer to." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Would Take Navy Out of Politics

OTTAWA, Sept. 18.—A largely-signed memorial, asking that the naval question be settled out of politics has reached the Prime Minister from the West. It bears hundreds of names of the best known men of both political parties in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw and Calgary.

The memorial states that the people of the West want a naval policy which will properly represent the strength and resources of Canada, and they are willing to support an emergency contribution if it is found necessary. Those whose names appear on the list of signatories include the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, Sir Rodmond Roblin, and members of the Manitoba Government, the editors of the three Winnipeg dailies, Conservative, Liberal and Independent, and a large number of professional and business men. The memorial was forwarded, accompanied by a letter, from Sir William Whyte.

It is understood that the suggestion was made that the memorial and list of signatures be shown to the leader of the Opposition, and that this will be done.

A MAGIC MIRROR.

Experiments With the Moon and Stars and a Hand Glass.

A pretty experiment can be made with a hand mirror any night when there is a full moon. Hold the mirror so that the moon's image will be seen in it and you will be surprised to see four moons instead of one. One moon will be very bright, but the other three will be in a straight line and quite dull, one dull image on the side of the bright moon and the other two on the other side. Turn the mirror round slowly, still holding its face to the moon, and the reflections will seem to revolve round a common center.

You can make the same experiment with one of the very bright stars, such as Sirius, Venus or Jupiter, but with these there will be three images instead of four, as the number seen depends on the breadth of the object. The explanation is quite simple. There are two surfaces in the mirror, one in front and the other where the quicksilver is. The brightest reflection comes from the object itself, the others are what are known as secondary images reflected from the front to the back of the mirror and thence to the eye. The magic mirror never fails to excite a good deal of wonder, and is an interesting experiment as well.—London Chronicle.

Lovely Landscape.

The valet smiled feebly, but politely intimated that he did not understand the king's allusion to landscape and scenery.

"Why," replied the first gentleman of Europe, "do I not see before me a smiling valet with a magnificent gorge?"

The valet thereupon rose and retired, excusing himself to the king on the ground that he had turned suddenly "hill."—London Tit-Bits.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

FISKE O'HARA IN "THE ROSE OF KILDAIRE."

FISKE O'HARA DELIGHTS

It is always a capacity house when Fiske O'Hara the greatest living Irish romantic actor and lyrist, appears in a play of Erin at the Grand. "The Rose of Kildare," in which he appeared in a leading role last night, was no exception to his past triumphs, and he delighted a very large audience from the rise of the curtain to its fall in the last act.

"The Rose of Kildare" is a drama full of intense heart interest and fascinating romance, both of love and tragedy. Augustus Pitou, jr., has given the play a handsome scenic mounting, and has also given the star an excellent supporting company. Mr. O'Hara was in fine voice last evening, and rendered his new songs in a capital manner. The numbers which were especially tuneful, and pleasing were "Pictures in the Firelight," "There's Only One Ireland," "The Leprahaun," and "The Sundial." "The Rose of Kildare" is the best play that Mr. O'Hara has been seen in here, and should prove a strong attraction for the Grand all week, and especially at the matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.—Toronto News.

AT THE GRAND.

Fiske O'Hara, the popular young Irish tenor, opened at the Grand last night for a week's sojourn, and if his initial audience here may be taken as an indication, his new vehicle, "The Rose of Kildare" will keep an expansive grin on the man in the box office. The house last night was sold out, and the audience even went so far as to break out into cheers at the final drop.

The play is the romantic, bright type that one usually associates with Irish plays and gives Mr. O'Hara ample opportunity to use his pleasing voice. "There's Only One Ireland" is the hit of the show.

Miss Gladys Wynne, as Lady Moya Fitzpatrick, handled her role with a dainty touch and Carroll Daly, as Brian Burke, made himself disagreeable enough to be a success. Marie Quinn, as Kathleen Riordan, makes the usual hit, and with John C. Hickey as Terence Malone, supplies the comedy. The remainder of the company gives Mr. O'Hara admirable support.

There were several clergymen noticed in the audience last night.

"THE LIGHT ETERNAL."

"The Light Eternal," a spectacular drama of the early Christian era having much in common with plays of a more modern theme when viewed from a purely dramatic standpoint, will be offered at Griffin's Opera House, for two nights, commencing Wed., Sept. 25th. Its scenes are intense and its climaxes thrilling in the extreme; its love interest is distinctly human and is beautifully blended with the more dominant notes of religious faith. The play is gorgeously staged and costumed—each of the five stage settings surpassing anything of the kind heretofore seen. In the second scene of the third act, which shows the throne room of the Roman Empero's palace, a most startling effect is developed. The Emperor seeks to force Marc Valenius, a young captain of the guard who is secretly a Christian, to worship at the altar of the pagan god Jupiter, when the altar is shattered by a bolt of lightning and over its wreckage appears a flaming cross—a rebuke to the pagan cruelties and a sign of Divine favor to the Christians. Plan opens at Doyle's, Monday, Sept. 23rd.

Some Changes

> When a man's mind goes back to the old time when in place of the present G.T.R. station there used to exist the long, wooden building used as a market shed, the change is most marked indeed. You remember it yourself, perhaps. The old building where we used to buy vegetables and fruit and where James Gay, the master of all poets this day, used to sharpen saws, play the violin and reel off poetry in his own inimitible way to the delight of many and the amusement of the small boy.
>
> All these have disappeared into the silent past, taking with them the joys and laughter of the olden days when eggs were a York shilling a dozen and you could live on fruit at 25 cents a basket, with everything in like proportion. Now we are more modern and we pay for it. An imposing station rises many feet above the very spot where the master poet of his day reeled off rhymes on everything and everybody, and where the good housewives of the city used to flock each market day in long lines to buy their produce for the week or the season without the aid of the middleman.
> Now things are done differently, and we wonder—is it any better done or do we profit accordingly? But assuredly the change is a wonderful one that greets the ex-Guelphite who revisits the scene of his childhood days.

Many readers of The Intelligencer will remember James Gay who is above spoken of as a resident of this city, also his two burlesque libel suits against the Guelph Mercury (called by Gay "Markry") which were tried before the "High Court of Justiciary and Judiciary," the first in the Police Court and the second in the City Hall, before large and laughter-convulsed crowds. After many witnesses had been heard, including Gay, who recited his rhymes and played tunes on the flute to prove that he was a poet and a musician and that he had been slandered by the defendant, the jury rendered a verdict of $3500 damages in favor of the defendant. The morning following the trial, Gay declined to receive any more jobs, but a few days later, on learning that the trial was a burlesque, Jimmy resumed his work. He subsequently returned to his former home in Guelph and there passed away, as also have many who made fun at his expense, including the "Judge" who presided at the first trial, the counsel for the prosecution, the foreman of the jury and many others who took part in the innocent fun of which "James Gay, Poet Laurette," as he signed himself, was the unwitting cause.

A Man's Job

The expression: "A man's job," is often heard, but in these days when women have invaded almost every calling in life it is not easy to determine just what it means. The following statement of vocations pursued by women, which has just been issued by the Government at Washington, shows how widespread is the field they now cover in the United States, and what is true of the neighboring republic is equally true with regard to all English-speaking countries:

Before Parliament re-assembles for the next session there should be held three bye-elections, and, perhaps, more. At present, Richelieu in this province; Carleton, in Ontario, and Macdonald in Manitoba are without representatives in the House of Commons. The filling of the vacancies may give an idea of what the people have been thinking in regard to their national affairs since September last. It may not be in accord with what was lately said at St. Clet.—Montreal Gazette.

Did you ever think what your ad in the newspaper is doing for you? When you close your store in the evening and go home to your family and fireside, not thinking about your business at all, then it is that the paper is being pored over in hundreds of homes—the homes from which your trade is drawn. And there is your ad doing its work silently, but surely, and if you have taken the trouble to make it attractive its work will be all the more attractive. This is repeated over and over again, and is no doubt what inspired some writer to call newspaper advertising a "silent drummer."

The Toronto Globe published an alleged interview with Premier McBride, in which some remarkable statements upon the Anglo-German situation were attributed to Sir Richard. Premier McBride has emphatically and categorically denied these statements. The Globe even stated that Premier McBride had been in Germany and spoke at first-hand. Premier McBride says he was never in Germany in his life. It is sad to contemplate the spectacle of the chief organ of the Liberal party in Canada, and edited by the Rev. J. A. Macdonald, playing siuch sinful games. It is also very hard upon the rank and file of the Liberal party.—Brockville Times.

The Montreal Herald, a leading Liberal newspaper, remarks: "One thing for which Mr. Borden is to be admired is his preference for understatement. Except on the rare occasion when he is angry or simulates anger, he never mixes much color in what he has to say. He has not departed from his habit in the statement made before leaving for home, especially when he notes "the keen interest of the British people in the progress and development of the Overseas Dominions." And he wanted to be no more than truthful. He could have said that Canada is, if anything, more in people's minds just now than any other topic. "Canada is the fashion."

Here in Toronto the possession of an automobile is said to be the measure of success which is the same thing as the measure of a gentleman, and it is said ladies who can only afford to make the round of their calls in a street car or a hack retire in confusion from the acquaintance of those who call in limousines, some of which are as long as a city block and more sumptuous than the coronation coach. The same thing is true in New York, where the common people have lately been slaying the drivers who crush and mangle their children. It is not impossible that the history of the coming social revolution will relate that the reign of terror began when the mob rushed in frenzy not upon the Queen's palace, but upon the garages.—Weekly Sun.

The Toronto Telegram had on Tuesday an exceedingly pertinent cartoon entitled "A Triumph of Liberalism," in which Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Rev. J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Globe, and Senator Jaffray, President of The Globe Printing Company. Those gentlemen are facing a placard which reads: "1911—Chats Falls handed out by Laurier Government for $2,000. 1912—Recipients ask Hydro Commission $3,000,000 for Chats Falls," and the following colloquy takes place:

Hon. Robert Jaffray—"Aye, Lloyd-George can show naething like yon."

And Mr. J. E. Atkinson, the editor of the Toronto Star, who is pictured as a small, but spectacled boy, looks on and smiles his admiring acquiescence.

THE TENEMENT SYSTEM

An Expert on the Subject Dwells on the Need of Air Space

Dr. C. A. Hodgetts, Ottawa, who has travelled widely in connection with the proper housing of people and town planning, says that the evi's of the tenement system in Great Britain and the United States have spread to Canada. The tidal influx of humanity did not reach the rural districts, but converging on the urban, landed in clan segregation, and ultimately in overcrowding. It was the duty of the town planner to actively work against the evils of overcrowding; laws were necessary, public opinion was necessary to enforce the laws if a national calamity were to be avoided. From census details the horrors of overcrowding were patented to the audience. In New York it was stated, in 122 blocks, 750 perrons were crammed to the acre, and in the Italian section this number rose to 2,400 persons per acre. The building of houses it was asserted, failed to keep pace with the building of chimneys; rural districts in Britain and Germany were depopulated, and as a result in the large cities 1,000 slum rooms did duty day and night. Bad air, insufficient sunlight, were adjuvants to infectious diseases, tuberculosis and infant mortality. Quoting a report of Dr. Russell, of Glasgow, Scotland, it was said that there, for every two children who died in the not-overcrowded parts, five died in the slum area. The investigations of Dr. Hastings, of Toronto, show a no less favorable report for that "city of homes." Rear houses there were in plenty, dark rooms, tenements unfit for habitation, indequate water supply, unpaved filthy yards, all dangerous to public morals, offences against public decency. Need of air-space was impressed. The rural inhabitants migrated to the city and gradually became slum dwellers through cost of housing or inadequate supply of houses; bad air and malnutrition gradually began to add to the miseries of the crowded European centres. In Birmingham (St. Mary's district), it was pointed out, that 331 infants died out of 1,000 and the large percentage of the remainder were seared, maimed or otherwise permanently disabled. And this overcrowding became a menace to progress, had evil effect upon the physical and moral conditions of the people. In St. Louis, it was shown, one half of the houses in the negro quarter were unfit for human habitation, while in the Polish there was an average of 13 persons to 4 rooms. In Cleveland 113 of all houses in the slum area should not be permitted to exist. Preventible diseases, results of overcrowding have cost the city of New York $40,000,000 annually during the years 1906 and 1909, the total cost amounting to over $166,000,000. The evils of this system of overcrowding became more evident as time elapses. Other nations had taken steps to mitigate the evil and deal with the danger. England had its housing act and intended a campaign to effect the wholesale clearance of slums and erection of municipal dwellings; the compulsory improvement of habitations at the owners' expense. Local authorities are given power to buy land, erect houses, lay out open spaces for gardens, playgrounds and parks. Sanitary changes are recognized as being of the utmost importance and the county council has been given power to appoint a medical officer of health, to assist the executive by expert knowledge. The health and housing committee are invested with wide power to do away with cellar dwellings and back to back houses; and under the act town planning schemes of great magnitude are possible. Germany had interested itself in town planning, by building model tenements, encouraging private builders and co-operative building societies to the erection of better dwellings and in the demolition of the slums.

Old Documents Found

Mr. P. J. D. de Latour, while investigating water records in the Railway Belt for the water rights branch of the British Columbia Department of Lands, made a valuable historical find at Yale, B.C. In the lock-up was an old black box full of papers that had lain undisturbed for years. Examination showed them to be records of mineral claims, water rights land and timber locations, dating from 1858, of many of which the departments in Victoria had no record at all.

From the records, Mr. de Latour was able to make an almost complete list of the water-rights granted in the Yale district.

ARE TRYING TO FIND MEN WHO AIDED THE GUNMEN

NEW YORK, Sept. 18.—Justice Goff, sitting as a Magistrate in charge of a John Doe inquiry, and Acting District Attorney Frank Moss continued their efforts yesterday to discover whether or not important evidence connected with the arrest of "Gyp the Blood" Horowitz and "Lefty Louie" Rosenberg had been suppressed by the police. At the end of the day they were not much nearer a conclusion than they had been on the day before.

The inquiry, it was learned, will be continued indefinitely, and will be made to cover not only the question of suppressed evidence but also all the circumstances relating to the arrest of the gunmen. Several conflicting stories, each of them at variance with the account of Deputy Commissioner Dougherty, reached Mr. Moss yesterday, and he immediately began an investigation of each story.

To-day Mr. Moss will begin also an investigation to discover the identity of whatever persons may have had a share in concealing "Gyp" and "Lefty" in the Brooklyn flats which they occupied after their return to the city from Parksville in the Catskills.

Mr. Moss is uncertain whether one or two men besides Samuel Kramer, who is under arrest, were directly connected with the purchase of furniture and the hiring of the flats for the fugitives. As told yesterday the furniture for the flat at 765 Woodward Avenue in which "Gyp" and "Lefty" were caught, and the furniture for the apartments at 253 South Fourth Street, Brooklyn, and 263 South Third Street, Brooklyn, was bought by Morris Goldstein, proprietor of the Majestic poolroom at 235 East Broadway and by Samuel Lieberman, an employe or partner of Goldstein. District Attorney Moss said yesterday afternoon that he believed Samuel Kramer, alias Max Cahn, who was caught in the apartment with "Gyp" and "Lefty" was in reality Morris Goldstein.

Detectives from the District Attorney's office yesterday morning appeared at the Thomas F. Meagher Company, 207 Park Row, and at Cowperthwait & Sons, 203 Park Row, with subpoenas for all connected with the sale of urniture to those who fitted up the hidng place for the gunmen. The detectives also took the three sets of mortgages and contracts relating to the purchase of furniture for the three different flats. To two sets of these papers is attached the signature of Morris Goldstein, and to the third set is the signature of Samuel Lieberman. The District Attorney took these specimens of the handwriting of the men in order to compare them with the signatures on the gas bill found in the Woodward Avenue apartment. The purpose is to discover whether the handwriting of Kramer or Cahn, is identical with that of Goldstein or Lieberman.

Kramer will be taken to the District Attorney's office this morning when the furniture men will be asked to identify him as the customer in either of the three purchases of furniture of which the bills were found after the capture of the two gunmen in the Woodward Avenue apartment. W. R. Fiedler, manager; Francis J. Finn, a salesman; and Louis Newman, a collector, connected with the Thomas F. Meagher Company, and W. E. Bird, manager, and Frank A. Miller, a salesman, of Cowperthwait & Sons, are those served with subpoenas to appear to-day.

Deputy Commissioner Dougherty who is working with several detectives to round up those who were active in hiding "Gyp" and "Lefty," refused to say yesterday whether the trial ed higher up than those who hired and fitted up the three flats in Brooklyn, but he promised sensational developments within the next day or two. Dougherty refused to say whether he had been able to find out whether Kramer was identical with Goldstein or Lieberman, or whether two of the accessories were still at large.

The managers of the two furniture stores hold conflicting opinions on the subject. From newspaper pictures of Kramer, Manager Bird of Cowperthwait & Sons says he is Lieberman, and Manager Lieder of the Thomas F. Meagher Company says he is Goldstein. Mrs. Rebecca Goldstein of 253 South Fourth Street, the mother of Morris Goldstein, says that Morris slept at her home Saturday night and that, therefore, he is not Kramer, who was under arrest at the time. The Majesic, at 235 East Broadway, is now in charge of Samuel Goldstein, a brother of Morris. He said yesterday that he did not know where Morris was.

The conflicting reports concerning the capture of the gunmen which Mr. Moss immediately began to investigate emanated from ex-Magistrate Charles G. F. Schwartz their counsel, and from Bernard Whale, who has a flat above that occupied by the gunmen.

Mr. Bernard said yesterday that he had learned from his clients that when the police came to their flat on Saturday night one detective knocked on the door. It was opened by Samuel Kramer, and the detective stuck his revolver against his stomach, exclaiming:

"Gyp" who was sitting in the rear of the room, heard the exclamation, and shouted out that he was "Gyp" that he was unarmed, and for the detectives to come and get him.

The other story told by Schwartz was that the detectives entered the house on Saturday evening and shouted up through the halls:

"Goldstein. Oh, Goldstein. Does anybody by the name of Goldstein live here?"

Then they tramped up the stairs, pushed open the door of the gunmen's flat, and walked in without trouble.

THE BEARDED NIECE

How She Sought Compensation For Disinheritance by Her Aunt

The lady's wealthy aunt, Mms. Gosselin took exception to the masked balls her niece gave and to her acquaintances in artistic circles, and decided that she would disinherit her.

The niece vowed that she would obtain all the money her aunt intended to withhold from her. Disguising herself as a bearded man, she effeced an entrance into her aunt's house during the absence of the servant.

The old lady was about to retire to rest when the intruder attacked her threw pepper in her eyes, and tried to stifle her with a pillow. Mme. Gosselth offered a stou resistance, however. The niece then struck her on the head with a vase, and, producing a knife, stabbed her in the eye. Pushing her on a chair, she next attempted to bind and strangle her.

The aunt then swooned away, and the niece set to work to pillage the house. She seized all the silver and money she could lay her hands on. As she was leaving the old woman regained consciousness and recognised her assailant in spite of her disguise.

The niece was assisted in her exploit by her daughter Gabrielle and a young man named Baquet. She and Baquet left the town, but her daughter was arrested. The young man later gave himself up.

RECLUSE WITH FIVE CATS

Old Man Who Kept His Door Shut Dies Surrounded by His Pets

Five cats were found in the room in which was discovered the dead body of a man of sixty-five who had made it a rule to keep his landlady outside of his room, and have his food left on the doormat. The recluse was a dock laborer, named Charles Hough, who occupied a single room in Lambeth, England. He was identified by the Rev. W. W. Hough, vicar of Lewisham, as his cousin, the vicar stating that he had only once seen his relative in his lifetime, but had helped him from time to time.

His landlady said that Hough had been with her seven years, and had very little money, but never complained of want of food. He used to keep closely to his room, and would not let her inside. On some days he would put a plate outside his door, and she wood place food upon it, and he would take it in. She was never allowed inside the room. When she burst burst open the door she found five cats within. The old man was very fond of these animals.

Medical evidence showed that death was due to heart disease, and the man and the room both showed signs of extreme neglect.

WOMEN AND DRESS

Ruskin's Advice on the Subject Followed by the French

Of all questions that vex and disturb humanity—feminine humanity—few are more perplexing or importunate than that of dress. "What shall I wear?" is with thousands of women almost the first thought. Superiority of intellect and education seem powerless to wean women from this absorbing consideration. Witness Queen Elizabeth's eighty wigs and three thousand dresses; and Lady Jane Grey's ruff, necessitating, when she ate, the use of a spoon with a handle quite two and a half feet in length. Still, we do not want women wholly devoid of a spice of vanity. There is a Spanish proverb that says—"A woman without vanity is like a lemon without the juice." Ruskin wrote much on the subject of women's attire, and one piece of advice this sage gave made a deep and lasting impression on the public—"Let the women who can afford it get their gowns made by a good dressmaker, and with the utmost precision and perfection attainable." Those who have followed this advice have found it the greatest economy in the end, and have derived also the greatest satisfaction from doing so. Every Frenchwomen endorses this opinion and experience. She has fewer frocks than an Englishwoman of the same social standing, but then, they are usually made by a first-class dressmaker.

THE ROYAL HOME

Home life is as dear to the hearts of the King and Queen as it is to other men and women. Whenever it is possible, when there is no possibility of their Royal presence being required at any State, civic, or private function, they enjoy the quiet and peace of home life.

Sandringham is the favorite country seat of their Majesties. At Sandringham, and in the neighboring villages and surrounding country, tales are told of the ideal home-life led by the King, Queen, and their children. It is here indeed that the highest standard of ideal home-life is reached by King George and Queen Mary. The keynote of that life is simplicity.

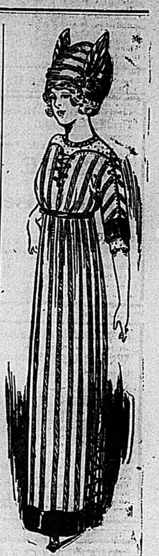
Constantly, Queen Mary, sometimes accompanied by little Princess Mary, visits the cottages on the estate, carrying messages of good cheer, bright smiles, and kindly inquiries for any sick folk there may be. It is well known that Queen Mary makes many little personal sacrifices in order to visit the tenants on the estates, and she has beautifully trained her children, and brought them up with the utmost simplicity, so that they may fully understand and appreciate the beauties of a quiet but essentially English home life.

The little Princes and Princesses are daily visited in the nursery and in the school-room when the King and Queen are at home. From early years the Royal children have been lovingly taught the spirit of "give and take," have been trained to give in and obey their elders, their governesses and tutors, have been taught to be unselfish towards one another. And Princess Mary, in the days when she had less pocket-money than now, started an account in the Post Office Savings Bank, and, accompanied by one of the ladies of the Royal household, could be seen paying in money and taking it out.

Thus it will be seen that, in spite of King George and Queen Mary's great and exalted position, they teach their humbler subjects the beauty of home life and home discipline.

Salt in the Laundry

Salt should be used to fix colors that have softened and run in the washing. It must not be used in the washing water, as it makes soap useless; but the rinsing water ought to be rather salty. A good handful of salt to a gallon of water is the average proportion. Salt should be added to the soaking water for handkerchiefs and lace curtains, as it renders the washing an easier process. Salt and beeswax make rusty flatirons as clean and smooth as glass.



ATTRACTIVE DESIGN FOR STRIPED MATERIAL

The above sketch suggests a charming model for stripes, so popular in all sorts of fabrics and colors. For band on skirt, cuffs, and pipings on bodice choose plain material to match one of the stripes or of a harmonizing shade. Guimpe and undersleeves are of chiffon cloth studded with small crystal beads.

HOLIDAY HINTS

Shady Hats are Better than Sick Headaches

There is apt to be mischief to the eyes during the holidays from glaring sun, loss of sleep, and from excessive reading. Do be careful of these things for your own sake.

Do not allow your skin to get coarse and freckled from exposure. It doesn't pay. You can enjoy yourself perfectly well without incurring blistered arms and a freckled red nose.

Do not forget to take away a bottle of some soothing lotion, with which to hide the ravages of the sun, and do not disdain to wear a shady hat when you are going out; shady hats are usually becoming, and they are certainly more to be desired than a sick headache.

Violet Toilet Water

Take two ounces of best Florentine orris-root, powdered, and six ounces of deodorized alcohol. Put the powder in a bowl, and pour the liquid on gradually until the whole is well mixed. Add six drops of essential oil of violets, pour into a bottle, and cork tightly. It should be kept for three or four weeks before using. A few drops added to a basin of cold water used for the final rinsing leaves the body cool and fragrant in warm weather. It is quite inexpensive to make; the ingredients can be had at any good chemist's for very little money.

THE PURCHASE of one thousand dollars worth of goods from your own town or your own country, instead of purchasing outside, means the addition of one person to your town or your country instead of supporting him abroad.

COBB NOT GREATEST STATISTICS SHOW

Now it has come to pass that eminent baseball statisticians, with all the records at their command, are beginning to pick flaws in the claims so often advanced that Tyrus Cobb, the Detroit star, is the most wonderful production of the diamond of any age. They point to the fact that there were others in former years whose run getting and base stealing prowess cause Cobb's by no means feeble efforts to sound like those of a second rater.

The latest unofficial figures give Cobb a total of 144 runs, 241 base hits and 94 stolen bases in 141 games, with a batting average of .420. Fine work, is unquestionably the verdict but—

Billy Hamilton, even though wearing the colors of allegedly slow going Philadelphia, crossed the plate 196 times in 1894, when 140 games were a complete schedule for the season and clubs rarely played more than 130. One hundred and ninety-six runs in 130 games makes Cobb's 144 in 141 game pale into utter insignificance—yes? Then this same Billy Hamilton gathered in 166 runs the very next year and Jesse Burkett, Cleveland's pet nuisance, tabbed up 159 runs in 1896.

King Kelly, the Chicago star, scored 155 runs in 1886 and Dan Brouthers crossed the plate 153 times for Detroit in 1887. Those were the days for 140-game schedules or less.

Then take the safe-hitting figures. In this, Cobb's figures compare better than with the run scoring, or, as will be shown later, with the base stealing. Keeler holds the palm with his 243 hits made in 1897 for Baltimore—scored, too, in less than 130 games, against Cobb's 241 in 141 games. Others have done better than Cobb, for this is the best season Cobb has ever had with the bat. Jess Burkett made 240 hits for Cleveland in 1896; Dan Brouthers, 239 for Detroit in 1887; Duffy, of Boston, 237 in 1894; Burkett, again, in 1895 when he made 235 for Cleveland, and the late Ed. Delehanty 234 for Philadelphia in 1899.

But if these feats tend to take the shine off Cobb's performances in the base hitting line, what must be thought team of 1887, who in 123 games batted of the record of J. E. (Tip) O'Neil, of the St. Louis American association out 277 safe hits for a batting average of .492!

A VALUABLE VIOLIN

Scotsman Was Owner of Instrument With a Romantic History

Mr. Robert Crawford of Edinburgh, who died recently, was the possessor of a Stradivarius violin which cost him $10,000. The instrument has a romantic history. It was bought about 1827 by an eccentric named Tarisio, who gave up his trade as a carpenter and started searching every nook and corner of Italy for Cremona violins. He lived alone in a wretched attic in Milan, where, one day in 1854, he was found dead among a confused heap of fiddles. There were 250 of them, the result of a 30 years' hunt. A noted Parisian dealer, hearing of the wonderful collection, set off for Milan post haste and purchased the 250 instruments for about $16,000. Among them he found one especially magnificent "Strad"—the instrument which Mr. Crawford bought in 1890 for $10,000. The Parisian dealer kept it till his death in 1875, and so anxious was he for its safety that during the Franco-German war he buried it, case and all, in a dampproof, airtight box and did not unearth it till peace was proclaimed.

RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION

Solid vestibuled trains, the last word in railway comfort to the everyday traveler, play a large and important part in the popularity of a railway.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY operates solid vestibuled trains exclusively. It has no old passenger coaches. Its dining car service has set a new standard, its parlor cars are everything that the word implies.

When next you contemplate a railway journey, get a CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY FOLDER and study its convenient schedules.

Your station agent, L. W. Buller, or your up-town agent, J. A. Burke, will supply you with tickets and all information.

Are to Move a Whole Town

From the Michigan Manufacturer.

One of the richest country districts in the world is the township of Stuntz, in the Mesaba range. It is approximately twelve miles square and includes all of the big mines in the Hibbing field. The valuation of the township is more than $100,000,000. It has been reported that because of mining necessities the United States Steel corporation contemplates the removal of the village of Hibbing to a new site.

It is not likely that plans for the undertaking will be taken up for more than a decade to come. Excepting in a very small area the mining activities of the Steel corporation will not seriously encroach upon the improved portions of the town for the next fifteen years, and possibly longer, notwithstanding that some streets even now front upon yawning pits. It is well known that Hibbing is underlaid with ore, controlled by the Steel corporation, and that some day the village will have to give way to the onslaughts of the miner. The only incentive to an early removal, perhaps, would be that the town is growing and that the job will be larger and more expensive with the lapse of time.

The transfer of Hibbing to a new location would not be without precedent on the Mesaba. A goodly portion of Eveleth was shifted to make room for the Steel Corporation's spruce mine, while the site of the former village of Sparta is now a open pit in which steam shovels are at work. The removal of Hibbing will be a tremendous task, for while a village in name, the community is a busy little city with 10,000 people, hundreds of residents, scores of fine business blocks and up-to-date public conveniences.

VETERAN'S LAST WISH

Grateful For The Gun Carriage That Would Clear Name From Dishonor

The remains of Lance-sergeant Edwin Dwyer, a veteran of the Crimean and Indian Mutiny campaigns, were interred at Leeds, the body being conveyed to the cemetery on a gun carriage in charge of a detachment of men from the famous Q battery of the Royal Horse Artillery.

Although he served for nearly twenty years with the colors, Dwyer never received a pension, the War Office authorities asserting that he had forfeited his claim by deserting when in India.

The veteran always denied that he had deserted, and asserted that he had been confused with another man of the same name.

In recent years he made repeated and, if possible, before the King in person.

and, despite the fact that he was nearly 100 years old, he had arranged to march by easy stages to London to lay the case before Lord Haldane.

The infirmities of age intervened, however. When he was told in Leeds Infirmary a few days before his death efforts to have his claim investigated, that he could not hope to recover, the veteran requested that he might be buried with military honors.

"If they grant me this," he said, "it will show that they do not really think that I did desert. It will prove that I am still a soldier."

The tears flowed fast down his face when he was told a few hours before his death that his request was to be granted, and that he would be escorted to his last resting place by Royal Horse Artillerymen from Chapeltown Barracks.

"Thank Heaven!" he said. "Tell them to send a gun from battery Q, with the chestnut horses."

This his last request was also granted.

Why German Toys Are Cheap

"Die Woche," one of the most widely-circulated of German magazines, publishes some figures which explain how it is that German toys can be sold cheaply. For example:—Makers of toy guns are paid less than five cents an hour. Women who paint lead soldiers make about $1.25 a week, and supply their own brushes, colors, and light. A carpenter who makes dolls' furniture earns from $1.00 to $3.00 a week, according to his skill.

The youngest daughter of the Czar, and her brother. The boy is heir to the throne of all the Russias.

SEAWEED CLOTH

A method has been perfected for using the fibre of the Posidonia Australis, which is found in the Southern seas, for making cloth. After the removal from the seaweed of fragments of sea debris—some seed-like objects and very minute shells—the limp straggling fibre is soft, pliable, strong much like wool in its dispostion to curl and twist and easy to spin in its raw state. It takes dye well, except with respect to green, when the result is usually cloudy. Also it requires a mild bleach, to avoid making the fibre tender. The cost of the finished fabric when put on the market 52 inches wide is 12 to 14 cents per yard.

ORIENTAL FANATICS

A Peculiar Man Who Was Venerated as a Saint

In many parts of the Orient a lunatic has always been reverenced as one who is much nearer God than any sane person. During the Crimean war a Mohammedan religionist from Bagdad joined the Turkish army as a ghazi, or warrior for religion. He was a man of rare mental gifts and immense learning. Yet bare-headed and bare-footed, with scanty clothing, his sword girded about his lean loins, this fanatic marched through snow and ice at the head of his division, or led the way into the thckest of the fights. Five times a day, when he said his prayers, he ungirt his sword. But save then, either by day or night, sleeping or waking, he never went unarmed. H was a scholar, thoroughly versed in Arabic and Persian literature. Even in his own house, though speaking to wife, children and friends, no other word but "Ali" ever passed his lips. If he wanted food or drink, if he begged or bought, his wants were expressed by "Ali." He would race up and down the streets of the city for a day, shrieking at the top of his voice, "Ali! Ali!" Everyone venerated this fanatic as a saint. The richest man in the city presented him with a magnificent horse, saddle and bridle. Vaulting into the saddle, as soon as he had received the gift, he galloped through the town shouting, "Ali! Ali!" Riding into the noisy bazaar, he cried "Ali" with such strength of voice as to be heard clearly above the frightful din of the shouting buyers and pounding mechanics.

BORN WITH TEETH

Little French Canadian Stole a March on Mother Nature

Nature has honored an infant son born to the wife of Mr. Albert Bisaillon, a citizen of Montreal, in a remarkable manner. This infant, instead of appearing in this vale of tears with all his teething troubles to worry his early existence, disposed of part of them before arriving, for he was born with two neat, pearly little "toofies."

The proud father has been exhibiting the prodigy to admiring friends ever since the discovery was made, and, a great future is prophecied for the remarkable child.

Preference in Empire Trade

LONDON, Sept. 17.— Twenty leading British motor manufacturers discussed a campaign to oppose the American invasion at a luncheon given today by Ralph D. Blumenfeld, editor of The London Daily Express, which is promoting a movement against American automobiles.

The formation of a big British corporation or the combination of existing companies and the establishment of a protective tariff were the definite plans proposed. Several of the manufacturers made speeches, in which they all agreed that the British factories and workmen should supply the home market with low priced machines, many thousands of which are now coming to England from America.

A letter sent by the Duke of Westminster, read at the luncheon, disclosed the fact that the imperial preference league is raising a fund of $2,500,000 to be used in preparing a propaganda in favor of an imperial scheme, which would give some of the colonial market to British manufacturers.

There was much talk of gaining the colonial market. A difference of opinion prevailed regarding the quality of American low-priced cars. S. F. Edge, a well known automobilist, contended that the British stopped an invasion of American bicycles and boots by producing better articles, but the American cars were in a different class

MOUNTED RIFLES GO

Under the new scheme of South African defence that hardy old corps of frontiersmen, the Cape Mounted Rifles, becomes extinct, ond one of the pathways of British adventure has been closed.

The men are now merged into the constabulary force under the control of the Union Government, and in future Great Britain will not be the happy hunting ground for recruits.

The many duties associated with the Rifles and the vast spaces over which they operated caused to develop in many a sturdy young Englishman independence, courage, initiative, discipline, and endurance, and it offered to many who had outrun the constable or kicked over the traces at home the opportunity of making a fresh start in life.

To some extent it was like the Legion Etrangère, with the advantages of the British flag and the English language. But the bulk of the recruits had no past to forget, and joined the Cape Mounted Rifles because the life of the open veldt with horse and rifle attracted them.

MEMORIES OF WATERLOO

Mr. Charles Pratt, of Ryde, Isle of Wight, celebrated his 103rd birthday recently. He was born at Hambledon, near Portsmouth, and though only six years old at the time of the battle of Waterloo, the old man can well remember the rejoicings.

"In my native village," he said, "everybody cheered and shook hands. And where do you think they fired the guns from? Why, from the church tower!

"Then there was a great dinner for the grown-up people, a tea for the children, and sports for everybody. I can remember the plum puddings as if I saw them last week—scores of them on the long tables that went the length of the field."

RELICS OF ROMANS

Skeletons of Cæsar's Soldiers Dug up in Old English City

Eighteen skeletons were unearthed at Chester, England, by workmen who were preparing a site for an extension of the Chester Infirmary. The skeletons were found at a depth of five feet. The site was undoubtedly used by the twentieth legion of Romans during their occupation of the city. With the skeletons were found several Roman sandals which were wonderfully preserved, also some Roman pottery, tiles and bottles.

HURT THE SECOND

The practice of duelling which prevails on the Continent occasionally provides some comic incidents, sometimes grim ones. Perhaps one which occurred during a duel at Grosswarden, in Hungary, may be described as grimly humorous.

Directly the combat started a great spurt of blood was seen, and a hand, holding a sword fell to the ground between the duellists, who, each thinking the other wounded, immediately stopped, when it was discovered that the hand was that of one of the seconds, who had not sprung back sufficiently quickly at the word "go," and had received a slashing blow from his own principal.

ROCKS TO BE PICKLED

It is stated that at last an effective means of preventing the disintegration of Heligoland has been discovered. This precious fragment of rock, on the preservation of which hundreds of thousands of dollars have already been spent, but which apparently continues to crumble away under the united forces of waves, rain, and frost, is to be drenched in a chemical solution prepared in one of the British Government laboratories. The liquid has been tested on specimens of Heligoland stone, which it is said to have hardened and rendered immune to the influences of the elements. It is proposed to treat 110,000 square metres of the surface with the solution, and this, it is said, can be done at a cost of from $5,000 to $7,500. The preparation is described as a saline solution of fluor-spar and quartz.

The annual report of the Newry Technical School Committee stated that sixty of the seventy-five students had left, the majority having gone to Canada.

ONTARIO'S DEFICIENTS.

There Are 6,000 of Them in Province Declares Downey.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—That there are at least six thousand feeble-minded people in Ontario was the declaration made by Joseph P. Downey, superintendent of the Ontario Home for Feeble-Minded, in an address before the Canadian Public Health Association yesterday. "Of these, probably one-third have been identified and are receiving some attention," said Dr. Downey. "But a great majority remains to bear the penalties imposed upon them either in their own homes or herded with criminal class for offences for which they should not be held either morally or legally responsible."

Only by training in an institution could an idiot be helped. The physically rugged are often allowed to do chores and are simply regarded as dull-witted instead of being given proper attention.

Dr. Downey took a strong stand against the mentally and physically unfit being allowel to marry. He stated that there are now at the Orillia institution thirty-nine families contributing two members each, and seventeen families contributing five each.

"A sound body is no protection against infectious disease," was the startling declaration made in an address by Dr. W. H. Hill, M.D., D.P.A., of London, Ont. He stated that the most pressing and immediate thing which public health work can do is to abolish infectious diseases. "This is the most powerful and compelling reason of all for the abolition of infectious diseases," he said. "The highest physical development of the body, the best state of general health is not a protection against infectious diseases. No more frequently repeated nor more painfully errant fallacy than this exists. If we would have sound minds in sound bodies, a people highly bred, well cared for, hygienically housed, clothed and fed, we must get rid of infectious diseases, for it is just such a people who are most susceptible to infection."

OFFICERS TO HELP.

Belfast Story Says Military Men Will Go Unionist.

New York, Sept. 19.—A cable to The Tribune from London says: A remarkable story comes from Belfast that, before embarking on the present campaign against home rule, the leaders received the assurance that, in the event of home rule being pressed to its final stage, a certain number of army officers, representing every branch of the service, would throw in their lot with the Unionists.

The list is said to include many officers of high rank, with 36 colonels and lieutenant-colonels, 43 majors, 69 captains, 31 lieutenants and 288 men holding the rank of sergeant-major or sergeant.

One of the most disquieting features of the present situation is the increase in the number of persons who own firearms. In the Nationalist district of West Belfast, one dealer is disposing of revolvers at the rate of one hundred a week, and expects that this rate of sale will continue for some time, a large number of the weapons being disposed of on the club system.

There is reason to believe that what is happening in West Belfast is also taking place in other districts, and notably in the city of Dublin. The authorities are perfectly well aware that the traffic is being carried on, and sometime ago the Government actually discussed the steps that could be taken to deal with the importation of these arms. It was then decided to take no action at the moment, and thus matters have been allowed to drift.

Told of Death; He Dies.

Brampton, Sept. 19.—As he stepped from the train on which he had hurried from Chicago to see his father, Charles Wiggins, formerly of this town, was informed that his father, John Wiggins, had died yesterday afternoon, and immediately dropped dead.

John Wiggins, who lived in Brampton for many years, was taken seriously ill a few days ago, and word was sent to Chicago to his son, Charles, to hurry home. Charles left his business and arrived at Brampton at seven o'clock Tuesday night. In the afternoon his father died. He was met at the station by friends, who informed him of his father's death, and he fell dead on the station platform.

Dropped From Committee.

New York, Sept. 19.—At a meeting of the Republican National Committee here yesterday it was decided to drop all members who have declared adherence to Roosevelt. Action in the case of California was deferred, as a sub-committee was appointed to examine into the situation there and recommend a successor to Russ Avery.

Among those dropped are: Walter Brown, Ohio; B. D. Whiting, New Jersey; I. A. Caswell, Minnesota; W. S. Edwards, West Virginia; C. C. Priestley, Oklahoma, and Richmond Pearson, Alabama. Several of these have already resigned.

All members of the committee present expressed themselves as being satisfied with the outlook for Taft.

Duke at Vancouver.

Vancouver, Sept. 19.—With perfect weather Vancouver presented a brilliant spectacle as the Governor-General, the Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia made their entry here amid the cheers of the tens of thousands of people who thronged the streets through which the royal visitors proceeded on their way from the station to the courthouse, where the civic address of welcome was presented.

Woman's Life Spared.

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—Upon the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, the Government has decided to commute to life imprisonment the death sentenced passed upon Mrs. McGee, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., convicted of the murder of her six children by poisoning.

LAURIER AT COBALT.

Cobalt, Sept. 19.—There was little that was noteworthy in the address of Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the evening rally in Cobalt last night. Rather, it was a reiteration and a further emphasizing of the fact that the Liberal party is still pledged to its policy of reciprocity with the United States, and a lament in the leader's familiar serio-comic vein that the electors had been so sadly deluded a year ago.

Cobalters turned out in force to hear the Liberal leader and his colleagues in the Athletic Association's rink, when he again dwelt upon reciprocity and its rejection last year. Many supported him on the platform.

When referring to talk of his resignation, the ex-Premier stated that though he had reached the age at which he might hand down the leadership to one of his lieutenants, his party leaders had stated that they had gone out of office under the old chief, they would stand for nothing but to go back into power under his guidance. "My interests in public affairs have not ceased," said he, "and the reason why I am here is to learn the needs and requirements of this community.

"I find that you are in no way different to any other locality. What you want is market and transportation which is the natural need of every community.

"One outstanding feature is that what an American market has done for Cobalt and its silver industry can be done to facilitate the needs of others.

"Western wheat must be exported under the same conditions," continued Sir Wilfrid, "we helped to operate the large crops by widening provincial interdependence by the enlargement of railways, canals and other transportation facilities.

"We wanted to construct the Georgian Bay Canal years ago, but on account of there being one railway crossing from coast to coast, the Grand Trunk Pacific was of greater importance to the nation at large and should be given the preference."

A crowd of 2,000 sightseers put in an appearance at the station to meet the party on its arrival. Receptions and introductions followed, after which Sir Wilfrid was conducted around the town, stopping en route to open the new Y.M.C.A. building.

Before making his declaration he said: "I was told in Cobalt in these northern halls I would find nothing but silver, but I see here something more than silver. I see here a crop of children such as we in Quebec—and we have a reputation to maintain—could not beat. They are all young Canadians, though springing from different nationalities. They are the best expression of Canada's hopes for the future.

"I now have the honor to declare that this building is now open for work. I have one request to make, however to the trustees of the schools, that they will let these children play to-day and not work, and that they will grant a half-holiday in the schools for this afternoon."

During the afternoon the party made an extensive tour of the mines, and inspected the refining machinery and operations. He was also presented with a silver brick.

Rubber Country Claimed.

New York, Sept. 19.—Invasion of the Putumayo rubber region by Peru is alleged by Colombia, in a resolution passed by the Colombian Senate and House, and made public here yesterday by Julio Betancourt, the Colombian minister to the United States.

This district and that of Caqueta are by rights Colombian territory, the resolutions declared and the call upon Peru by England and the United States to put an end to outrages in the Putumayo territory was misdirected. It is asserted that if Colombia had not been prevented by fortuitous circumstances from exercising her sovereignty, the "deeds of ferocity and cruelty which have so justly horrified the civilized world, would never have been committed."

Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 19—Walter E. Davis and his wife, who were taken into custody at Toronto a short time ago, and brought here charged with connection in the robbery of the Bank of Montreal at Westminster a year ago, were dismissed yesterday morning by Magistrate Edmonds of Westminster. Counsel for the bank stated that there was nothing to connect the prisoners with the robbery and, accordingly, withdrew the charge.

The magistrate told the couple they could go, but they had not left the dock when they were re-arrested and placed in custody. The new charge was of having stolen money in their possession in Toronto. They will be taken to Toronto next week to stand trial there.

Turks Lost 1,000 Dead.

Rome, Sept. 19.—The most sanguinary engagements of the war in Tripoli were fought Tuesday near Derna, a town on the Mediterranean coast, 140 miles northeast of Bengazi. The Italians lost 61 men killed and 113 wounded. The Turks and Arabs left more than 800 dead on the fields. Forty-one prisoners, including an Arab chief, fell into the hands of the Italians.

The battle opened at daybreak, when a force of Turks and Arabs surprised and attacked the Italian lines. The fight raged for four hours, but the superior Italian artillery, supplemented by brilliant bayonet charges, finally routed the mussulmans, who fled in disorder.

Gen. Reisoli, commander of the Italian army in Tripoli, in his report to the War Office estimates that the Turks and Arabs must have lost 1,000 men killed, including those who were carried off and that more than 1,000 others were wounded.

Weather Fine, Men Scarce.

Winnipeg, Sept. 19.—Perfect weather conditions for harvesting and threshing continue to prevail throughout the prairie provinces, and neither rain nor frest is reported. Prospects are for a continuation of the present conditions for the next few days, generally speaking, although showers in Alberta are predicted for to-day.

It will take another thousand men in the district surrounding Brandon to harvest and thresh the crops unless serious losses are to result, and it is stated on good authority that fully twenty thousand additional men could find work in the prairie provinces for the next two months.

To Follow Canada.

London, Sept. 19.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Times' Wellington correspondent wires that in the House of Representatives Tuesday Hon. Mr. Myers asked the Premier if the time hadn't arrived when New Zealand should follow Canada and ask representation by a minister at the Imperial Defence Committee. He suggested the difficulty of distance could be overcome by the appointment of a minister for external affairs.

Premier Massey replied that the Government would seriously consider the matter during the recess with a view of submitting the proposals next session.

Dropped Bombs Into Warship Funnels

New York, Sept. 19.—A London cable says: King George watched the sham battles in East Anglia yesterday between the blue and red armies, congratulating the Territorials on their splendid work.

It is reported that bombs were dropped down the funnels of the warships from a height of 1,000 feet with absolute accuracy.

Looks More Like War.

Constantinople, Sept. 19.—Turko-Montenegrin relations were again strained to the verge of warfare yesterday. The tribesmen along the frontier have resumed fighting the Turks. It is charged that Monenegrins are helping them.

Death Due to Blow.

Owen Sound, Sept. 19.—The coroner's jury last evening returned the following verdict on the death of Geo. Green, the old man who died Tuesday at the hospital here after lying for four days in a state of unconsciousness:

"We find that George Green came to his death from a wound on the side of the head. From the evidence, we conclude that said wound was caused by falling, resulting from a blow on the chin struck by some person unknown to the jury.

Crushed Under Lorry.

St. Catharines, Sept. 19.—An accident with fatal results took place on the western hill shortly before seven o'clock last evening, in which Sidney Secord, many years an employe of the Hendril Cartage Co., was crushed beneath a heavily-loaded lorry he was driving, killing him instantly.

Alberta Elections In November.

Edmonton, Sept. 19.—The Alberta general elections will be held between Nov. 15 and 25. At a session of the Legislature in October a redistribution bill will be passed and twelve new seats added. Edmonton and Calgary each will have three members.

Would Like to Enter Parliament.

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—It is doubtful if the Liberals will put up a candidate for the bye-election in Carleton, consequent upon the death of Edward Kidd. There will be numerous aspirants for the Conservative nominations, including probably Dr. Groves, of Carp, G. C. Richardson, of Woodroofe, and Ald. Garland, of Ottawa.

Wider Power to Garnish.

Hamilton, Sept. 19.—A change in the provincial act relating to writs of garnishment will be asked for by the recently-organized Retail Grocers' Association, the second executive board meeting of which was held in the board of trade rooms here last night. The grocers will ask the Government at the next session of the Legislature to so amend the act as to further protect them against "dead beats," many of whom under the present act cannot be garnisheed.

Provinces Deeply Interested.

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—All the provinces are likely to be represented at the hearing before the Supreme Court next month of the important companies' incorporation case. The Federal Government has filed its factum, in which it raises the question as to the right of provinces to license the operation of federally incorporated companies, and also questions the right of a provincial concern to do business beyond the territorial limits of the province.

Niagara Peaches for London.

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—As a result of the successful exhibit at Crystal Palace, in London, last year, Canada is exporting weekly to England a car load of peaches from the Niagara district.

Great care is exercised in picking and packing.

Bruce Sent For Trial.

Hamilton, Sept. 19.—James Bruce, accused of the murder of the companion of his girlish wife by poisoning, was committed for trial yesterday by Magistrate Jelfs.

There was nothing new in the evidence.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Sept. 18.—There was a good enquiry from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat, but cables from the United Kingdom were poor, while those from the continent were firmer and 1½d higher in some cases, consequently a little business was worked to the latter ports. American corn is weaker and lower, with sales of car lots to arrive at 83c to 84c. The oats situation is becoming very strong, owing to the limited supplies available on spot and in the west, and in consequence some millers have been obliged to close down their oatmeal mills for want of stock. On spot the demand is good, with sellers now asking 50c for sample oats, and buyers bidding 49c. Graded oats are scarce and ½c higher. The demand for Ontario malting barley is fair, and sales of some round lots of choice quality were made at 75c. A steady business is passing in new crop spring wheat flour for export, and the local demand for old is fair. The demand for millfeed is in excess of the supply. An easier feeling prevails in the butter market, but prices show no change. In cheese a fair amount of business is doing at firmer prices. Dressed hogs advanced 25c on small supplies and good demand.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, Sept. 18.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market were 12 cars, 154 cattle, 262 hogs, 253 sheep and 8 calves.

J. B. Dellane bought 16 stockers, 850 lbs. each, at $4.50 per cwt.; 8 heifers, 770 lbs., at $4.75.

Messrs. Sparkhall & Talbot bought 5 butchers, 750 lbs. each, at $5; 2 springers, at $85 each; 1 bull, at $3.50 per cwt.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Sept. 18.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Sept. 14 were 1350 cattle, 2700 sheep and lambs, 2250 hogs and 950 calves, while the offerings on the market this morning amounted to 1000 cattle, 1300 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 400 calves.

A weaker feeling prevailed in the market for cattle and prices declined owing to the increased supplies of common and medium stock coming forward, which have also had a depressing influence on the market for choice beeves. At the reduced prices there was a good demand from butchers and a fairly active trade was done. The top price realized for choice steers was $6.50, while medium sold at $5 and $6 and inferior to common at $3.50 and $4.50 per 100 pounds.

There were no choice butchers' cows on the market, but the best brought $5 and the lower grades from that down to $3.50 per 100 pounds. The quality of the bulls offered was inferior and only fit for canning purposes, for which the demand was fair at $2.75 to $3 per 100 pounds.

There was no change in the condition of the market for small meats. The offerings of lambs were fair, for which the demand was good, and sales of Quebec stock were made at $5.50 to $5.75 per 100 pounds, and there were no Ontarios on the market. The demand for calves was good, with sales of milk-fed stock from $3 to $10 and grass-fed at from $2.50 to $3 each. Hogs were stronger and prices advanced 10c per 100 pounds, with sales of selected lots at $8.65 to $8.90 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

WHEN YOUR HAIR BRUSHES OUT

Your hair is as sensitive as your skin—even more so. It stands up under heavy hats, curling irons, and diseases of the scalp, etc.—But there is a limit.

When you comb and brush your hair in the morning, watch for the "TRAILERS" that turn grey, fall out, and comb out with the first morning brush!

You MUST know that there's something wrong. If your hair was in good health, it wouldn't fall out, nature never intended that. There is something wrong at the root of things—the hair needs a tonic—a restorer.

When you are sick you take medicine. That is your first thought. Its turning grey, falling out, are both ways the hair has of "complaining of illness." It can't do it in any other way.—Do YOUR part. Use HAY'S HAIR HEALTH

The Hungry Bard.

[After Wordsworth.]

Canned foods are too much with us; late and soon;
At all our meals we do lay waste our powers;
Little e'er seen in nature that is ours.
We have eaten our hearts away, and 'tis not noon.
This sea that bares her bosom to the moon
Stirs hunger that is howling at all hours
And is not stilled in sleep, like sleeping flowers.
And so it goes to fall from early June.
We are not fed—great grief, I'd rather be
A baby feeding on a ring outworn!
So might I on vacation by the sea
Have fodder that would make me less forlorn,
Have sight of a far distant uncanned pea
Or taste again an ear of fresh green corn.

Didn't Speak the Language.

Mrs. Mills was a woman of a few words. One afternoon she went into a music store to buy a book of an opera for her daughter. A salesman walked up to her, and in her quiet way Mrs. Mills said, "'Mikado' libretto."

"What's that, ma'am?"

"'Mikado' libretto," repeated the woman.

School Children's Flower Show

The officers and directors of the Belleville Horticultural Society met last evening for the purpose of deciding what action should be taken in reference to holding the Public School Children's Flower Show. Owing to the fact that four of last year's Public Schools have beed absorbed in the new Public Schools, and to the further fact that Pine Street School has not yet been organized, the directors had arranged for holding the Flower Show as usual in the different schools and giving a first, second and third prize in each division in the several schools, but owing to the impossibility to do so under the circumstances, they decided at last night's meeting to notify the Principals of the schools that no Flower Show would be held this year, but instead, that the children to whom aster seeds were distributed would be required to write a short essay or description as to how they grew the asters from the seeds given by the Society and also the different colors grown and such other observations such pupil desired to make. The Principals were to fix the hour that would be set apart when the pupils would write in each division. The Principals are to hand the essays over to Mr. S. A. Gardner for the purpose of passing upon, and the naming of the successful pupils. Further details for the carrying out of the above to be for future consideration. All papers to be in the hands of Mr. Gardner on or before the 15th October next.

The Doukhobors May Leave B. C.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Sept. 18.—Because the laws of the Dominion and those of British Columbia in particular conflict with their indeas of personal liberty, it is possible that the two thousand Doukhobors in this province will soon trek to Colorado, where they may live as they please and not even become naturalized citizens.

Peter Veregin, the leader of the cult in Canada, following the clash with the provincial authorities, who demanded that the Russians adhere to the laws regarding registration of births and deaths, has been in consultation with a special officer from the United States.

Vergin declares that if they move they will abandon the ten thousand acres they now own in the Kootenay and all the irrigation works they have in hand.

The crisis became acute last June, when two members of the colony were arrested and sentenced to two months' imprisonment for not making a declaration of the death of relatives. In order to hamper the police in their investigation the colony's burying ground was ploughed up, and all traces of the graves obliterated.

The Doukhobors are practical Socialists, holding everything in common, and their motto is "The Christian Community of Universal Brotherhood" They have no written laws, and nothing is fixed or moulded in their worship. Theft is unknown among the Doukhobors, as is drunkenness, smoking, profanity, brawling, and lying. They are vegetarians and will not eat even eggs.

The great stumbling block in their relations with government is that the Doukhobors recognize no authority over a man but God. They have so far compromised on this point as to pay their taxes.

GRAND TRUNK SYSTEM NEWS ITEMS

In connection with its terminal improvements at Bay City the Grand Trunk is putting up an addition to is station costing in the neighborhood of $75,000, as well as a $20,000 freight shed 34 by 303 feet.

Mr. W. G. White, Industrial Commissioner of Tofield, Alta., a Grand Trunk Pacific junction point has just returned from a trip to Toronto as the result of which he has been able to secure a foundry and machine shops for that centre. The city is granting free natural gas for 10 years as an inducement for the establishment of this industry and it is hoped several others will be obtained in the near future; several of which are already in view; the properties of clay and sand in its vicinity in particular causing considerable interest.. If these prove as valuable as is hoped the citizens of Tofield are confident that large industries will be immediately established.

Mr. H. R. Charlton, General Advertising Agent of the Grand Trunk System, is in receipt of a report from Belleville, Ont., which states that maskinonge fishing in that district is exceptionally good this season, a New York visitor having caught four big fellows at Maskoota Bay four miles east of the city on the day following his arrival. Other equally good catches have been made in the bay as well as in the river a few miles north, while some fine catches of bass have also been made in the bay and river. Ducks were reported fairly numerous for the opening of the season on Monday last and this sport wil be materially improved with the arrival of the fall ducks about the middle of next month.

Zam-Buk Worked Complete Cure

Mrs A J. Cameron, of Melita, Man., writes: "When my little boy was six weeks old he had eczema. The sores simply covered his face and head, and I had to tie his hands to keep him from scratching and making them bleed. The doctor gave me several kinds of ointment, but they did no good. I then tried fourteen boxes of an advertised remedy. Still there was no improvement! I tried another ointment, and several medicine soaps, but the little fellow still continued to suffer, and I began to fear nothing would do him any good. He suffered in this way for over a year, when one day a friend said, 'Why don't you try Zam-Buk?'

"I began with this balm, and a week's treatment made a great difference. I persevered, and within a month every sore was healed. I feared that the scars had been so bad on his head, his hair would not grow, but thanks to Zam-Buk his scalp is perfectly healthy; and he has long curls now."

For all skin diseases, cuts, burns and blood poisoning use Zam-Buk and Zam-Buk Soap. All dealers and stores, and Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

How to Clean Ladies' Clothes

Every woman is eager to know how make garments, hats and feathers appear as good as new. The New York Times gives these directions as reliable:

To clean white kid slippers—Wash the slippers well with benzine, using a soft brush; rinse well in fresh benzine, and while the slippers are wet rub a little French chalk thoroughly into the kid. This helps to remove the black marks the slippers obtain by wearing. Then put the slippers to dry and they will look quite fresh and clean.

To renovate velvet—The velvet should first of all be stretched, pile side upward, over the steam from a kettle of boiling water. As the steam begins to rise get some one to brush the pile brisky with a stiff brush. Then spread out flat to dry, and afterward brush lightly again. When the material has been worn a great deal and is very soiled, sponge it lightly with benzine. But remember this is very inflammable, and must not be used near a fire or light of any kind

To clean a sunshade—Open the sunshade and have ready a tub of warm water, a piece of hard soap and a nail brush. Rub the soap thickly on the brush, moisten it with the water, and carefully brush the sunshade on the outside, paying special attention to the dirty reeve that runs up the middle of each division. Also brush around the top. When the outside has been done the sunshade should be placed on a table and each division brushed on the inside. The soap should then be removed by pouring clean water over it, and lastly, a solution of gum water should be poured over the silk. This gives a slight stiffening and when dry it looks almost like new. The sunshade must be left open until quite dry.

Curling feathers—When feathers are being curled they should be held in the left hand, with the fibres to be first curled lying over the forefinger of the same hand. The curling knife, or, if this is not to be had, a blunt instrument or paper knife will do equally well, should then be drawn under the fibres, when they ring or curl at that point and should not be less than a dime piece in size. Caution should be exercised in manipulating the fibres over the knife, or, instead of a soft ring, the fibres will take corkscrew formation and be ruined.

To clean white straw hat—Add one tablespoonful of ammonia to two quarts of boiling water. Dust the hat and dip it in this solution; then sprinkle sulphur all over it. Soap well a nail brush and scrub the hat, dipping the brush very frequently into the water. Rinse in tepid water and dry in the air.

To Check Spread Of Potato Canker

OTTAWA, Sept. 18.—An Order-in-Council has been passed amending those sections of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, which deals with the potato canker, by the substituting of a clause prohibiting the importation of all potatoes from Europe in addition to New Foundland and other points mentioned.

Potato canker is a virulent fungus disease which has done tremendous destruction in Europe during some years past. Until last year importation of potatoes from Great Britain and Ireland and other European points had not been heavy either to this country or to the United States, but the failure of the crop last year and the high prices led to heavy importation.

As the potato canker is a disease which not only absolutely destroys the tubers, but it is very hard to eradicate, and will remain in the soil for seven or eight years, the most strenuous precautions are justified. In Great Britain a great deal of very costly work is being undertaken in regard to this pest. The United States have recently taken action by passing an Act prohibiting the importation of potatoes from Great Britain and Ireland and several countries in continental Europe and Australia.

Army Manœuvres Are Called Off

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The British manoeuvres were suddenly abandoned to-night. "Dismiss" was sounded throughout both armies this evening, and after a hard day's fighting the troops returned to their camps. The reason for the abandonment of the manoeuvres is not stated officially.

The war correspondents supply conflicting explanations. It is declared on the one hand that the "Reds" and "Blues" had attained such positions relative each to the other that only "cold steel" could decide the issue. Another statement is that the armies have been unable to get in touch with each other owing to the successful aeroplane scouting which checkmated every movement by each side, and that the science of aviation has revolutionized warfare.

One correspondent describes it as a "glorious muddle," adding that sixty thousand troops were so scattered over the campaign area that the greatest generals could not have brought them together as coherent armies.

One of the most experienced correspondents in real warfare offers no criticism, but admits his ignorance in regard to the victor. He is inclined to believe that the defenders won, but records the fact that some officers hold the contrary view, and nobody knows whether London was saved or lost.

There will be a conference of the commanders at Cambridge to-morrow, after which an official statement as to why the manoeuvres were abandoned may be expected as well as judgment on the issue by General Sir John D. P. French, chief of the Imperial general staff, who acts as director of manoeuvres. There was much firing, charging, marching, and countermarching throughout the day, along 24 miles of country, but the onlookers were not aware whether or not it was a battle on a grand scale. If it was not, it was anyway as hard work for Tommy Atkins.

There was an ugly accident during the day, caused by the bursting of a big Howitzer shell. One artilleryman's arm was torn off and two or three other soldiers were more or less seriously wounded.

BRUTAL COMMANDMENTS

Strange Document Introduced as Evidence in Sensational Murder Trial

The trial at Rome of Lieutenant Paterno for the murder of Princess Trigona, lady-in-waiting to Queen Elena, was remarkable for its disclosure of an extraordinary document despatched to the princess by a jealous Sicilian just as she was about to go into residence at the Quirinal Palace for the performance of her Court duties.

Thou shalt not go to the theatre.

Thou shalt shun the greetings of men.

Thou shalt not pay visits, nor on any account receive visits from males.

Thou shalt never reply to masculine voices over the telephone.

The prisoner Paterno seemed much cast down by the entrance of the Princess's maid, named Maddi, who with regard to the bullying and blackmail alleged to have been practised on the victim by her spendthrift lover said that Paterno, on taking $800 from her just after she had obtained this loan through her lawyer, kissed the princess's hands in contentment.

The Princess's lawyer stated that shortly before the tragedy the unhappy lady confessed to him that the brutal officer had that very day beaten her so savagely that her body was livid with weals and bruises. When Paterno recognised that his further exploitation of the princess was frustrated by legal advice, so intent was he on provoking scandal at any cost that he arranged for a foul-mouthed cabman to ascend to her private apartment in the Royal Palace and create a scene on the pretence of not having been paid his fare.

Both the princess and Lieutenant Paterno belonged to the Sicilian nobility, and were well known in Rome society. The murder took place in a room at a small hotel after a prolonged struggle, her assassin afterwards attempting suicide by shooting himself.

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

I dared not trust myself to attempt the passage by swimming; my skill in that art was small, and with an infuriated hippopotamus close to one's skirts, the idea was not to be put in practice. Besides, it would be perilous for me to have my rifle and small stock of ammunition wetted by water.

How was I to pass the night, and how the proceeding day? If long detained on the isle there was every prospect of my being starved to death; so now I found myself in a predicament fully more awkward than when besieged by the Amapondas on the nameless rock in the plain. Had my frail bark but borne me fairly across, I might yet, though afoot, have reached some settlement or larger village.

If I had been aware that, though broad, the Orange River was there remarkably shallow, I would have made an attempt to ford it in the face of their musketry; but I knew nothing of this till about sunset, when the purple shadows were falling on its crimsoned flow, and a wild cry of joy involuntarily escaped me on beholding—what?

A party of our own 12th Lancers, who, with all their red and white swallow-tailed banneroles fluttering gaily on the wind, white linen puggerees tied round their caps, and in their gay uniform—blue faced with scarlet—dashed at a rapid trot down to the river's edge, where they speedily extended in skirmishing order, and with their short carbines, which they carried unslung, with the butt resting on the right thigh, they opened a rattling fire upon the men of Vonga, who immediately mounted and fled, carrying off with them Mariqua, whom I never saw more, and certainly had no desire to see.

"There is a white man on the rock in the river," cried a voice in English, which came most sweetly and as music, to my ear, showing that they had seen or discovered me.

"I have been a prisoner, and escaped," cried I joyfully.

"With your life? Well, by Jove! he is a wonder!" replied the officer in command.

"What force are you?" I asked.

"Her Majesty's 12th Lancers."

"So I see, sir; but are other troops at hand?"

"Yes. A great field force is coming on fast. We are the advanced guard of the army, under his Excellency the Governor-General in person. Are the Kaffirs in force beyond you?"

"No. Are you marching against Sandilli?"

"He was used up long ago. We are moving against Mosheesh, the great Basuto chief, and cross the Orange River to-night."

"But how?"

"By fording it."

"Is it so shallow?" I asked with astonishment.

"Our engineers say so."

On hearing this I at once rushed into the stream, which came nearly up to my armpits, and forgetting all about the two riverhorses, gained in safety the other side, where the wondering lancers gatheerd about me.

Seeing the miserable aspect I presented, the officer kindly gave me some cognac from his flask, and proffered his cigar case a luxury I was not slow in accepting.

"Are the 74th Highlanders with you?" I asked.

"Yes; and the 2nd, or Queen's Own, too."

"Clarice, Clarice," thought I, with joy; "then I shall have tidings of you at last."

"Well, my friend, how long have you been in the hands of those confounded niggers?" asked the officer, a handsome young fellow, eyeing me with much interest and commiseration, but through his glass, nevertheless.

"Since the storming of the Amatolas."

"In the month of June?"

"Yes."

"Good heaven! and this is now November—five months."

"Nearly."

"Stay; a thought strikes me. Are you Haddon, late of the—th Fusiliers who was serving as a volunteer with the 74th Highlanders?"

"The same. I was wounded—stunned by a blow of a war club—in the advance and was left behind."

"And how were you spared?" he asked with growing interest.

"I fell into unusually kind hands" said I, loth that the name of Mariqua should appear in my narrative at that time.

"I must beg to congratulate you on your preservation. You were reported dead—to have been cruelly tortured to death, in fact, by old Sandilli; and a very touching and flattering biography of you appeared in the Cape Argus," continued the officer, laughing. "But my party forms the advanced guard, so we must cross the river here, and feel our way on the opposite bank. The head of the first brigade is already close at hand. Good-bye for the present. Close in men! forward from the right by threes!"

and bowing to me, he led the way through the stream, which, much to my surprise in the deepest part of the ford barely flowed to his holster flaps; and ere long I saw the banneroles and bright lance heads of his party above the mangroves on the opposite bank, as they rode in extended order slowly over the ground by which I had fled in such haste to the river.

My first reflection was of how the apparently authentic notice of my death notice would affect Clarice—my poor Clarice—and I felt keen sorrow for the tears she must have shed, and the grief she must have endured

Ascending a little eminence which commanded a view of the plain beyond the river, my heart beat lightly and happily when I saw our troops advancing on the line of march, with their rifles at the trail, but with drums beating and colours flying. They were formed in two brigades, the first consisting of the 2nd, or Queen's Regiment, and 74th Highlanders, under Colonel Macduff of the latter corps; the second was formed by the 43rd, or Perthshire; then the Rocket Battery, the Rifle Brigade, in their sombre green uniform, the gay 12th Lancers, the Cape Corps, and the Artilllery, all toiling on under a blazing sun which gave more than one man a fatal coup de soleil for they had marched for more than twenty miles through a district that was literally a burning desert, and now their uniforms were powdered white by the whirlwinds of gravel and dust, amid which their arms and appointments would flash occasionally, though all else was veiled in obscurity.

On they came, marching sturdily and steadily towards the broad current of the magnificent Orange River and now hastening towards the 74th Highlanders, I scanned their ranks for the tall and stalwart figure of my friend Douglas; but I looked along the line of captains in vain. Had he been killed, or had he died of the wound I had seen him receive?

Notwithstanding my wretched plight, I was soon recognized by many officers and men of the 74th, and loud exclamations of welcome, surprise, and warm congratulations greeted me as they marched past.

"What wonder is this? Haddon—Dick Haddon alive and hearty? How has this come about, old fellow?" cried the jovial Jack Bonteine, who, though an officer, had, for his own comfort, a travelling knapsack strapped to his back, a canvas havresack for provisions slung over one shoulder, his cloak, sword belt, canteen, and telescope slung over the other, and looked nearly as dirty and hairy, and quite as brown as myself, by the long exposure.

In a few words I had repeated to him all I had cared to tell the lancer, and added—

"But where is Douglas? I do not see him here. He's not dead I hope?"

"Dead? Not dead at all. He never was better in his life than when we saw him last. But he has got a staff appointment, and has cut the Cape and the 74th together."

"Gone?"

"To Jamaica."

"When?"

"About two months ago."

"To Jamaica?" I repeated, almost mechanically. "And what of Major Carysfort?"

"Dead poor fellow. I think he died soon after we carried the Amatola Heights. He expired at an obscure Dutch village, and was buried by the boors."

"Fanny—his wife, I mean."

"Ah, la belle Fanny is now Mrs. Gerald Douglas, and has accompanied the accomplished officer who bears that name to the West Indies, taking with her that pretty sister, whom perhaps you may remember."

"Miss Haywood?"

"Exactly. Nice girl, rather."

The first brigade halted now, preparatory to crossing the river, and I felt like one in a dream when many officers of the 74th came round me in a group. Tall Archy Campbell, Forbes the doctor, litle Ensign Calder, and others, all bronzed, bearded in patched uniforms, tattered tartans and tarnished embroidery, anxious to learn how I had been spared the terrible fate to which the prisoners were subjected, and their wonder seemed to increase on learning that I owed my life to the care of the merciless Sandilli.

"It is passing strange," said Bonteine. "Did you see any of his wives, of whom he is said to have as many as a farmyard chanticleer, and to use them as that anointed king of Cockayne, the Defender of the Faith, did his?"

"I saw none, I believe. He had me secluded at his home farm, in the Gulu Valley. Among his own people he does not seem to be a bad sort of fellow, and he fully lives in the bosoms and affections of his followers. Douglas and the ladies," I added "would sail from Cape Town I presume?"

"And what has become of Percival Graves?"

"He of the white kids and parted hair?"

"I don't see him among the staff."

"Oh, Graves got tired of the Cape when he found that the fair Haywood was going; so he got sick leave on a certificate from. Forbes here that a sea voyage was necessary for the restoration of his health, and he, too, sailed in the Eugenie."

"With them?"

"Yes."

This information struck painfully a new or rather an old chord in my heart, and the thought flashed upon me rapidly: Clarice and Graves thrown together, so perilously as people always are on board of a ship, myself supposed to be dead, and she quite open to a favourable offer from her old admirer, too, the handsome and wealthy young Guardsman.

"YOU'LL SUFFER ALL YOUR LIFE"

That's what the Doctor told him

"Fruit-a-tives Cured Him"

CHESTERVILLE, ONT., Jan. 25th 1911

"For over twenty years, I have been troubled with Kidney Disease, and the doctors told me they could do me no good, and that I would be a sufferer for the rest of my life.

I doctored with different medical men and tried many advertised remedies, but none of them suited my case.

Nearly a year ago, I tried "Fruit-a-tives". I have been using this fruit medicine nearly all the time since, and am glad to say that I am cured.

I give "Fruit-a-tives" the credit of doing what the doctors said was impossible.

I am now seventy-six years old, and in first class health"

GEO. W. BARKLEY.

In all the world, there is no other remedy that has cured so many cases of so-called "incurable" kidney disease, as "Fruit-a-tives".

This famous fruit medicine acts directly on the kidneys—healing and strengthening them—and ridding the system of the waste matter that poisons the blood.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

SOBRIETY IN THE ARMY

Seventy-one Per Cent. of West Riding Regiment are Total Abstainers

At the annual meeting of the Royal Army Temperance Association, the plate for the branch with the highest percentage of total abstainers was awarded to the 2nd West Riding Regiment, with 71.23 per cent. The Association has 67,433 members, of whom 38,405 serve in the Indian Army. Of the members of the Army serving at home 28,330 are total abstainers.

Earl Curzon of Kedleston, who presided, said he found that most of the trouble and collisions in which soldiers were involved originated from drink. The success of the Association in India was indisputable. Wherever there was a regimental unit and a barrack there ought to be a temperance room where the soldier-member would have agreeable surroundings. Every general officer who had commanded troops in war during the last quarter of a century would tell them that the best marching army and the best fighting army was the sober army.

Lord Roberts, who also spoke, referred to the great change which had come over the morality of the Army in India since the days when it was a common thing to supply every soldier with a "tot of arrack" each morning.

AN AERIAL TAXICAB

British Inventor Shows a Queer Fish-shaped Machine to Carry Passenger

The aerial taxicab has apparently arrived. A peculiar machine was shown at Brooklands, which the experts termed an "Avro," derived from the name of Mr. A. V. Roe, the maker. It is, perhaps, one of the most extraordinary aerial vessels yet construced. The body is shaped like a fish, and has two great staring eyes which, on close inspection, turn out to be windows. The pilot sits in complete seclusion, and climbs into the small cabin through an opening at the top, which is remindful of a submarine conning tower. No draughts can bother him as he sits in a light metal armchair, and no fumes from the engine enter the cabin, which is well ventilated by small air currents during flight. At present the "Avro" only seats one person beside the pilot, but the inventor is rapidly maturing plans for the accommodation of more passengers.

The Cabinet has allotted a large sum for the immediate erection of apprentices' quarters at the Experimental Farm outside Wellington. LEFTY LOUIS WAS THE SLAYER OF ROSENTHAL

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—The District Attorney's Office obtained to-day what it believes is convincing evidence that the actual assassins of Herman Rosenthal were "Lefty Louie" and "Gyp the Blood."

Witnesses of the shooting have been found who declare that they were the only two of the four accused gunmen who fired at the murdered gambler.

The new evidence tends to prove that as a matter of fact Lefty Louie fired the shots that struck Rosenthal. Gyp the Blood also fired at him, but his shots did not reach their mark.

"Dago Frank" and "Whitie" Louis were on hand to protect the other two from interference. It is understood they did not fire any shots.

Harry Pollock, in whose apartment "Bald Jack" Rose remained while the police were searching for him, was arrested to-day by Detective Thomas of the District Attorney's office.

Pollock was arrested for a body attachment as a witness in the John Doe proceedings. Information reached the District Attorney's office that Pollock was about to sail for Europe. Acting District Attorney Moss asked Justice Goff for a body attachment in order to insure Pollock's presence in the trial of Lieut. Becker for the murder of Rosenthal.

"It is true," said Pollock, "that I had booked accommodation on the Amerika, and was to have sailed this morning. I notiefid the District Attorney's office that I was going and would be back in three weeks.

"I am the manager of Freddie Welch, the pugilist. My trip was arranged for the purpose of making a match for him abroad. As far as the Becker case is concerned, I am not a very material witness, anyhow. My complete story has been told to the District Attorney and the Grand Jury and there is no reason why I should want to avoid going on the witness stand."

Investigation yesterday by the aldermanic committee of the affidavit made by Police Captain John Reith, that $10,000 had been demanded of him as the price of his promotion during Commissioner Bingham's administration developed testimony associating Winfield R. Sheehan, secretary of Commissioner Waldo, with a man "supposed to be getting graft."

The testimony was given by D. J. Kelleher, a private detective, who said he had been assigned in December last by Alfred G. Johnson, the under sheriff, whom Reith accuses in his affidavit of having demanded the $10,000 from him, to follow a lawyer named Norton. This man, "by common rumor," he said, "was supposed to be collecting graft from his office at 115 Broadway. He trailed Norton, he testified, to Sheehan's house. Sheehan discovered him there and kept him locked in while he sent for two detectives. Norton, he said, collapsed.

Police Captain Bernard J. Kelleher, a brother of the previous witness, testified that Commissioner Waldo had said to him last June: "I am very sorry that a member of your family should have had one of my men under surveillance."

The Kellehers were preceded on the stand by Johnson, who denied that he had ever demanded money from Reith.

Mohawk Fair Was A Big Success

What is designated as the Mohawk Fair was held yesterday at the Council House situated on the Mohawk Reservation near Deseronto. There were a large number present, and the exhibits were exceptionally good. The display of fancy work by the ladies was far in excess of previous years and many beautiful designs were shown. Roots and vegetables were numerous, the samples being fine.

During the afternoon there were two speeding events, which naturally were of an interesting nature. Both events were well contested, the results being as follows:

More Americans Killed in Mexico

No Attempt Being Made to Punish the Murderers—The U. S. Government Notified.

Special

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—Murders of two Americans in Mexico were reported to the State Department yesterday.

George Retterman, an American blacksmith, who formerly lived at Wichita, Kans., is reported to have been murdered at Cusihuiraki on the night of September 7. No particulars of this murder are yet known.

The other murder was that of Jacob Meyer, also an American, whose headless body was found by some of his neighbors at San Pedro Maren. The local Mexican authorities in Mexico have promised to make a thorough examination.

While no official statement has ever been given out regarding the number of Americans killed in Mexico during the present revolution, it is understood that it is very considerable. The conduct of the Mexican Government in its capacity as the authority responsible for apprehending and punishing the guilty parties in connection with these murders has been highly satisfactory to the Government of the United States. In fact, it is stated that the gravest concern is felt for the future should present conditions in Mexico long continue, owing to the inactivity of the Madero Government in such cases. Depredations upon the property of Americans continue without any sign of abatement.

Arrested For Causing Wife's Death.

Montreal, Sept. 20.—John McGraw, upon leaving the Western Hospital yesterday morning, was arrested on a charge of murder. He is accused of throwing a lighted lamp at his wife last August. Mrs. McGraw died from the burns and her husband has been confined to the hospital ever since suffering from the burns he received while trying to extinguish her lighted clothes.

GOODNOW'S DEATH ACCIDENTAL SO SAYS CORONER'S JURY

The Adjourned Inquest Held Last Night Before Coroner Dr. Yeomans—Deceased was the Victim of His Own Heroic Act—He Braved Death to Save His Employers' Property from Destruction—Evidence in Full.

"We, the jurors, find that the deceased, George Goodnow, came to his death on Sunday, September 15th, 1912, as the result of burns received in a fire which occurred on Thursday, Sept. 12th, on the premises of the Steel Company of Canada, situated in the city of Belleville, County of Hastings.

"From the evidence produced we find that the deceased met his death in endeavoring to assist the Superintendent of the mills to extinguish the fire.

"We are of the opinion that his death was purely accidental and no blame can be attached to the companys' officials or employees."

After considerable evidence had been submitted at the adjourned inquest into the circumstances whereby George Goodnow, an employee at the rolling mills, came to his death, the jury empanelled rendered the above verdict.

Dr. Yeomans, coroner, presided. Mr. Anderson, County Attorney, conducted the examination and Mr. E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P., was present in the interests of the Steel Company.

Bert McCoy, being sworn, stated that he was clerk at the Steel Company of Canada's rolling mills. He knew the deceased, Goodnow. His occupation was that of fireman when the mill was running, but when the mill was shut down he was assisting at a concrete mixer. He saw him shortly after the accident but did not see the accident. Mr. Higgs had control of the machinery. Gasoline was used in the motor driving the concrete mixer. Deceased was taken to the hospital as soon as possible after the accident.

To Mr. Porter—Goodnow had been in the employ of the company since last October. He was considered an efficient workman, working in the company's interest. He was off duty for some time on account of illness. Deceased was about 40 years of age.

Dr. Wm. G. Brown, sworn, testified that he saw Goodnow at the hospital after he was injured and assisted in dressing him. The injuries consisted of severe burns about the body. His recovery was not expected. Deceased received proper treatment. The burns were the cause of death. Goodnow made no statement in regard to his injuries.

James A. Higgs testified that he was superintendent at the Steel Company of Canada's mills in this city. He was present at the mills when the accident occurred to Goodnow. It was shortly after 7 o'clock when it occurred. Mr. Larfie was running an engine which was being driven by gasoline. A tank of gasoline was near the engine. A five gallon can was near by. Witness noticed a flame on the floor which appeared to be going toward the engine. The supposition is that the gasoline overflowed on to the iron floor and spread. Witness was unable to say how the gasoline ignited. Goodnow was helping about the engine. The engineer in stooping down to plug up the tank, caught his shirt on fire, and witness picked up the can and put it out of the way of the flames to avoid an explosion. Goodnow followed witness and he had a blanket in his hand. Goodnow was on fire at this time and witness' clothes were also on fire. The heat was quite intense. Some of the men seized Goodnow and literally tore the blazing clothing off him. The cause of the gasoline on the floor was the over-filling of the tank on the engine. Witness was unable to say how it became ignited. Goodnow was given first aid at the mill by John Smith, who is conversant with the treatment, and as soon as possible he was rushed to the hospital. At the hospital Goodnow asked witness how the accident happened.

MAKING OCEAN TRAVEL SAFE

Important Safeguards on the White Star Liner "Olympic" and the New Steamer "Britannic," Now Building

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Official announcement has just been made that in the new Atlantic liner building at Belfast by Harland & Wolff, Limited, for the White Star Line, the name of one of the most successful vessels in the history of the company is to be revived. The name "BRITANNIC" is well chosen, because the White Star Line steamer originally bearing this name enjoyed a long and successful career, and is remembered with pleasure by hundreds of thousands whom she bore safely across the great sea.

In general features the new "BRITANNIC" will be similar to the "OLYMPIC," but she will be of somewhat larger tonnage. There will be also various improvements introduced into the new vessel, resulting from experience gained from the "OLYMPIC," which vessel will also be altered at an early date, with a view to making her the safest ship in the world. The general structural changes will be few, the strength of the "OLYMPIC" under all weather conditions having proved satisfactory. This is very strong testimony to the comprehensive grasp of detail found in the evolution of this great liner. In two important respects, however, both vessels are to bear evidence of the recent change in expert and public opinion as regards protection against the effects of collision, both by the introduction of a complete inner skin extending to a considerable height above the load line, throughout the most vulnerable portions of the vessels, and also by increased height and number of water-tight bulkheads, so as to render both ships as nearly unsinkable as possible—in fact making them practically safe against all conceivable contingencies.

The inner skin will consist of heavy plating, well stiffened, extending for more than half the length of the vessel from the watertight bulkhead in front of the forward boiler room to the after end of the turbine engine room, the inner skin being strongly connected to the outer shell by longtitudinal plates and angles and specially strong connections at bulkheads and watertight divisions. The space between the outer and inner shells will be the width of the web frames at present in the ship, and this reinforced structure will run from the tank top, i.e., from the top of the double bottom, to a point well above the load water line. In addition, an extra watertight bulkhead will be introduced, and several of the existing bulkheads carried up to the bridge deck.

The additional strength and safety afforded by these methods will be easily appreciated, not only by experts, but also by the traveling public Hitherto it was considered sufficient if a vessel could float with only two compartments pierced; but the "OLYMPIC" and "BRITANNIC," besides having this extra protection against serious damage, will be able to float with any six compartments flooded; and with these special provisions it is not considered within the possibility of chance that so many compartments could be in this condition. Nevertheless, in the unlikely event of such happening, the vessels would still float. The White Star Line and the builders, having given the matter the most earnest consideration, believe they have solved the problem of carrying the precious human freight of these large and popular leviathans in absolute safety.

Needless to say, the introduction of these provisions involves the owners in enormous cost, but in the White Star Line the safety of life has always had paramount consideration. The "OLYMPIC" will be sent to Belfast this winter for the necessary alterations, which will bring her in all respects up to the high standard which has been decided upon for the "BRITANNIC." The latter vessel is now in the early stage of building, on the stocks at Messrs. Harland & Wolff's Yard at Belfast.

Made Long Trip To Escape Police

Special

TORONTO, Sept. 19.—Traced away south across the continent and captured just as he was about to board a steamer for Australia, H. E. Sheather, wanted in Toronto for appropriating over a thousand dollars that did not belong to him, is now occupying a police cell in San Francisco. The Attorney General's Department received word yesterday morning that Sheather was in custody, and arrangements are now being made to secure extradition and bring the prisoner back for trial.

Sheather was employed as a wagon salesman by W. T. McDonnell & Co., produce merchants. He worked during the month of August and up to September 3rd, and for that period turned in a statement to the firm showing goods amounting to $1,500, charged to different purchasers. On the 3rd he disappeared, and investigation showed that the accounts turned in had nearly all been paid, he having pocketed $1,159.

Fails to Kill The Betrayer

ROME, Sept. 19.—A barber was murdered in Rome by his assistant, whom he had dismissed. The assassin, Celestino Gregori, who was defended by the famous statesman Crispi, then an active criminal lawyer, was sentenced to life-long imprisonment, but after serving forty years, he recently received a free pardon from the King.

Although now seventy-two years of age and broken down in health, Gregori's first thought was to proceed to Rome, in order to wreak a summary vengeance on one of the witnesses who had procured his condemnation. After several days of patient stalking he fell upon his victim with a dagger, inflicting wounds which were fortunately not fatal, owing to his excitement and great weakness.

On being arrested Gregori said that he would gladly have ended his days in prison if he could only have accomplished his vendetta.

TIGHT STOCKINGS CAUSED LOSS OF LEGS

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 19.—Her love for tight-fitting hosiery cost a Philadelphia young woman the lower portions of her limbs in St. Michael's hospital. The hospital surgeons, who refuse to give her name because she was a private patient, told the story of the high price for vanity last night.

The young woman, said to have been employed in a market street department store, always demanded that her shapely extremities be clad in garments of silk or lisle that would fit the closest. These impeded the circulation of her blood, first causing pain, and finally amputation of both legs below the knees was regarded as necessary to save her life.

PICKED JEWELED PIN OUT OF GIRL'S LUNG

Surgeon Drew it up Through Bronchoscope and Without Making an Incision—Had Been There Two Years—Caused Her No Trouble Until Two Weeks Ago When She Coughed up One of the Pearls.

Miss Martin was dressing for the theatre and had placed the pin between her teeth until she was ready to adjust it at her throat. Her brother, Emil, uttered some jest about the length of time it took her to get ready and caused her to laugh. A sharp twinge of pain in her chest told her that she had drawn the pin into her lung with a sudden intake of breath. Dr. H. L. Barnes of 42 Elton Street was summoned, but before his arrival the pain had ceased and Miss Martin found herself able to breathe again without difficulty. Nevertheless Dr. Barnes insisted upon calling Dr. Kepke into consultation, and he advised Miss Martin to "let the pin start the first trouble" and not to do anything until it began to annoy her at some future time.

Two weeks ago Miss Martin began to experience intense pain in her right lung. She consulted Dr. Kepke, who submitted her to an X ray examination, and found that the pin had lodged in a transverse position at the very lowest part of the right lung. Yesterday in the presence of Dr. Barnes and Drs. F. N. De Costa and Raymond Westover of the hospital staff, Dr. Kepke performed the delicate operation necessary for the removal of the troublesome pin.

"Because of the position of the pin," said Dr. Kepke last night, "the operation was extremely difficult. The bronchoscope, as the instrument which I used is called, is of nickel, with a tube long enough to reach from the mouth through the windpipe to the lower part of the lung. It is one-third of an inch its interior diameter, and at the upper end is a tiny mirror, which reflects the rays from an electric light bulb down through the tube into the lung. In the mirror is a tiny hole through which the operator gazes down into the interor of the lung. Meantime the patient is enabled to breathe through the tube.

"As soon as I had found the pin and had the tube against the shaft of it, I inserted a very long and delicate pair of forceps—so slender that they could be operated through the tube. With these I seized hold of the pin, and with considerable difficulty and long efforts succeeded in working it loose from the tissue in which it was imbedded. As soon as I had worked it up into the tube the instrument was withdrawn from the patient's windpipe, and with it came the pin."

Dr Kepke stated that he had not administerd any anaesthetic to Miss Martin, and that the only precaution taken to save her suffering was to paint the bronchial tubes with iodine before commencing the operation. She will be out and around within three days, he declared.

The pin was removed intact with the exception of one of its inset pearls, which Miss. Matrin coughed up a few weeks ago. It was slightly corroded, but the young woman declared after the operation that she intended to have it ornamented with a small gold plate bearing the date of the operation and the names of the physicians in attendance. The pin will be further ornamented with a handsome diamond, a gift from her thankful father. When it is finished, Miss Martin says, she will wear it at her throat always, but will never trrust it in her mouth again. hlrfdlHxdareRSa

Held at Bay by An Aged Woman

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., Sept. 19.—An aged woman, an aged man, a rocking chair, a garden hose, and a spade won a battle this morning with a gang of linemen employed by the Electric Light Company. The woman, Mrs. Margaret Magee, is 82 years old, and she stood guard over a hole in front of her home, No. 926 South Avenue, all night in her effort to prevent the company from placing an unsightly pole in front of her property.

At 8 o'clock this morning the men returned with the pole, and proceeded to place it in position, sliding the large end under her rocking chair. She got the hose and turned the water on the men, while one of the gang, more daring that the others, pulled a large knife and was about to cut the hose. Herman Hertle, a neighbor, who had been standing idly by watching the proceedings, stepped into the breach at this time, and raising a spade over his head, threatened to brain the lineman should he cut the hose.

A truce was then declared, and the company will apply for permission to place the pole at the meeting of the Common Council on Monday night. They had attempted to place the poles without first securing municipal consent, which they are compelled to do under their franchise.

Egyptian and His Bride in Trouble

TORONTO, Sept. 20.—A problem in deportation has been opened up by the presence in destitute circumstances in the city of an 18 year old Egyptian and his 20 year old English wife, Mr. and Mrs. Lamei. The condition of the pair, who are living in a boarding house in the central part of the city, was brought to the notice of Commissioner Starr of the children's court, who, in his turn, set to work to get them back to their friends by means of deportation and called in the aid of City Relief Officer Coyei.

Proceedings are begun, but the question is whether the wife shall go with the husband to Egypt, or whether he shall go with her to Bristol, or whether each shall go to the land of their nativity. It will probably end with the pair being sent to Bristol, as that is the point whence both sailed to Canada, as the husband has a brother attending Oxford.

The young Egyptian, inheriting $1500 a year from his grandmother, set out to England to study agriculture. Hearing that he could receive better tuition at the Guelph College in Canada, he set out for this country, first marrying a little English girl whom he had met while studying there.

Now there is a little girl, but his family, hearing that he had married an English woman, have discontinued his allowance, and not even the good offices of his brother, who on a previous occasion adjusted matters financial with the parental source, has been able to cause the flow of funds to be resumed.

The two are likely to be deported, but this cannot be immediately achieved and in the meantime they are in need of the bare necessities of life.

Small Fruit Culture

The failure of many who occupy land to grow an abundance of small fruits, at least for their own use, is due to a mistaken idea that it requires too much time to look after a garden. This is the view taken by Mr. W. T. Macoun, the Dominion Horticulturist, and expressed in a paper read by him last winter before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This paper, which constitutes a pamphlet of thirty-five pages, is an exhaustive treatise, expressed in the plainest terms, on the culture of small fruits. The fruits dealt with are the strawgerry, raspberry, blackberry, gooseberry, and the several classes of currants. Besides giving full instructions for planting and cultivation, notes are given on the relative merits of varieties.

This pamphlet contains an interesting table on the cost of growing and the returns from an acre of strawberries. At a selling value of five cents per box, a net profit of eighty-four dollars is shown. A section is devoted to the preparation and application of insecticides and fungicides that are useful in fruit growing. Having the information of this paper to guide him, there is no good reason why every farmer should not have a productive fruit garden. A large edition has been printed to be sent free to all who apply to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

AMELIASBURG

The potato blight has struck this place and already many fine patches are showing the effect of the disease. What result it will have upon what has promised to be one of the most successful crops for years is hard to say.

Already apple picking has begun in earnest. The earlier varieties are being barrelled now, but growers are up against the picking problem in many cases. Some buyers will buy only with the understanding that the apples shall be picked ready for packing.

It has always been a difficult matter to amicably arrange this matter as most of the growers do not want a gang of apple pickers to board. The time wil no doubt soon come when apple picking gangs will carry a tent and board themselves. Until this is done and the farmer has to pick his own fruit, it would be more after the Danish system for a few farmers to club together with their help and pick each other's crop. This might be easily done as one farmer might have varieties which come earlier into the market than his neighbors.

The many friends of John Belnap of Rossmore are congratulating him upon his appointment to the Fishery Department for the Dominion Government.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

FISKE O'HARA

The romatic Irish play, "The Rose of Kildare", with the ever popular Fiske O'Hara in the principal role, will be the attracion at Griffins Opera House tonight. This is a style of play in which the clever young tenor is very much at home and the character which he is called upon to portray is one in which he has made his greatest success in other plays. There is no better impersonator of the dare-devil young Irishman on the stage today than Fiske O'Hara. The play itself is a mixture of comedy, drama and melodrama of a romatic type. The plot is sufficiently deep and gripping to call for intrigues, militarism, steep cliffs, waterfalls, ruined chapels and ancient castles until the most lethargic is obliged to sit up and listen with attentive interest. "The Rose of Kildare" has four interesting acts, all set in the latter part of the 18th century and dressed in the picturesque costumes of that period. The play is said to be filled with the sweetness and cheeriness peculiar to the life of the people of the Emerald Isle.

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

The Light Eternal, a magnificently staged romance of the fourth century transcribed from Cardinal Wiseman's "Fabiola," will be given at Griffin's Opera House, Sept. 25th and 26th.

Spectacular in its investure of barbaric splendor, abounding in dramatic episode of intense suspense, and dealing with a serious theme of deep religious import, the action of this great drama moves forward briskly and with the finality and realism of life itself. Every moment is fraught with dramatic action and subtile meaning as the story is unfolded. The audience is literally transported down through the ages to the proud and wicked days when Rome flourished in all its glory.

From the roof of the house of Valerius, the first setting of the play, a panoramic glimpse of the ancient city is had, as the members of the household avow their allegiance to the Christian faith. Here is told how Marco Valerius, just decorated by the Emperor Diocletian, in a moment of incautious zeal has disclosed his faith, and prophecy is made of his destruction, as well as of all followers of the Nazarene. Then is shown the beautiful rose garden of the villa of the Princess Artemia in the Campagnia—with its tender declaration of love, its betrayel, and the proclamation of the doom of all Christians. The first scene of the third act finds the characters in the gloomy dungeons beneath the palace of the Caesars, and the second scene shows the magnificent throne room of the reigning emperor. Here effort is made to force pagan worship upon the condemned Valerius; and here the power of paganism, as typified by the altar of Jupiter, god of gods, is shattered and gives place to a miraculous cross of fire. Then comes the narrow sacrificial door through which the martyrs pass entering the arena—where the hapless Marco Valerius pays the Roman price for his faith and shares the glory of a Christian death with her who has brought him thither.

Throughout the four acts the persecution of the Caesars is visualized to a degree unattained by any of the forerunners of The Light Eternal. There is a certain dramatic power and earnest reverence of theme that lifts the play above the commonplace and makes of it an enthralling romance and a moral lesson.

Plan opens Monday at Doyle's Drug Store.

There is apt to be a little truth and a great deal that isn't true in both sides of the story.

DEATH ROLL.

JAMES ALLENDEN

James Allenden, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. James Allenden residing on Pinnacle Street, in this city, died Wednesday morning.

Exposed Cable Killed Three

ROME, Sept. 19—An extraordinary story of deaths from an exposed electric cable in the street comes from Gallarate, a town in the Province of Lombardy. Signora Bassi was walking with her maid when she noticed a child lying unconscious under a tree, while nearby was the mother who seemed to be suffering from convulsions. The woman went to assist the child, but when she touched her she received a violent shock which killed her. The maid, who went to the assistance of her mistress, felt a severe shock, and was badly injured.

Passers-by who witnessed the tragedy surmised that the deaths were due to electricity, and rushed to get the current stopped. It was then found that the child had touched an electric cable, which, through some unaccountable reason, ran for several inches along the ground unprotected, and had been instantly killed. The mother and the woman who had tried to assist the child also fell victims to this culpable carelessness.

The tragedy had an epilogue, for when the body of Signori Bassi was being removed the horses attached to the hearse shied and bolted. In the course of their mad career through the town they knocked down and killed an electrician.

Charity Begins at Home

> The Toronto News very kindly undertakes to point out a way of protecting Canada from the predatory operations of United States trusts. That's all very well as an abstract subject of theorizing; but what the people of Canada want is protection from our own trusts. We see the cost of living mounting up every day, and it does not need much insight to discover that this is very largely due to the combination of individuals who control the supply and manipulate prices upward. We can hardly find a commodity that enters into the bill of fare of the people that is not subject to some form of dealing that tends to, and actually does, advance the price. United States trusts are no doubt bad, and The News, and the party of The News which claims the credit of having protected this country from their operations are bound to go further and deal with the trusts that adversely affect the Canadian consumers. Charity should begin at home.

The Examiner is quite right in saying that the people of Canada need protection from the trusts that sprang up in this country under the administration of the Laurier Government, of which that journal was a stalwart supporter. How that protection could be secured by opening Canada to the predatory operations of the United States trusts under Reciprocity, which Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Examiner are still advocating, it is for our contemporary to explain.

Germany and the United Kingdom

An exchange points to a fact which emerges with extraordinary clearness from the torrents of new and commentary which is daily pouring through the press of Europe, is the similarity of the interests of Germany and the United Kingdom in the east. At a time when the eastern members of the great powers are openly speculating as to the future of the Ottoman possessions in Europe, Germany and Great Britain are finding themselves without any interest in the disturbance of the status quo, and yet with very decided interests in what might follow a redistribution of Ottoman territory.

The United Kingdom, as the greatest Mohammedan power in the world, has, of course, a special interest in the eastern question generally. Leaving this out of sight, there remains her commercial interest, which would serve equally that of Germany. These interests are concerned rather with the decisions of the Porte in respect to economic questions of territory. Neither wished for a yard of Turkish soil, but it is essential for each country that their economic projects should be treated by the Sublime Porte in a spirit of sympathy and fairness. The schemes of Russia, the friend of the United Kingdom, and Austro-Hungary, the ally of Germany, would, if they could be made effective, reduce Turkey to a province of their own empires, and give the trade of these empires practically exclusive rights, to the detriment of British and German industries. With Russio or Austro-Hungary dominant in Constantinople, Bagdad railways and Mesopotamian irrigation schemes would be financed from St. Petersburg or Vienna, as the case might be. The port dues of Salonika would blossom into tariff restrictions, and what happened to Salonika would be repeated along the new frontiers.

The more closely the ill-feeling between the United Kingdom and Germany is examined without prejudice, the greater is the difficulty of finding any cause for it not registered on the barometer of national ill temper. Now, history shows that the mercury in that barometer rises and falls with astonishing rapidity. Behind the Anglo-German mutual ill-feeling is nothing to be compared to the centuries of sustained war between France and the United Kingdom. Not even Agadir as a cuse of dissension, can rank for a moment with the Fashoda incident. Yet to-day the entente between the United Kingdom and France is so complete that crowds of Frenchmen, whom a year ago nothing would have induced to touch a London pavement, may be seen every day in its streets. Recognizing what this means, it is impossible not to see that an Anglo-German reconciliation would be easier. The days are past when nations can any longer continue to misunderstand each other over differences which have no valid existence The cosmopolitanism of the world has begun, perhaps not too creditably, but still, begun to be made effective, in the realm of finance, and it will continue until the brotherhood of man is seriously established. This is not a mere altruistic banality. It is scientifically inevitable.

In discussing the tariff programme of Theodore Roosevelt, in a lengthy interview published in the New York Times. Mr. John Hays Hammond, the noted American engineer, says: "How Mr. Roosevelt can reasonably hope to increase the price of farm products in the interest of the farmer, for example, and to effect a corresponding decrease in the cost of the same farm products to the consumer, is beyond comprehension."

Just about a year ago Canadians tackled the same problem and most of them reached a similar conclusion.—Ottawa Journal.

There is a movement on foot again to unite in a federation the five little Central American republics of Gautemala, Honduras, Salvador, Costa Rica and Nicaragua. The union will be counted a natural one almost everywhere. Twenty-five years ago General Barrios, a fighting President of Gautemala, had the idea, but he was not able to carry it out by peaceful means and when he tried war he was defeated and killed. In a quarter of a century his countrymen may have increased in wisdom; or they may not. The desire to be independent sometimes shows strongest in the small community that is least capable of using its powers for its own benefit.

A pamphlet issued by the Department of Agriculture of Quebec gives the number of butter factories in the province as 527, of cheese factories as 939, and of combination factories as 587, a total of 2,053. So far as numbers are concerned, the County of Beauce is in the lead, with 21 butter, 115 cheese and 17 combination factories, a total of 153. Next in order comes Nicolet, with 99 factories, Lake St. John with 74, Megantic with 64, and Labelle with 65. It is noted in connection with what was recently said of the market for milk created by large centres of population, that the counties in the neighborhood of Montreal show the smallest number of factories and generally they are devoted to making butter. It is also worthy of note that the counties in which factories are most numerous are those which, according to the census returns, show greatest growth in population. To prevent people leaving the farm it seems to be necessary to give them the most advanced lines of agriculture to follow.—Montreal Witness.

AVIATOR SINGS IN THE CLOUDS

Flyer Who Broke Altitude Record Describes Lonely Feeling Up So High.

PARIS, Sept. 19.—Aviator Legagneux says:—

"My 80 horse power Gnome motor moved marvellously. The machine ascended with such speed that I felt real joy. In two and a half minutes I was 1,500 yards in the air. In seven and a half minutes I was 2,500 yards up and a little higher, I flew into a dead calm. At an altitude of 3,125 yards I found myself in a fog so thick that I could see nothing.

"All went well, but I felt lonely, isolated even weary. To comfort myself I began to sing.

"It grew very cold. I was warmly clad, but I felt the chill keenly. The moisture turned to icicles on my face. Only by the barometer could I tell I was still ascending. At 5,520 yards I began to inhale oxygen as advised. I used forty quarts. I descended like lightning."

VANDERBILT IS TO GET BALANCE OF GREAT FORTUNE

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Alfred G. Vanderbilt, suzerain of the much-moneyed house by virtue of his father's will is keenly awaiting two events. The first—is that will bind him more closely to his charming bride, who was Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim—is expected almost hourly. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt are quartered in their houseboat on the Thames in London awaiting the birth of the expected heir.

As soon after the birth of the child as the young mother's condition permits, Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt will take passage for America where on October 20 the former will celebrate his thirty-fifth birthday. On this day the young man will take rank with the real financial gnetlemen of America On this day he will come into possession of a sum estimated conservatively at $25,000,000.

This huge sum represents the half of Vanderbilt's patrimony willed him by his father, Cornelius Vanderbilt. The seventeenth provision of the remarkable document in which the then head of the powerful family of American millionaires cut off his eldest son, Cornelius, jr., with a paltry $1,500,000, reads as follows:

"Seventeen—All the rest, residue and remainder of the estate, include all lapsed legacies and the principal of annuities is given to the executors in trust, to hold and invest and reinvest and collect rents, incomes and profits for the use of his son, Alfred G., and to pay to him net income as received until he becomes thirty, when he is to come in possession of one half of said estate, the income of the balance to be paid to him as before until he becomes thirty-five, when he is to come into full possession thereof."

On October 20, 1907, young Vanderbilt came into possession of $25,000,000, the first half of his patrimony. On October 20, 1912, he will be complete and outright master of $50,000,000 together with his surplus income which is estimated at several millions more. Thus this smooth-faced young American will possess a fortune approximating that of the Phippses, the Moores, the Reids, Goulds and the Archibolds, whose fortunes range from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000.

WHEN JEFFRIES FOUND SHARKEY

Jeffries weighed 210 and Sharkey 185. Jeff had the advantage of height and reach.

Delaney feared for Jeff who trained against his wishes running and sweating most of the time. About 12 days before the fight Jeff heeded Delaney's pleading and I believe this saved him. He was sallow and drawn looking in the ring, but Sharkey was in the pink.

Sharkey was aggressor, for 20 rounds and had an even break, if not the shade. He rushed constantly and hit Jeffries without difficulty. His blows shook Jeff like a ship in a storm.

The first two and the last three rounds were all Jeffries. Sharkey did not start until Jeff dropped him in the second, but he was a wild man afterward.

In the 18th Sharkey's shoulder was wrenched. In the fight two ribs were broken, his nose, eyes and ears split but he never ceased rushing until the last three rounds.

The referee said he gave the decision to Jeffries because he landed the cleanest and most effective blows.

The day after the fight, Jeffries showed a discolored eye, a split forehead from Sharkey's butting and a lame back. Sharkey's ribs were broken, arm in a sling and his face was marked as already told.

In the first three rounds Sharkey was groggy. Jeff's right, the most terrible weapon in the game at that time, clodded against Tom's jaw and ribs like a hammer. A short uppercut played hob with Tom's face and had him weak but always was he fighting.

Jeffries said he had planned a waiting fight and followed his plan. Sharkey claimed he had been jobbed. George Siler refereed the bout and his explanation was accepted by the public.

NEGRO INVENTS MACHINE TO HEAT WITHOUT FUEL

In a little room in the back part of the Detroit Cold Storage Co. plant at Champlain and Beaubien Streets there daily sits Charles S. L. Baker, a negro, born in slavery and with only a picked up education, explaining a small and simple mechanical combination that may some day take its place as one of the greatest inventions of the ages.

The machine is a friction heater, and the unschooled inventor is calmly confident that within reasonable time buildings will be heated and refrigerated by it and power supplied without combustion or use in any way of an ounce of fuel. In manner somewhat generally similar to the extraction of making electricity from the air with a rapidly revolving armature he plans to extract or develop heat by the revolutions of a wooden core in an enclosed space free from the outer air and the abundance of elements that make for combustion.

The device is so extremely simple that it astounds by its simplicity. There is a core of wood that revolves in a circular chamber, around which is a second and larger chamber filled with water. The revolving wood core develops heat by friction against the air in the enclosed space, the air friction in turn developing heat from the larger metal enclosure. The exclusion of outer air and the taking up of the heat by the water in the second chamber saves the wood core from combustion.

"The general idea came to me from remembering how a wagon wheel came off and the axle was charred because I didn't grease the wheels," he said. "That was when I was a boy, and I got a good licking for it. In after years I noticed how metal heated under friction. I tried friction on a piece of metal in the open air and worked up five degrees of heat. Then the thought struck me how much heat was wasted by radiation in the open air and that the heat should be developed in as near a vacuum as I could get. Finally I worked out this machine. I made all sorts of experiments before I got it. I worked a while with an ice cream freezer, putting pieces of iron in the outer chamber instead of ice, but the iron cut the tin. After a while I got my practical working machine. I think there was something in the blood that carried me on, for in the African tribes there is distinction in being a friction fire maker, and the greatest man is he who can rub wood together during the longest period of years and produce the quickest and largest fires.

"The first use of my machine was in the First National Bank building in St. Joseph, Mo. Then I equipped a car on the Chicago Great Western railroad and heated it through a winter. Paul Morton came to see the machine when he was at the head of the Santa Fe railroad, and I heated a car running between Kansas City and San Francisco for a winter. Contracts for larger use of my machines were prevented by differences between me and my associates in the company we formed. There was litigation over the sale of my rights by agents, and the supreme court of Missouri set the sale aside."

Without biterness Mr. Baker says that he thinks his being a negro has been detrimental to him and prevented him from making the business headway that a white man might. Born a slave and losing his mother when eight months old, he was brought up by his mistress, Mrs. Sally Mackey, of Savannah, Andrew County, Missouri. He experienced nothing of slave life, however, as emancipation came when he was a little fellow. He always stuck to his people, as he speaks of his mistress' family, and their Democratic political faith has been his. This got him a letter carrier's place in the St. Joseph post office when Cleveland was first elected, and a prompt dismissal for partizanship when a Republican postmaster again took hold. Mr. Baker early went to work in a newspaper office, the Adams County Gazette, of Corning, Ia., learned the printers' trade in all departments, and then published papers for colored people in Corning and St. Joseph. Articles in his St. Joseph paper got him in wrong to keep a place under a Republican postmaster.

Mr. Baker was pleased and smiled broadly when asked if he preferred any particular wood for his machine cores.

"Now you have it," he said. "I have tried all kinds of hard wood, and the one is August hickory—hickory cut in August."

Thomas W. Brown, of Detroit, who has the rights for the manufacture of the Augustine rotary engine and is preparing to establish an engine plant in Detroit, also has the Baker friction machine manufacturing rights and plans to organize a separate company to make the Baker machine. The engine and friction heater are separate developments, but Mr. Baker thinks they will make a great team. He plans soon to equip an eight-room house with one of the friction heaters, with an Augustine rotary for power, and heat the house, do ammonia process refrigeration in the basement and furnish power for vacuum cleaning of the place, without combustion or fuel, at a cost of from $2 to $4 a month.

"If anything I have accomplished will make the Anglo-Saxon better pleased with what he has done for the negro race, and stimulate him to do more, I am satisfied," says Baker.

The Canadian rights for the friction machine have been sold for $160,000. Mr. Baker says that in his first experimental days he had to stand off shops for a dollar's worth of work, but now leading men of St. Joseph and railroad officials who know him and the machine are investors with him in amounts of $5,000 and upwards.

First Description Of Niagara Falls

In the autumn of 1678 a Franciscan friar, Hennepin, set out alone—the first solitary figure of the expedition, a gray priest from the gray rock of Quebec, in a birch canoe, carrying with him the "furniture of a portable altar." Along the way up the Saint Lawrence he stopped to minister to the habitants, too few and too poor to support a priest, saying mass, exhorting and baptizing. Early in November he arrived at the mission at Fort Frontenac which he had two or three years before helped La Salle to establish in the wilds. Soon La Salle's lieutenants appeared, with most of the men, and while some were dispatched in canoes to Lake Michigan to gather the buffalo fleeces against the coming of the ship whose keel had not been laid, the rest (La Motte, Hennepin, and sixteen men) embarked for the river by which the upper lakes empty into Lake Ontario and the Saint Lawrence, that is, the Niagara. To this priest, Hennepin, we owe the first description and picture of Niagara, probably now more familiar to the world than any other natural feature of the continent. He has somewhat magnified the height of these falls, but they are impressive enough to acquit of falsification and powerful enough to run virtually all the manufacturing plants of the United States if they could be gathered within reach. As it is, less than four per cent of the water that overflows from the four upper Great Lakes into the lower lake, once known as Lake Frontenac and now as Ontario, is diverted for utilitarian purposes, and yet it supplies the American and the Canadian almost equally between the two shores over three hundred thousand horse-power. What the conservation of the strength of this Titan, for ages entirely wasted and for a century after Hennepin only a scenic wonder, means or may mean to industry in the future, is intimated in some statistics furnished by a recent writer on the Great Lakes showing the relative cost per month of a certain unit of power in a number of representative American cities.—From "The French in the Heart of America," by John Finley, in the September Scribner.

LOAN SHARKS HIS DOWNFALL

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Arthur K. Hoffman, a Spanish war veteran, is in the Tombs awaiting trial on a charge of forgery. The amount involved is $19.

Hoffman's downfall is attributed to loan shark. After receiving an honorable discharge from the army he obtained a position in the Custom House. While working there he borrowed a small sum from a money lender, which sum subsequently grew to such proportions on account of accruing interest that he found himself hard pressed to keep up his payments.

Finally, in desperation, to satisfy

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

U. S. IS HELD UP.

Steel Men Force Government to Buy Shells at Home.

Washington, D.C., Sept. 20.—A British company has underbid to the extent of hundreds of thousand of dollars every foundry in the United States for heavy projectiles for use in the big guns of the United States navy. This fact became known when bids were opened for two million dollars' worth of shells of varying calibre.

No sooner had it been ascertained that the British bidders were far below every American competitor than the representatives of six of the large steel works in the United States had an indignation meeting at the new Willard Hotel yesterday.

They declared emphatically that if the Navy Department awarded the contracts to the British company they would never again submit a single offer for American projectiles. This statement was promptly communicated to the Navy Department, and its meaning was plain enough. It was interpreted as signifying that the American foundries would no longer keep up their equipment for making projectiles, and that in case of war this Government would face a famine in cannon balls.

Later in the day it was made known that in spite of the great discrepancy in bids the awards will be distributed as far as possible among the American competitors.

It was this consideration that determined the Navy Department to give the pending award to American concerns. The general policy is that where the foreign article is superior to the American the contract shall go abroad, but if the difference is entirely one of price it will stay at home.

Force China to Accept Terms.

London, Sept. 20.—Representatives of the so-called six-power syndicate and of the new independent Chinese loan of $50,000,000 both assert that their own positions are impregnable.

The six-power bankers yesterday announced that the Ministers of their powers in Pekin have been instructed to express disapproval of the new loan, and they also declared that China has liberty, pending a definite closing of the negotiations with the six-power syndicate, to make outside arrangements. If the Chinese Government does contract other loans the lenders advancing the money will do so of their own risk and without the support of the Governments interested.

China informally approached the old syndicate during the present month, but the banking group will not reopen negotiations unless assured of China's sincerity.

The independent syndicate, on the other hand, scoffs at the suggestion that the British Government will ask China to repudiate the contract made by the Chinese Minister at London under the authority of the Chinese Premier and the Minister of Finance.

Aviator Required Oxygen.

New York, Sept. 20.—A Paris cable says: Aviator Legagneux, who made the latest altitude record, says: "My 80-horsepower Gnome motor moved marvellously. The machine asended with such speed that I felt real joy. In two and a half minutes I was 1,500 yards in the air. In seven and a half minutes I was 2,500 yards up, and a little higher I flew into a dead calm. At an altitude of 3,125 yards, I found myself in a fog so thick I could see nothing.

"All went well, but I felt lonely, isolated, even weary. To comfort myself I began to sing.

"It grew very cold. I was warmly clad, but I felt chill keenly. Moisture turned to icicles on my face. Only by barometers could I tell I was still ascending.

"At 5,920 yards I began to inhale oxygen as advised. I used forty quarts. I descended like lightning."

Bank Robbers Still Free.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Despite a reward of $27,000 offered for their capture, the two bank robbers who, with $150,000 loot, escaped because police Lieutenant Burns, it is said, wanted to arrest them single-handed, were not found yesterday. Police officials believe they both have left Chicago.

The robbers, it is believed, still have most of the large bills taken in the robbery of the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B.C., but the smaller notes, it is thought, have been disposed of, either spent or exchanged for American money. It was learned that the men had planned to exchange the rest of the money for American currency held by Greeks, who make a Chicago saloon their headquarters and could get rid of it by sending it to Greece.

Hon. J. W. Sifton Dead.

Winnipeg, Sept. 20.—There died here last evening Hon. J. W. Sifton, president of The Free Press Publishing Co., and one of the pioneer residents of the city.

Mr. Sifton was a native of London, Ont., and coming out here early in life he soon rose to a high position. He was elected to the office of Speaker in the Provincial Assembly. Mr. Sifton, was the father of Hon. Clifford Sifton and Hon. Arthur Sifton, the present Premier of Alberta.

OUTLOOK ROSIER.

Peace Negotiations in Switzerland on Better Basis.

Chiasso, Switzerland, Sept. 20.—The Italian and Turkish delegates who are holding conferences in Switzerland looking to the settlement of the war, received new instructions yesterday from their respective Governments and, contrary to the pessimistic view prevailing, it now seems certain that the conclusion of a basis upon which to negotiate peace is being approached.

A fundamental point which Italy refuses to admit for discussion is the complete and absolute sovereignty of Libya. Thus all reports that Italy will renounce Cyrenaica or a portion of that country or the Hinterland, or even only one port, are absolutely fantastic.

Similarly unfounded are the great financial operations which it is imagined in some quarters are being considered by Italy and by Turkey. The most important financial point under discussion is one whereby Italy shall take over that part of the Turkish debt represented by the revenue of Libya, amounting to $200,000 yearly, Italy to make a settlement with Turkey and not with the administration of the Ottoman public debt which, being international, might make it appear that Europe was interfering in a question that should be arranged between Italy and Turkey.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Three burros, which refused to get off the track, wrecked a troop train and 11 soldiers were killed near Mexico City.

The Conservative convention to nominate a candidate for East Middlesex bye-election will be held in London Saturday, Sept. 28.

What is planned to be the biggest demonstration for home rule ever held in New York will occur in Carnegia Hall on Sunday evening, Sept. 29.

The beautiful new Bayview Hotel at Yarmouth, N.S., together with its contents, was entirely destroyed by fire yesterday morning, without loss of life.

There was much promiscuous firing from the pits opposite the Utah copper mine at Bingham yesterday. About 1,000 strikers were entrenched there.

William Lane, an old resident of Holland Landing, died yesterday at three p.m. He was a councillor of the village, and was also reeve for a number of years.

A despatch from Podgeritza, Montenegro, says that refugees from Gusinje, Albania, report half the Christian houses in the town sacked, the villagers terrorized and the Christians desperate.

Infantile paralysis claimed another little victim at Niagara Falls, when Evelyn, five-year-old daughter of Geo. Campaigne died. The authorities believe they now have the epidemic well under control.

The Zeppelin dirigible balloon Hansa made an oversea voyage from Hamburg to Denmark and Sweden yesterday, visiting the Danish capita and Malmo, a Swedish naval port. The trip occupied thirteen hours.

A mob of five thousand strikers and sympathizers last night attacked the principal street car line in Superior, Wis., wrecking six cars and beating the crews and guards. There were furious fights and more than 30 persons were injured.

Scarcity of Coal.

Pottsville, Pa., Sept. 20.—A telegram received here from the acting Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor in Washington gives assurance that the United States Government intends to begin at once a detailed investigation of the causes of the short supply of anthracite in New York and New England. The investigation will be a part of the inquiry into certain other aspects of the coal situation now being conducted by the Bureau of Labor.

Local leaders of the United Mine Workers declare that there is no necessity for a scarcity of coal and that large quantities of anthracite are now being stored in this region, particularly at Landigville, where there is said to be enough coal piled up to last New York city all winter.

Speakers For Borden Banquet.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—The full program of speeches at the Borden banquet to be held at the Arena on Monday is complete. At the conclusion of the banquet an address will be presented to Mr. Borden by G. T. Somers, the chairman, on behalf of the Toronto Board of Trade. Sir James Whitney then will propose the toast to the guest of the evening, and Mr. Borden will reply. N. W. Rowell, leader of the Ontario Opposition, will propose the toast to "The Parliament of Canada," and the reply will be by Hon. W. T. White and Hon. A. E. Kemp. The chairman will propose the toast to "Canada and the Empire," to which Hon. George E. Foster and Hon. L. P. Pelletier will reply.

Bar the Beef Trust.

Melbourne, Australia, Sept. 20.—The Legislative Council yesterday passed a resolution to the effect that it is desirable that the Government take action to prevent the American beef combine or its agents from obtaining a foothold in the Commonwealth, and also requesting the Government to consult with the other Australian states with a view to the simultaneous passing of necessary legislation to that end.

Sir Richard Undergoes Operation.

Kingston, Sept. 20.—Sir Richard Cartwright was operated upon in the Kingston General Hospital yesterday morning by Drs. W. G. Anglin and R. W. Garrett for strangulated hernia.

Sir Richard is seventy-seven years of age.

Mrs. Pat Campbell Seriously Ill.

New York, Sept. 20.—A London cable yesterday says: Mrs. P. Campbell is critically ill and only faint hopes are entertained for her recovery. She was stricken suddenly on Sunday.

Caught In Storm.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—Caught in a disable launch five miles out in the lake by the heavy gale which suddenly sprung up late yesterday afternoon, three men and four women had a never-to-be-forgotten experience and are now wondering how they were even so fortunate as to reach land. The launch, owned by Thomas Crowley of the Star Theatre, was a 35-footer equipped with a 15-horsepower engine, and a staunch craft. But when the storm broke it was buffeted so badly that the engine was crippled, and the boat began to drift with the heavy sea. The waves were so high that at times it was partly submerged and was tossed about like a cork. After battling against strong odds for three hours, with the men rowing, the women bailing, they reached the lighthouse at the eastern gap exhausted. They were later towed across the bay.

Besides Crowley, who was running the launch, there were four chorus girls.

Fight To Be Spectacular.

Winnipeg, Sept. 20.—The bye-election in Macdonald constituency, Manitoba, called for Oct. 12, to fill the vacancy in the Commons caused by the appointment of W. D. Staples to the Grain Commission, promises to be one of the most spectacular in the history of the west.

Freer trade will be the main issue and R. L. Richardson, publisher of The Winnipeg Tribune, and former member of Parliament for Lisgar, will run as independent candidate, with the support of Liberals and all others who favor wider markets as the solution of the problems of the west.

Richardson's platform is a greater preference to Britain, reciprocity in natural products with the United States. He is already in the field.

The Conservative candidate will be named immediately. The constituency has eight thousand voters.

Land Sharks Must Pay.

Edmonton, Sept. 20.—To further relieve agriculture from the burden of taxation and to place the burden upon speculative holders of farm lands, important amendments to the Rural Municipalities Act will be sought at the next session of the Alberta Legislature. By an act passed at the session of the Legislature last spring, assessment of land was made the sole basis of municipal revenue, while a rebate of 25 per cent. of all taxes was provided for the benefit of farmers who improve their holdings. It is now proposed that this rebate shall be raised to 50 per cent., so that the man who owns a quarter section wholly under cultivation will pay in taxes exactly one-half as much as the man who is owner of an adjoining unimproved farm.

Death Sentence Passed.

Montreal, Sept. 20—Antonio Farduto was shortly after six o'clock last evening found guilty of the murder of Louis Hotte on July 29 last by the petit jury in the Court of King's Bench after five minutes' deliberation and sentenced by Justice Trenholme to hang on Friday, Dec. 13.

The accused, when asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed, replied in the negative, and when Interpreter Viglino repeated the death sentence in Italian, Farduto relaxed his grasp on the front of the prisoners' dock and laughingly replied: "Well, if it's that, let it go," snatched up his hat and hurried with the guard down to the cells.

Swift Company Invades the Capital.

Ottawa, Sept. 20.—The Swift Co. of Chicago will shortly erect a large warehouse and packing plant in Ottawa. Yesterday afternoon the Grand Trunk Railway Co., acting for the Swift Co., asked the Board of Control to sell the old registry office, on which the Swift Company will erect a $50,000 building. No action was taken.

Revival of Harikari.

Tokio, Sept. 20.—Since the self-inflicted deaths of Gen. Count Nogi and his wife several attempts at suicide have been reported to the Tokio authorities. The police interfered and prevented a number of would-be suicides from carrying out their intentions.

Car Without Trolley.

Galt, Sept. 20.—Railway men of the district enjoyed a treat yesterday in witnessing the placing in commission of a new type of street car. It came to Galt from Preston over the tracks of the Guelph, Preston and Hamilton Railway. It was the initial trip of a self-propelled coach which gets motive power froma generator operated by a 50 horsepower gasoline engine contained within the car.

Spain Recalls Indiscreet Consuls.

Paris, Sept. 20.—France's energetic representations to the Madrid Government have at last resulted in the informal recall of Senors Villas y Villarreal and Sostoa, the Spanish consuls at Mazagan and Mogodor respectively, whose anti-French activity in Morocco has made the pacificatory work of France in the new Moroccan protectorate doubly arduous.

Marriage Law Agitation.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—Legal advice is being secured by the Evangelical Alliance with a view of securing federal marriage legislation under the present British North America Act. One proposition is to make it a criminal offence for any person to tell the holders of a marriage certificate that they are not married. Another proposal is a marrage law for the Dominion, exclusive of Quebec.

The policy will be decided upon at the approaching meeting of the Evangelical Alliance.

Canadians to Help Ulster?

London, Sept. 20.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Belfast correspondent of The Evening News says that at Unionist headquarters he saw letters from every province in Canada offering money and men in the event of resistance by force to home rule.

The Irish Football League has prohibited the carrying of partisan flags or emblems at matches.

Bishop Is Safe.

Montreal, Sept. 20.—Right Rev. Bishop Latulippe, vicar apostolic of Timiskaming, who was reported as being murdered by Indians in St. James, arrived in this city yesterday in good health.

Bishop Latulippe, when seen by a reporter at the Sisters of Providence Convent, said when he first read the news of his death he was surprised and disconcerted, but now he could afford to smile at it. On arriving at Sydney Tuesday morning he was shown the despatch announcing his death. He immediately telegraphed his sister in Montreal and his vicar-general in Haileybury that he was on his way home and in the best of health.

Aviator Almost Killed.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Ignatz Seminouk, a Russian aviator with a French license, flying at the aviation meet in Grant Park, was rescued a mile out in Lake Michigan late yesterday by a motor boat after his hydro-plane had been blown to pieces by an explosion of the radiator and just as he was sinking with the last remnant of the framework. He was badly burned about the back.

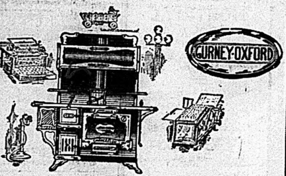
Hundreds of people on the shore saw the hydro-aeroplane sinking and watched the aviator climbing into the parts of the machine that remained above water while half a dozen boats were rushing to his rescue.

Rain In the West.

Winnipeg, Sept. 20.—Cloudy weather has been all over the west yesterday, with rain at many points in Alberta and Northern and Central Saskatchewan. It was raining in Winnipeg and district at six o'clock last night. Threshing is progressing satisfactorily in a number of districts, but the labor shortage has retarded operations throughout the prairie west for some weeks past. The cry for help of the farmer is earnest and long as men are required to an extent unheard of before.

Canadian Officers Qualify.

London, Sept. 20.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The following qualified for admission to Camberley Staff Military College: Capt. F. S. Morrison and Capt. J. H. MacBrien, Royal Canadian Dragoons, and Capt. A. H. Borden, Royal Canadian Regiment.



The GURNEY-OXFORD is an efficient RANGE

A business is kept up-to-date because it means a difference between profit and loss. The successful business uses such modern time-and-labor-savers as typewriters, adding machines and electricity. Woman's work in the home is also a matter of profit and loss. If she has improved and modern tools, she gains time and leisure and better results. If she has old-fashioned ideas to contend with, she loses energy and effort and peace of mind

The Gurney-Economizer is the greatest single improvement ever devised to simplify cooking. It regulates the fire and heat of the oven with one direct motion. The heat of the fire is distributed by a scientific arrangement of flues that keeps the oven uniformly heated. The grates hold the fire on the least possible surface.

The Gurney-Oxford Range is a most efficient piece of household furniture. It puts the kitchen on the same labor-saving, up-to-date basis as a successful business.

"THE OUTFITTERS"

Mr. Statten and The Belleville Boys

By special invitation, Mr. Taylor Statten, advisory secretary of the Boys' Work for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, a gentleman recognized over the entire continent as expert authority concerning all phases of activity for all kinds of boys of entire communities, spent last evening in conference with the newly elected committee appointed to promote the highest interests of the school lads, the high school and the employed boys of this city. The conference was held in the Y. M. C. A. building, three hours being spent in earnest consultation looking to the betterment of existing conditions. Expression came in complaining of the growing profanity heard on our principal streets, also lads under age engaged in cigarette smoking and insulting comments passed on girls and young women as they passed along the street. The matter of permitting children of tender age to purchase tickets and attend moving picture shows without guardians was also taken up, and from the general trend of the meeting a radical move will be made toward purifying the lives of the juvenile population of our city.

Many friends were yesterday afternoon in attendance at the obsequies of the late Miss Ida Barlow of this city. At the parent's residence, corner of Forin and Charles Streets, a service was held conducted by the Rev. A. M. Hubly, Rector of the Reformed Episcopal church, assisted by his son the Rev. A. B. Eighty Thousand Will Sign Pledge

Preparations Being Made on an Elaborate Scale—Lady Dufferin Presides at Ulster Women's Protest Meeting.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—To-day sees the opening of the campaign against Home Rule, which Ulstermen declare to be memorable in Irish history. Enniskillen, which in 1689 gave the first effective check to the forces of Tyrconnell had been chosen to lead the campaign. Churches and public buildings are decorated with gay bunting, and the streets are paraded by parties of young farmers on horseback, gathered from all parts of the country to form a guard of honor to Sir Edward Carson, who opens the campaign of protest on Portora Hill this afternoon. Orange lodges paraded the streets on the way to the rendezvous.

It is the beginning of ten days of fiery oratory, each day's fever exceeding the last, until September 28, when what is called "the solemnized pledge and covenant of residence" is to be signed. No one yet knows the precise terms of the covenant.

SIGNING THE PLEDGE

The most imposing scene will be in Belfast, where 80,000 are expected to flock to the city hall to pledge the word of steadfastness to King and country whatever betide. A long line of desks covering a desk space of over one third of a mile is being arranged in a hall for 500 to sign simultaneously. Carson himself signing first at a big central table covered with a Union Jack. Ulster women, under the presidency of Dowager Lady Dufferin, so well-known in Canada, last night amid great enthusiasm resolved;—

"We in Ulster intend to remain inside the union, under the protection of the British Parliament of Westminster. We refuse to be driven forth by legislation without moral sanction."

GETTING NERVOUS

English Unionists no less than the ministerialists and the government itself, are nervous of the consequences of all this highly inflammable talk in a powder magazine like Belfast. McMillen general manager of Clark's great shipbuilding yard, replying to a deputation of Nationalists who stayed away since the last disturbances early in July, said he would not advise his own brother, if a Roman Catholic, to return to work. He had only a faint hope of things being better after Covenant Day. In a single yard men have been out eleven weeks. Nearly 200 are Protestants home rulers.

SAMPLE OF VIOLENCE.

Yesterday an English newspaperman saw a fitter dragged from his work room and nearly battered to death in Queen's Island. Three policemen alone prevented a murder.

Goodnow's Death Was Accidental

To Mr. Porter—The men were working about what it known as the 9-inch mill. A new concrete foundation was being erected beneath an engine. At the time the gasoline caught fire the tank in connection with the engine of the concrete mixer was being filled. Goodnow was not near the flames when they broke out. Goodnow and witness were the only men who were mixed up in the flames. Deceased had no occasion to be in the midst of the flames and why he was there witness could not say. Witness had woollen clothes on and Goodnow had cotton clothes on, which no doubt materially assisted in burning the deceased. Witness supposition of the affair was that at the time of the accident Goodnow was doing what he could to protect the property of the company. He was doing a heroic act.

To Mr. Alford—Witness did not call on Goodnow to assist him. What he did was not any particular good, but his intentions were no doubt good.

William Larue, testified that he was at work at the Steel Company of Canada's mill on the morning of the 12th inst. He was assisting in getting the engine of the mixer ready for work. Witness used a five gallon can of gasoline to fill the tank in connection with the mixer. The tank overflowed and witness placed a bucket under the tank to catch the overflow. He had filled the tank once before, but there was no indicator to show when the tank was full. He had run a gasoline engine before. As witness went to pick up the plug belonging to the tank his shirt sleeve caught fire. He did not notice any fire until he saw his shirt sleeve on fire. Witness did not notice any person smoking at the time and there was no fire nearby. Witness ran away from the fire and extinguished his blazing shirt sleeve. Witness did not go near Goodnow after the accident occurred to him. Witness had no idea how the gasoline caught fire.

To Mr. Porter—Witness had been operating gasoline engines on boats and knew how to operate them.

To Mr. Alford—The engine was an old one. It would have been better to have pumped the gasoline into the tank instead of pouring it in in the manner it was done.

Wm. Fry testified that on the morning of the 12th inst. he was in the 9-inch mill, near the concrete mixer. He saw Goodnow that morning. The first he knew of any fire was when he saw Larue's shirt sleeve on fire. He helped to tear the shirt sleeve off. Witness saw the gasoline overflowing from the tank. Witness smoked but was not smoking at the time and did not see any one else smoking. Witness ran outside of the mill and then came back. Witness helped to extinguish the fire which was burning Goodnow's clothing and saw that he was burned about the body.

Frederick Wheeler testified that he was employed at the mills on the day of the accident. He was a mill foreman. Witness was in the mill at the time and the first he saw of fire was when Goodnow ran out of the mill on fire. Witness was not near the gasoline engine at the time. He could not tell how the fire originated.

Wm. Dingman, being sworn, testified that he was a laborer employed by the Steel Company of Canada at their mills, and was working at the mills when the accident occurred. Witness smoked but was not smoking at the time and did not see any person smoking. He was mixing the cement at the rear of the machine when he heard some one shout 'Fire.' He looked up and saw that there was fire on the floor. He had no idea how the blaze originated.

John Donohue testified that he was an iron worker at the rolling mills and on the morning of the accident was about 60 feet away from where the fire started. He was smoking that morning, but was not near where the gasoline was being used. He saw Goodnow on fire. He could not say how the fire started. He was working on the foundation of the new engine.

Harry Trotter testified that he was a box piler at the rolling mills, and was in the mills when the accident occurred. He was a brother-in-law of the deceased. He was working about 40 feet away from the mixer when the accident occurred. Witness saw Larue's shirt on fire, and saw flames emanating from the floor. He heard a man shout, and he thought it was Goodnow's voice. Witness did not see deceased when he was on fire in the mill. Goodnow was outside of the mill when he yelled. Witness could not tell how the fire originated. Witness rushed out of the building when he saw the blaze. He was helping the bricklayers that morning.

John Fox testified that he was a laborer and on the morning of the accident was working at the rolling mills. He was working with Goodnow and the latter went near the engine. At this time there was a blaze, but how it started he could not say. He did not see any person using matches or smoking. The next he saw of Goodnow he was rolling on the ground He was then on fire. Witness pulled out a blanket and threw it upon the blaze on the floor. Alfred Fox testified that he was at the rolling mills on the day of the accident working with Goodnow, but was unable to say anything new in reference to the accident He could not tell how the fire started.

George Whalen testiefid that he was working at the rolling mills on the morning of the accident, but was unable to give any additional evidence which would throw any light on the cause of the accident. He agreed with the evidence that had been given.

Wm. Neal, being sworn, said that he was in the mill on the morning of the accident, but did not see the fire start.

HAPPY THOUGHT

How You Can Roast Well and Save Fuel

A range may be a good baker, and still not be a good roaster.

Roasting is one of the most expensive processes of cooking—more fuel is used in proportion to the result than in almost any other cooking operation. So fuel economy is worth careful watching.

You know how necessary this is to proper roasting.

But the "Happy Thought" has this further advantage—oven heat is controlled entirely by the size and strength of your fire. So that a small, lazy fire gives a slow cooking heat, and a hot blazing fire gives a quick intense heat.

The sane firebox construction of the "Happy Thought" enables you to perfectly control your fire and, therefore, your oven heat.

Over a Quarter Million Canadian women, who know this from experience, use the "Happy Thought" every day.

Are You Blue and Worried?

Nervous? Some of the time really ill? Catch cold easily and frequently suffer from biliousness or headache? The reason is that your system does not rid itself of the poisons in the blood; just as impossible as it is for the grate of a stove to rid itself of clinkers. The waste does to us exactly what the clinkers do to the stove; make the fires burn low until enough clinkers have accumulated and then prevent its burning at all. Your liver is sluggish—you are dull and heavy—sleep does not rest, nor is food appetizing. In this condition illness develops. Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery eradicates the poisons from the body—a glyceric alterative extract made from bloodroot, golden seal and mandrake root, stone and queen's root, without the use of alcohol. No matter how strong the constitution the stomach is apt to be "out of kilter" at times; in consequence the blood is disordered, for the stomach is the laboratory for the constant manufacture of blood.

MRS. BLAKE.

MRS. BENJ. BLAKE, of Port Dover, Ont., Box 36, writes: "I have been a great sufferer for years from throat trouble, catarrh, indigestion, female troubles, bloating, constipation and nervousness—at times I would be in bed, then able to be up again. Was under many different doctors' care, and would get better for a little while, then I would go down with chronic inflammation all through me. For nineteen years I had this poison in my blood. After trying nearly everything I got worse. I read in The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. I have taken the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets,' and have used five bottles of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. I am now able to do my work and walk with pleasure. I feel like a new woman. I enjoy everything around me and thank God for letting me live long enough to find something that made me well again."

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Author of "The Romance of War," "Under the Red Dragon," "Fairer than A Fairy," etc.

"Was the notice of my death circumstantial?" I asked, with a ghastly attempt at a smile.

"Most circumstantial," said the doctor.

"In what manner?"

"It was to the affect that the discovery of a forage cap of the 74th Highlanders, recognized by the quartermaster as one which he had given to Captain Haddon, rendered it certain that the remains found in the wood beyond the Amatolas, pegged to the ground and half devoured by birds and jackals, were those of that unfortunate gentleman."

"Well Bonteine," I resumed, still seeking for information to feed and increase my jealous doubts and fear, "and how comes it that you and others allowed a handsome girl like Miss Haywood to leave the colony unwedded?"

"We are not marrying men in the 74th," said Bonteine.

"And these not being the piping times of peace, we have quite enough to do," said the doctor, "and must leave love and matrimony to the idle."

"Ungallant speech", lisped Ensign Calder.

"Was not Graves supposed to be tender on Miss Haywood?" said I.

"Yes, awfully spoony; but their was anothert fellow whom she picked up somewhere about Graham's Town he accompanied her to the coast, and also went with them all in the Eugenie; and he contrived to be always so much about Miss Haywood that poor Graves had not the ghost of a chance."

"But how was he named??"

"Mynheer van Neukerque."

"Whom do you say?" I exclaimed in a tone so startling that all surveyed surprise, and Bonteine slowly repeated the name, adding—

"He was a strange fellow, and Fanny Carvsfort used to say, quoting from a book, that she thought he was just one of those wicked people in whom one feels a sort of interest in spite of one's self.'"

"Was his Christian name Schalk?"

"I don't know; but why so many questions, old fellow, eh?"

I felt utterly breathless and bewildered on hearing the revival of this strange and terrible patronymic.

"We have not much time for talking just now," said Bonteine, leisurely lighting a cigar. "The Queen's are about to pass the river, and our turn will come next."

"But this Van Neukerque. What maner of man was he like?" I persisted.

"Was, say you?"

"Yes."

"Is, you mean. I suppose the fellow is still alive."

"Don't banter, please, Bonteine. I knew a person of this name, and have special reasons for asking."

"He was altogether an indescribable kind of a man."

"Say like a person in H. S. M. S.", suggested Calder, the flippant ensign.

"I do not understand, sir," said I stiffly.

"Calder means in his Satanic Majesty's service," said Bonteine, laughing; "and, sooth to say, he was pale, grim, and sombre enough to have acted the part of Mephistopheles in Faust."

I asked no more questions. I had heard quite enough to perplex and bewilder me.

Carvsfort dead, Douglas married to Fanny, Clarice gone to Jamaict, accompanied by the insinuating fop, Graves, and a mysterious personage picked up in the vicinity of Graham's Town—a Dutchman, named Neukerque. I could not help associating the latter with that terrible creature who figured in the narrative of Doctor Bruine Kasteel at Cradock, whom Speke van Bommel had pistolled, and whose body, prior to interment, I had seen Adrian Africander decapitate with a hatchet

The flowing river, the columns of horse and foot, the train of artillery and waggons, the far extent of plain, and the blue sky and distant hills, seemed to be all racing round me. I feared that I had been struck by a coup de soleil, or was becoming insane, so much was I disturbed by my own thoughts.

His Excellency the Governor-General and staff, before whom I was brought for examination as to what I had seen and where I had been beyond the Orange River, found my replies so incoherent and so wide of the puropse, that I was abruptly dismissed from their presence, and not knowing what to do or where to go, I sat under the palm tree, gazing vacantly and dreamily at the army fording the shining river under a scorching sun.

The pencilled letters of Clarice and Douglas, with Mark Sharkeigh's confession—written, as he related, in the wretched creature's blood—for a time the only links between civilization, a past existence, and me—had reached the land dry in the pocket of my tattered blouse, and I now prepared to secure them in my Kaffir head-dress, prior to recrossing the river, for as yet I had no place of abode, no settled home, but the camp of the 74th Highlanders.

CHAPTER XL

A singular sight the troops presented when crossing the stream. The 2nd, or Queen's Regiment, was first to move forward, and then followed the 74th Highlanders, with whom I crossed

At the top of the path, or track, leading to the ford, the latter took off their boots, socks, and tartan trews, rolled their ammunition pouches in their blankets, which they tied on their heads or to the top of their knapsacks; the boots and socks were tied to the muzzles of their Minie rifles (the officers carried theirs on the points of their claymores), and in this quaint fashion, with arms sloped, the column marched right through the river.

The waggons and field pieces were slowly run into the water by dragropes, and were then pulled across by relays of soldiers and Hottentots.

Tents were soon pitched, and our clothing dried fast in the sunshine. The place where the army passed the night was rendered pleasant and beautiful by the foliage of many olive groves and pale green willows, amid which the snow-white tents—particularly those of the 12th Royal Lancers—made a picturesque scene. These groves were teeming with brilliant flamingoes and sugar-birds, and the shrill pipe of the cicade was heard from every branch. The banks of the river there were green and shady, too, and along its margin in many places the agates, cornelians and green serpentines lay so thick among the shining pebbles, that we might have filled our havresacks with them, had not ration beef and biscuits been more valuable commoditites to us there.

This, as it proved, was fated to be my last night in camp.

The officers messed by companies, each captain and his two subalterns having one common box of provisions and stock of wine. Bonteine, Cambell, and Calder invited me to chum with them in their tent; and then, for the first time after nearly five months, I enjoyed a meal that smacked of cooking and civilization.

The doctor and one or two others joined us, and while we had broiled beef, fried baryas, or mullet, fresh from the adjacent river, we drank Cape smoke or brandy and water from tin pots, canteens, teacups, and so forth, for there was but little crystal in the camp.

Amid much of that heedless joviality and frivolous banter which form the staple feature in camp and barrack life, I heard, after telling my own story, a narrative of all that had passed during my captivity.

The Kaffir corps had been everywhere destrioyed by the troops, and Lieutenant-Colonel Fordyce, of the 74th, had fallen at the storming of the Water Kloof.

"Poor Fordyce," said the doctor; "he lived for a quarter of an hour after receiving his wound, and his last words were "Take care of my poor regiment. Now I am ready!" and expired. He was a brave sodier and a true Christian gentleman."

Then I heard the terrible story of the loss of the Birkenhead transport and how when she had gone to pieces on a sunken rock three hundred and fifty-eight officers and soldiers of the 2nd, the 74th Highlanders, and other corps, stood in their ranks on deck, and went down into the deep without a cry or a murmur, content that the women and the little ons were saved by the boats.

When the ship's fate became sealed, by drum and bagpipe Major Seaton of the 74th "summoned all to the upper deck," and promptly was that call obeyed, though every gallant heart there knew it was his death summons. There they stood, as if in battle array, a motionless mass of brave men—men who were men indeed. The ship every moment was going down and down; but there were no traitors, no cravens there. The women and children were got in to the boats; there were no boats for the troops; but there was no panic, no blanched pale, quivering lips among them. No saint ever died more simply, no martyr ever died more voluntarily, no hero ever died more firmly, no victim ever met fate in a more generous spirit of self immolation, than the soldiers of the Birkenhead transport.

MYSTERY OF THE LATE ELECTION IN NORTHWEST

Extraordinary Story Contained in Bluebook Returns from Edmonton of Last Election—The Liberal Vote Stood 79 to 0—No Investigation So Far a Known in the Hon. Frank Oliver's Riding.

OTTAWA, Sept. 20.—Buried in the depths of the blue book giving the official figures of the last election, is the story of an extraordinary affair in one of the distant polls of the Edmonton constituency. There are no returns from Leaman, which is poll 164, and in a matter of fact, dry as dust official way it is explained that owing to a riot in which one man was murdered and the subsequent burning of ballots, no returns could be made, although the returning officers reported Hon. Frank Oliver got 79 votes and his opponent, Major Griesbach, none.

As far as known here, no investigation was made, or no one was brought to time for the murder. The official statement is as follows:

"Poll No. 641, Leaman poll, was held and 79 ballots were cast, and 79 were cast for Hon. Frank Oliver, but owing to a riot and death of one man in the polling booth, and the alleged burning of ballots as substantiated by the affidavit by the deputy returning officer, Frank Van Cannegt, the returning officer did not count the said 79 bollots on his recapitulation.

Girl Finds Her Father Dead In the Kitchen

"Papa, may I go out in the front yard and play with the other girls?" cried 6-year-old Vera Nephew late yesterday afternoon as she ran into the kitchen of her home, 267 Fulton street, New York City, from school. The child nearly stumbled over the body of her father, Andrew Nephew, 39 years old, which lay in the centre of the floor. In his right hand was a razor and a ghastly wound opened his throat from ear to ear. The kitchen was literally covered with blood.

Screaming at the top of her voice, the child ran to the home of Mrs. Ellen Whalen, 263 Fulton street and told what she had seen. Pysicians were called, but the man was dead.

The Crib Which Held Roosevelt's Mother

The announcement comes from Atlanta, Ga., that the crib which held the mother of Col. Theodore Roosevelt when she was a baby, will be shown the Progressive presidential canditate when he visits that city the last of the present month.

The quaint bed, with a high railing of slender spindles and four-knobbed posts, was found in Rosswell, near here, where the colonel's mother was born. On the bottom of the crib, outlined with a nail point are the words: "Made by Denny Gentery for James Bullock, March 15, 1835."

The Coming of German Airship Caused Excitement

LNDN, Sept 20.—The Daily Mail's Copenhagen correspondent says: The sudden appearance of the German Zeppelin airship, Hansa, in the midst of British warships anchored here caused great excitement yesterday. The British vessels were the Lion and the rest of the first cruiser squadron. The ships were full of visitors when the Hansa was seen approaching from the southwest at eleven o'clock in the morning. The airship was visible all over town and in the Sound where the British and Russian royal yachts are lying near the warshps, Queen Alexandra and Empress Marie both took photographs of the airship from the yacht's decks.

COVENANT TO BE SIGNED IN CHURCHES FOLLOWING SOLEMN RELIGIOUS RITE

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—A London cable to The Tribune says: The terms of the solemn league and covenant of Irish Unionists against Home Rule, which were made known last night caused great enthusiasm throughout Ulster.

The Liberal papers of London are naturally trying to pour ridicule upon this latest development of the Unionist campaign, but the covenant will certainly be hailed by all the Protestand Unionists with enthusiastic approval. The document will be signed on Ulster Day after most impressive religious services in the various Protestant places of worship.

Sir Edward Carson, Solicitor-General in the last Conservative Ministry, who has been the leading spirit in drawing up the covenant and who is probably responsible for most of its phrasology, will be the first to sign in Belfast at the City Hall and after him will come other Irish Unionists members of Parliament and the members of the Belfast corporation and other civic dignitaries.

Shoots Wife Then Blows off His Own Head

The scene of the tragedy was the family residence where the family has resided for years. Will was an ex-member of the Canadiaen Bisley team, and was one of the best shots in the regiment.

Falls Dead Five Hours After Father's Demise

BRAMPTON, Sept. 20.—Five hours after the death in this city of his aged father, Charles Wiggins of Chicago stepped from a train in this city and fell dead. He had been seized with a hemorrhage a few minutes before reaching his former home to visit his parents. Wiggins tottered from the platform of a car and exclaimed: "My name is Charles Wiggins; I am going; call a doctor." The next moment he was lying lifeless.

Skeleton of a Mastodon Found Near Aylmer

A despatch from Aylmer, Ont says the skeleton of a mastedon has been found by Mr. Leaman Hawley on the second concession of Malahide. Not all the bones have been dug out yet.

Adiramled Was Lost

KINGSTON, Ont., Sept. 20.—It has been learned that the steam barge Adirmaled, about which enquiries are being made from Montreal, sank in Lake Ontario during the past summer with a cargo of coal, but the crew all got off safely. The captain has been piloting steamers between Montreal and Kingston ever since. The marine department of Ottawa has been rather at sea regarding the disappearance of the steam barge. It appears that since she was transferred into Canadian registry the boat has not been inspected.

Crimea Veterau Dead

CORNWALL, Ont., Sept. 19.—(Special).—Frederick Patridge, a veteran of the Turkish and Crimean wars, who possessed medals and clasps for service at Sebastopol, died at the General Hospital today after a long illness. CHATHAM, Ont., Sept. 20.—Two unknown men at 4.30 this morning dynamited the safe in the Maple City creamery, owned by Ald. C. E. Lister. Hon J. W. Sifton Dies in Winnipeg

A Pioneer and Leading Citizen of Big Prairie City—Ex-Speaker of the Legislature.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 20.—Hon. J. W. Sifton, the President of the Free Press Publishing Company, and one of the foremost old-timers of the city, died here last evening. Mr. Sifton, was one of the oldest inhabitants of Winnipeg, and there was no part of the West with which he was not familiar.

He was a native of London, Ont., and, coming out here early in life, he soon rose to a high position in life. He was elected to the office of Speaker in the Provinical Assembly. Mr. Sifton, who was the father of Hon. Clifford Sifton, and the present Premier of Alberta, was well known throughout the West.

Apart from the fact that he was the father of two distinguished Canadians, Premier A. L. Sifton of Albertae and Hon. Clifford Sifton, the late Hon. John Wright Sifton was prominent in the public eye for many years. In his earlier years he was a farmer and oil operator. He served as Reeve of Oil Springs and Cornwallis, and later sat in the Lambton County Council. Mr. Sifton then became a contractor for the construction of telegraph and railway lines in the northwest. He built the telegraph line from Winnipeg to Fort Pelly, and he also built several sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He moved to Manitoba in 1878, being returned to the Legislature of that Province, and elected Speaker the same year. He was one of the leading members of the Liberal party. Besides his activity in the party he filled many other public positions, including that of Inspector of Public Buildings in Winnipeg. He was President of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Manitoba for many years. In religion he was a Methodist. In October, 1853, he married Kate, the third daughter of James Watkins, of King's County, Ireland.

Col. Sam Hughes Was Guest of Army Council

LONDON, Sept. 21.—Col. Seeley, Secretary of State for War, and the Army Counicl entertained at dinner lastt night the officers and the forces of the overseas Dominions, foreign military attaches and representatives of foreign countries who attended the recent manceuvres.

Canada was represented by Col. Sam Hughes. Others present includes Lord Roberts, Lord Kitchener, Lord Lansdowne, General Ian Hamilton, Mr. A. J. Balfour and other distinguished personages.

Earlier in the day Col. Hughes and other Canadian officers visited the establishments of Coventry Ordnance works. Col. Hughes spent several hours inspecting the works and studying methods of manufacture of modern naval and military armaments, and was much interested in what he saw. He has devoted much time and energy to obtaining a thorough knowledge of this subject since his arrival in England.

A Quadruple Alliance

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 21.—A despatch from Vienna to the Daily Chronicle says the correspondent has learned of the existence of a quadruple military alliance between Bulgaria, Servia, Greece and Montenegro, which, he says, is an offensive combination dangerous to the peace of the Balkans.

LEDGER KEEPER UNDER ARREST CHARGED WITH THEFT OF LARGE AMOUNT

MONTREAL, Sept. 20th:—The misappropriation of $38,000 from the Bank of Hochelaga was the charge brought against Henri Legace, 1167 Delorimier avenue, in the Enquete Court this morning, and to which he pleaded not guilty.

The accused was employed in the main office of the bank on St. James street as a ledger keeper, and has been in the employ of the company for some time past. He is 25 years of age.

The police claim that the method employed was to open a false account with his bank, and as cheques came in to place a fictitous name on them in endorsement, stamp, and enter them up to his fictitious account. He is alleged to have gone to the City and District Savings Bank and opened an account in the name of L. K. Amyott, and, drawing his money from the Hochelaga Bank, to have deposited it to Amyott's account, representing himself to be Amyott.

When the ledger was balanced twice a month, it is said that the young man picked out some big customer of the bank and reduced his balance in the ledger. As such reduction would not appear in the big company's pass book, there was no suspicion until late in August, when several irregularities were noted that prompted an investigation.

Application to the City & District Savings Bank showed that there was only $12 to the credit of Amyott, and where the money is now is a mystery. His private life has been above reproach, and all his friends say that he could not have spent this large amount in riotous living.

The bank yesterday claimed that the loss was $35,000; to-day it was put at $38,000, with a strong probability of reaching the $50,000 mark. The trial was put off until the 25th.

Threatens Peace Of the World

CHEMNITZ, Saxony, Sept. 20.—The Social Democrat Congress to-day adopted a resolution looking to the termination through international agreements of the competition in armaments. The resolution declares that the present rivalry among the nations threatens the peace of the world and is driving humanity toward a frightful catastrophe.

The enrichment of the great land owners, the resolution adds, must be stopped through the abolition of protection.

Typhoid Germs

WASHINGTON, Sept 19.—Jamaica Bay, Long Island, and the Potomac river, seventy-five miles down from Washington, both are polluted by typhoid germs, according to the department of agriculture's declaration. Acting Secretary Hayes issued a statement saying the department's investigator's had traced typhoid to oyster beds, and had began a survey of the great oyster fields to determine how far the pollution extends. He suggested state policing of oyster beds, and action by government authorities to insure purification of city sewage.

Father's Neglect Causes Sore Trials

"If Father Had Only Made a Will We Could Have Avoided All This Trouble."

This was the cry of a woman in whose family there had been disagreements and heartburnings over the division of a small estate.

There were only a few things to divide—just a small farm and a few cattle, but the family could not agree. The little place had to be sold quickly or less than it was worth and the family is hopelessly divided.

All such trouble could have been avoided at an expense of 35 cents for a Bax Will Form. It is a duty that every man owes to his family, whether he has thousands or hundreds to leave to make a positively indisputable will. Attend to this important matter at once.

BAX Legal Will Forms are copyrighted. With each form there is furnished a specimen with properly filled out and full instructions for your guidance.

For sale by G. L. Sills, and C. B. Scantlebury, Belleville, at 35 cents or sent on receipt of price by the BAX Will Form Company, Toronto.

LETTERS OF A SLIM-MADE WOMAN TO HER FAT SISTER

Second Letter: On the heritage of Over-fatness

Dear Sir:—You've heard the adage "Like Father, Like Son." Well I never before thought of it applying to over-fatness until today. Clara Moore was here with her 18-year-old boy. He is enormous—weighs nearly 300 pounds. She came to ask how I reduced myself to my present slim trimness.

Of course, I told her about Marmola Prescription that took off my fat, and assured her they were perfectly harmless. Said she'd be willing to buy a ton of them if they did any good at all. The boy is a tremendous eater and is too lazy to take any exercise (all fat people are), but you know I stopped carving and cavorting long before I started to take Marmola.

That's the beauty of this wonderful method—it isn't dependent upon any other treatment. And I know I'M doing that boy a favor.

In a few months, he'll be solid and smooth-skinned, with better figure and health than ever before and he need never again dread the extreme obesity that is now such a family trait.

If more parents knew that for 75c they could purchase a large box of Marmola Prescription Tablets from their druggist or the Marmola Co. Monroe Ave., Detroit, Mich.), hereditary over-fatness would be a thing of the, Don't you think so?

Affectionately, BETTY.

Duelists Hit Woman

PARIS, Sept. 20.—A revolver duel between a jealous husband and his rival was fought last night in the Place de L'Etoile in the heart of the aristocratic quarter of Paris.

M. Simmonet, who lives in Neuilly, was waiting for his wife at the corner of the Avenue de Friedland when he saw her talking to another man. There was an altercation between the two men and the husband was challenged. Both pulled out revolvers and ten shots were exchanged regardless of the crowds in the square.

The husband was slightly wounded, and the last shot fired hit Mme. Simmonet, who had interposed, but did not hurt her seriously.

As M. Sommonet had a smoking revolver in his hand he was taken for an Apache and was roughly handled by the crowd before he was rescued by the police.

Admits Selling Diseased Meats

TILBURY, Sept. 21.—Aaron Strong, butcher of this town, pleaded guilty before Police Magistrate Caldwood this morning of selling lumpjaw beef, and was fined $50 and costs, amounting to $106 in all.

Walter Mineau, a Tilbury East farmer who was charged with selling the diseased animal to the butcher, also pleaded guilty, and was fined $20 and costs, amounting in all to $42. The prosecution was made by High Constable Peters, of Chatham, and the Crown was represented by County Attorney Smith, of Chatham.

The County Crown Attorney said he had recived a letter stating that another Tilbury butcher had been selling hogs that were fed on the carcases of diseased horses, and that he was going to have the matter thoroughly investigated. If the case were proved, he said, the offender would not escape with a fine as did Strong and Mineau.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE—A SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT

The discovery and turning in an alarm of fire makes possible the heroic work of the firemen in putting it out.

Undiscovered, a fire spreads with amazing rapidity, destroying everything within reach.

The discovery of the dandruff germ was of estimate value to mankind, but only because it paved the way for the greater service, the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide.

Dandruff is contageous, and its spread is checked by the use of Herpicide. This delightful scalp dressing kills the germ, and prevents the hair from falling. It stops that itching almost instantly.

Herpicide is the one standard and original dandruff germ destroyer. Any other preparation making this claim is an imitation.

Send 10c. in postage or silver for sample and booklet to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

A DEIGHTFUL PLAY

At Griffin's Opera House last evening the romantic Irish play, "The Rose of Kildare," was presented to a large and appreciative audience. The play had been represented to be appealing in its nature, and it certainly fulfilled that prediction. Fiske O'Hara, as Gerald O'Donnell, is not only a capable actor, but has a captivating tenor voice, and during the play sang sevral songs written especially for him in a manner that fairly brought down the house. O'Hara has served his apprenticeship in the dramtic stock companies, where he has played a long list of parts of no small importance. It was as a light opera artist, however, that O'Hara first won his spurs. Possessing a tenor voice of rare beauty and power, he became conspicuous in "The Isle of Spice." In the play "The Rose of Kildare," he is well fitted for the important role he takes, and is ably supported by a well balanced company. The stage settings in the play are all that can be desired.

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

"The Light Eternal", a romatic tale of love and religous persecution in the early Christian period, will be the attraction at Griffins Opera House, Sept. 25th and 26th.

Its scenes are laid in Rome about A. D. 300, during the reign of Diocletian, and its principal characters are taken from the imperial household, the military and the wealthy merchant class. While religious oppression forms the background, the principal theme is found in the love of Marco Valerius, a captain of the emperor's guard and a Christian, for the Princess Artemia, daughter of Diocletian. Artemia, an avowed pagan, becomes enamoured with the young soldier before learning his religious faith, and upon his admission of the so-called crime of Christianity she signs a warrant for his arrest; proceeding possible of but one result—death in the arena. There has been many popular dramas along this and similar lines—for instance Soumet's "Gladiator" and Wilson Barret's "Sign of the Cross". "The Light Eternal" may be said to resemble either or neither of them; but clearly the subject is prolific, and in this play a note of almost universal appear has been sounded.

Plan opens Monday at Doyle's Drug Store.

BELFAST, Sept. 20.—The third great North of Ireland Anti-Home Rule demonstration was held at Londonderry to-day. Thousands of Orangemen cheered the watchword "Ulster will fight."

A LOVELY BABY BOY
This Mother is quite Enthusiastic over a well Known Food.
Mrs. J. W. Pateman, 34 Harriet St., Toronto, in writing about Neave's Food says "When I first knew one of my friends, her baby Jack was eight months old and dying by inches. She had tried three foods because her Jack could not digest milk. At last, I fetched her a tin of Neave's Food. At the end of a month, Jack was rapidly gaining flesh and was bright and happy. He is a lovely boy now and she declares Neave's Food saved his life. And it did.
Then I recommended it to a friend on Victoria Avenue. She had a baby 6 months old that was not thriving a bit. She put the baby on Neave's Food and at the end of three months, the baby was twice the size.
I have never seen two bigger, stronger boys than mine for their ages and we owe it all to Neave's Food. I have the utmost faith in Neave's Food."
Mothers and prospective mothers may obtain a free tin of Neave's Food and a valuable book "Hints About Baby" by writing Edwin Utley, 14 Front Street East, Toronto, who is the Canadian agent. (Mention this paper.) For sale by all druggists. 24

We learn that the manager of Griffin's has bought a lot of new chairs to be used in the boxes, orchestra and dressing rooms. The theatre is to be entirely renovated and fixed up. MAYNOOTH FAIR

The annual fall fair of the Maynooth Agricultural Society was held on Thursday last, and in point of attendance and quality and number of exhibits compared favorably with that of other years. Had the show been held about two weeks later the number of entries of grain and vegetables would no doubt have been doubled. The display of ladies' work was excellent. Some very fine colts were on exhibition, particularly yearling and two-year-olds, and Father Warnock's herd of pedigreed Ayshire cattle were much admired. The base ball match between Bancroft and Greenview might have been going yet, but the Greenview athletes got tired running bases. The score was 28 to 8.

What it Costs to Live in Edmonton

Those of our citizens who are grappling with the Western fever will do well to study the following which we clip from the Deseronto Post.

"Mr. John Dalton arrived home from Edmonton Sunday morning. He was glad to get back, and his many friends were glad to greet him. Regarding his trip, he said that, aside of course from his illness, he enjoyed it immensely. The west is really a great country, Mr. Dalton says. Speaking of Edmonton, he said it was a splendid city. Everybody was well dressed and apparently prosperous. He spoke of a party who formerly resides in Edmonton. They have a large house, for which they pay $175 per month. To offset his huge rental sixteen rooms are rented (without board) at $25 per month, aggregating $400 per month. The family have their own living rooms in addition to this. Mr. Dalton also met a gentleman formerly of Belleville, whom he knew in the past very well. When asked hwat rent he paid for his place of business, he answerde "Four hundred dollars per month." The gentleman said it was so easy to make money in Edmonton that he could more easily pay $450 there than $50 in Belleville. Regarding the great wheat crops, Mr. Dalton said the great stooks of wheat stretching as far as the eye could see was a sight worth seeing. "Of course, while the money is not to be made in the west, Mr. Dalton is pretty well satisfied that our little town is a pretty, comfortable place to live in after all."

The same may be said of beautiful and healthy Belleville.

SEEKING THE WILD.

Thousands of people are finding out each year that he wilderness is the place for that enjoyment which cannot be experienced anywhere else. Algonquin Park of Ontario for instance has been the mecca during the past summer for one of the largest influx of summer visitors in its history and every year shows a large increase of this great brotherhood of summer resort seekers. A wilderness of over 2,000,000 acres of forest, rivers and lakes filled with the wild things that inhabit its confines and offering fishing that cannot be excelled in any other part of the country is bound to attract the attention of the lover of nature and those who love "God's out of doors". The autumn months are among the best of any during the year for a visit to this delightful spot and the "Highland Inn" at Cache Lake offers to its patrons all the comforts of a city home. The altitude is 2,000 feet above sea level, the days are delightful and the nights cool and conductive to that sleep which refreshes and invigorates.

First Sea Auto Glides Into New York Harbor

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—The craft in New York harbor looked wonderingly to-day at a strange new vessel which glided swiftly and noiselessly without smokestacks or sails through the shipping to her dock.

She was the Christian X. of the Hamburg-American line, 7300 tons burden, the first motor ship which has visited the port. She came in from New Orleans to get fuel oil to run her to Hamburg. Her captain said that she consumed ten tons of oil a day.

He calls her the first ocean automobile.

New Governor Of New Zealand

LONDON, Sept. 20.—It is officially announced that the Earl of Liverpool has been appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief in New Zealand.

The Right Honorable Arthur Foljambe, fifth Earl of Liverpool—a title which was created in 1796 and revived in 1893—was born in 1870, and succeeded to the title in 1907. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst, was A.D.C. to Earl Cardogan in Ireland, served in the South African campaign and was State Steward and Chamberlain to Lord Aberdeen in Ireland. His ancestor, Col. Charles Jenkinson, commanded a regiment at Dettinjen and Fontenoy. The second Earl of Liverpool was Prime Minister, 1812-27.

The Royal Party At Vancouver

VANCOUVER, B.C., Sept. 20.—The second day's stay of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia at Vancouver was, if anything, more interesting and marked by even greater interest than the day of their arrival. By Mayoral edict the day was observed as a general holiday and in consequence of this enormous crowds thronged the streets and enthusiastically cheered the Royal visitors for whom a full day of interesting functions was arranged by the local authorities. Above all the sun shone gloriously from morning till night and altogether the day was a memorable one for the Pacific coast city, which demonstrated its loyalty and imperialism in a manner which was intensely gratifying to the Ducal party.

The Royal party were driven in motors to the new Cambie Street bridge, where the Duchess christened the new structure The Connaught Bridge by breaking a bottle of champagne against one of the pillars.

Dangerous Cargo Brought to Montreal

MONTREAL, Sept. 21.—One of the most dangerous cargoes ever brought to Montreal came to port today, when the tank steamer Euplectela tied up with a load of a million and a half gallons of gasoline, consigned to the Dominion Shell Co. from Singapore. Owing to the explosive nature of the cargo the crew had a hard time during the voyage, all smoking being prohibited, while the galley fire was seldom allowed to be used for cooking purposes. In addition to the regular crew, the vessel carried a squad of watchmen whose special duty it was to see that no matches were struck, that none of the crew dared to smoke, and in other ways to see that all danger of firing this inflammable stuff was avoided. Similar precautions are observed in port. No one is allowed within a big radius of the vessel, and the gasoline is being pumped from the vessel by underground pipes. Owing to these precautions the immense cargo of automobile fuel has been safely brought to its destination. It is stated to be probably the largest consignment of gasoline ever brought to Canada.

Hydro-Aeroplanes Best for England

LONDON, Sept. 20.—Glenn Curtiss is negotiating with Vickers' Sons & Maxim for the sale of rights to the patents of his company for the manufacture of hydro-aeroplanes.

Speaking of the English army manoeuvres, Mr. Curtiss said to-day that, judging from the reports in the newspapers, the aeroplanes had undoubtedly proved to be of great value. He added: "My idea is that all aeroplanes hereafter ought to be hydroplanes, especially in England, on account of its sea-girt characteristics. From aloft every surface looks flat, and it is easy to arrange entanglements for aeroplanes, whereas the sea presents a uniform surface. In addition the danger of the capture of aeroplanes on the sea is less than on land."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

A Memorable Anniversary

Just one year ago to-day, namely on September 21st, 1911, there occurred one of the most memorable events in the history of Canada. It was in effect a revolution, such as, among the hot-blooded races of southern countries, is accomplished by violence and bloodshed; but, as is usual in Canada, the revolution, involving a change of Government and of policy, was accomplished in a peaceful manner. On that day the people of Canada decided at the polls, by an overwhelming majority, against an agreement for reciprocity in trade between Canada and the United States which had been submitted by the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier for their approval. The result was the deposition from office of an Administration which had ruled in the Dominion for sixteen years, and the defeat of several of its most prominent members, together with many of its supporters in Parliament.

That the people chose wisely in placing the administration of their affairs in the hands of the Right Hon. Robert Laird Borden and his colleagues whom he called to his counsels, has been amply demonstrated; for almost startling have been the achievements of those gentlemen during their short tenure of office. It would require more space than is at our command to enumerate in detail the various items of their progressive policy, but of their administrative acts it may be mentioned that they have put the Intercolonial Railway on a profitable basis, it yielding a surplus last year, and have so reformed the internal economy of some of the departments as to put a stop to grafting, which had long, under Grit auspices, been reduced to almost a science. They have also secured for Canadian produce a preferential market in certain of the British West Indian Islands and in British Guiana, have secured a reduction in rates for certain transatlantic cable messages, and have obtained for the merchants and manufacturers of Canada the advantage of all the information gathered by the British consular service throughout the world. Besides all this they have ended all the grafting connected with the construction of the Transcontinental Railway and other public works.

Incidentally the ties of empire have been strengthened by the visit to the mother country of Premier Borden, whose admirable utterances and attitude as the first citizen of Canada have won unstinted praise from political friends and opponents alike.

So excellent, indeed, have been the services rendered to this country by the Borden Government that their opponents, lacking material for solid criticism, have been compelled to offer again—under a more specious name—the policy of reciprocity which was so emphatically rejected last year. Nothing could better suit the Conservative party, for the project has fallen into disfavor, not only in the United States but in Canada as well. Witness the following editorial utterances of the Hamilton Herald, which gave an able and unwavering support to the trade compact which was then the chief issue of the contest:

> "Wider markets" was the main theme of Sir Wilfrid's speech at Sturgeon Falls. No doubt he will ring the changes on it in his oratorical tour of the west. That sort of talk will please the west; but the people out there do not need to be convinced of the desirability of wider markets for Canadian farm products; they are convinced already.
> One wonders if by the term "wider markets" Sir Wilfrid means the reciprocity agreement of 1911. He did not say so. It almost looked as if he were careful not to say so. "Reciprocity is killed, they tell us," he said, "but it is indispensible to the great young west that markets should be provided for these products." Mr. Borden or Mr. Foster could have said that without inconsistency. Of course Canada needs wider markets for her products, and the need will grow as the product of the west continues to outgrow the capacity of eastern Canada to absorb it. Whatever party is in power at Ottawa, one of the prime duties of Canadian statesmanship will be to negotiate such trade agreements with other nations as will help to widen the market for our surplus products.
>
> This is not to say that reciprocity with the United States will be a necessity to Canada—at least such an agreement as the one of last year. That would be too humiliating an admission. Besides it is hardly expedient to rely upon the policy of reviving that agreement, for even if the Canadian people were to repent of their action of September 21, 1911, it is not at all probable now that the U. S. Congress would consent to retain the reciprocity act on their statute book. Mr. Roosevelt is one of the keenest of American politicians, and after feeling the public pulse he has executed a volte-face on the qustion and denounces reciprocity as heartily as he commended it last year.
> The Liberal party had better quit hankering after the "hundred-million market" to the south. "Wider markets" is a good cry, for "wider markets" is comprehensive enough to take in all the over-sea markets that it is possible to cultivate.

The Herald no doubt voices the opinions of many former advocates of the pact who did not fully realize its import, but who have since been undeceived. Reciprocity with the United States is dead, but it is quite possible that, by means of reductions in the tariff of that country, trade between the Dominion and the Republic may be considerably increased to the benefit of both.

There is only one thing for Britain and her daughter nations to do in this matter of naval competition, and that is to keep the imperial navy at a point of strength and efficiency so far in advance of Germany's naval power that Germany will never be adequately prepared for the prospective struggle for supremacy at sea.—Hamilton Herald.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier advises the French-Canadians of New Ontario to be Imperialistic, but he failed to tell them that his idea of Imperialism is to have a navy, with a string to it—one that would not and could not go to the assistance of the Empire without the consent of his government if he were in power—a consent that might be given too late, if given at all. A strange kind of Imperialism, surely.!—Kingston Standard.

The four centuries between the Panama Canal's first conception and its completion are by no means a record in the annals of canal construction. The completion in 1893 of the canal across the Isthmus of Corinth was the finish of a scheme for which the first survey was made in the year 600 B.C., when Perlander employed Egyptian engineers to carry out the work. Nero actually commenced work along the site of the present canal, but at his death it was abandoned, and the project was not revived until 1882, and this though the total length of the canal is under four miles.

It is said that there are about 28,000 busheles of wheat, in the barge, Huron, which was wrecked in the St. Lawrence near Morrisburg a few days ago. The barge was in tow of a tug and was struck by a steel barge and was so damaged that the crew were taken off and the barge cut adrift, and went down into the rapids where it almost turned turtle, finally piling up on the rocks, so badly rent and torn to pieces as to be a total loss.

While the British Liberal Government appears to be quite satisfied with Premier Borden's attitude on the naval question and to have every confidence that he will produce a satisfactory policy for effective aid, it is sad to observe that the Canadian Infant Phenomenon, Mr. W. L. M. King, late of the extinct Laurier Cabinet, is far from satisfied. Mr. King, who told an Ottawa interviewer that he had just been the guest of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen in Ireland, is, in fact, not at all pleased with Premier Borden, which is not at all surprising when one recalls the massacre of Sept. 21, 1911.—Brockville Times.

A ghost is alleged to be responsible for the mysterious knockings at a house in Hull, but apparently it does not attract much attention as its ancestor of Cock-lane in London. It was in 1762 that a mysterious knocking and scratching were heard at a house in Cock-lane, and were said to be the work of the spirit of a young lady who had lived in the house and was buried in the neighboring church of St. John. Thousands visited the house, until a careful investigation was made in the presence of Dr. Johnson and other celebrities, and the ghost was proved to be the creation of a female ventriloquist. The owner of the house was set in the pillory, and the crowd collected a subscription for him. They were on the side of the ghosts.

Canada is receiving the very best classes of immigrants from all nations. She welcomes none more eagerly than the American in the West. The immigrants that are coming at present into the United States, usually come with few or no friends, often handicapped by not knowing English, and usually by lack of means to obtain anything but the bare necessities of life on the lowest scale. But the United States is sending to Canada those who are entirely familiar with the conditions, who are the children of the pioneers who cleared the waste places in the Middle States in an earlier day, and let in the law. These men take kindly to Canadian institutions and in a very short space of time become loyal citizens of their adopted country. As a class they are far superior to any immigrants that the country receives from most other countries, for they are not fronting new and untried conditions, but conditions and difficulties which they have already formed the habit of overcoming.

Talked About The Union Jack

FREDERICTON, N. B., Sept. 19.—The Federation of Canadian Clubs completed its sessions at noon to-day, and will meet at Hamilton, Ont., 1913. The question of a flag for Canada was discussed at considerable length, and at one time the delegates got down to designing the flag.

Two definite suggestions were made: one by Mr. J. S. Armstrong of this city, and was for a display of maple leaves in triangular designs in the centre of the Union Jack, and the other suggestion was made by Mr. H. A. Porter of St. John and was for the placing of the coat-of-arms of the Provinces of Canada in the centre of the Union Jack.

During the discussion many of the delegates expressed the view that the Union Jack was good enough for any place in the Bitish Empire.

One delegate, Mr. E. A. Smith of St. John, declared that the present Canadian flag had no legitimate right on any flagpole.

Some laughter was caused when Mr. Guy M. Drummond of Montreal said that he was representing the Montreal Women's Club. However, Mr. Drummond said he was serious and his vote against the resolution to take the matter up made the result a tie, and the resolution was then withdrawn.

Panama Canal

Mr. Guy M. Drummond introduced a resolution suggesting that the Canadian Clubs throughout the Dominion take up the question of Canada's interest in the Panama Canal, and have speakers deal with the subject at luncheons. He said that already some Montreal business men were looking into the question of competing for British Columbia business by the Panama Canal. The question of having a subsidized steamship line between Canadian ports via the Panama Canal was one matter worthy of consideration.

Celebrate Confederation.

The Federated Canadian Clubs are going to take an active part in having the semi-centennial of Confederation celebrated in 1917.

At this morning's session of the Federation the subject was brought up by Honorary President Chas. R. McCullough of Hamilton, and a resolution was passed bringing the matter to the attention of the Federal and Povincial authorities throughout the Dominion. Mr. McCullogh said that already he had discussed the subject with persons in high authority in the Dominion and that the suggestion had been well received on all sides.

Secretary Oblenes for the executive reported that there were sixty-six Canadian Clubs and Women's Canadian Clubs, new clubs having been formed during the year. Last year 48 clubs paid affiliation dues.

The following report of the Nominating Committee naming the new officers was adopted: Honorary President, C. R. McCullough Hamilton; President, W. M. McClement, K. C., LL.B., Hamilton; Hon. Secretary-Treasurer, G. E. Main, Hamilton; Vice-President, Mrs. Eatherton Smith, St. John. Provincial: Prince Edward Island, Percy Pope, Charlottetown; Nova Scotia, D. McGilvary, Halifax, N. S.; New Brunswick, H. A. Porter, St. John; Quebec, R. L. H. Ewing, Montreal; Ontario, Kenneth J. Dunstan, Toronto; Manitoba, A. L. Crossin, Winnipeg, Man.; Saskatchewan, Chas. Hodgkins, Regina, Sask.; Alberta, Chas. F. Adams, Calgary; British Columbia, H. A. Mann, Victoria.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE SEPTEMBER ROD AND GUN

Bonnycastle Dale's "Every Day Scenes with the Indian Trapper" opens the September issue of Rod and Gun in Canada. The adventures of a German Hunter in America, being a translation from the German by Hon. William Renwick Riddell, L. H. D., etc. relates the experiences of Freidrich Gerstacker who visited America in 1837 and went bear hunting in the Ozark mountains. This is "some bear story." Duck Hunting is given considerable attention in this issue and includes Duck shooting on the river Saugeen, at Long Point, on the St. Lawrence, in the Kootenay district and an amusing Western tale entitled "Hunting in Sage Brush Ike's Duck Pond." Decoy shooting by Reginald Gourlay is deserving of special mention as is also a well illustrated article on Rearing Wild Ducks in Captivity. Mr. James Dickson a veteran sportsman makes some suggestions and criticisms regarding Mr. Kelly Evans' Fish and Game report. "Pens and Dens" is the subject of the Fox article in this issue.

The Canadian Textile Journal, the oldest technical trade publication in Canada, has been taken over by a new management and its September issue comes to hand in an enlarged and greatly improved form.

The purpose of this fine looking trade paper is three-fold:—

(1) To educate the workers in all branches of the textile industry in the best, most economical and up-to-date processes;

(2) To present the news of the industry from one end of the Dominion to the other;

(3) To inform the public on the great and far-reaching importance of the industry, from the production of the raw material up to the manufacture and distribution of the finished fabric.

Prof. Sexton, of Halifax Industrial School, furnishes the first of a series of illustrated articles on "Technical Education for Textile Workers," showing in detail what is being done in that home of scientific education, Germany, and drawing a moral for Canada.

A prominent cotton mill man presents in graphic style the history of what has been accomplished in one branch of that industry at the large print works at Magog, Que.

There are also technical and practical articles of great interest to those actively engaged in the various departments of the Canadian textile industry, such as Woolen Manufacturing, the Cotton Mill, Knitting and Hosiery, Finishing, Dyeing and Bleaching, etc., add to the value of the journal for those in any way connected with the manufacture or marketing of textile fibres.

The offices of the Canadian Textile Journal are at 226-7 Confederation Life Building, Toronto, Ont., and 348 Board of Trade Building, Montreal, Que.

Cooking and Baking Problems are Easy to Solve With a "PANDORA" Range

The Oven is the heart of a range. Its efficiency depends largely on construction of Fire-box and Flues, but—certain scientific principles must be carried out in making the Oven to insure success.

Illustration No. 1.

Illustration No. 1 shows the exact course followed by the drafts in "PANDORA" range—you see the heat passes directly under every pot-hole and around the Oven twice before reaching smoke pipe.

The Flues are deep and wide—corners are rounded—they are easily cleaned and there is nothing to impede the draft. A glance at McClary Flue construction will convince you that the "PANDORA" range is a perfect baker and cooker at the same time. The heat envelops the Oven uniformly—bread is evenly baked in the "PANDORA."

Illustration No. 2 shows the McClary system of Oven Ventilation very plainly. As you know, air close to the body of a range is fresh and comparatively warm. This fresh, warm air is drawn into Oven through small holes—the intense warmth super-heating and diffusing it throughout the Oven. Then it escapes with cooking fumes through vent holes shown in back of Oven.

The ventilation of "PANDORA" Oven is simple, yet scientific, and—the results are apparent. A roast can be cooked just the way you like it—cooked so that it retains all its generous and nourishing juices and—bread, puddings, etc., are baked light, crisp, and fresh in the "PANDORA" Oven. The linings of the "PANDORA" Oven are of nickelled steel one-eighth of an inch thick and as smooth as glass—so the Oven is easily kept clean—easier heated and more durable.

N. B.—You can have the complete story of "Pandora" efficiency by simply asking for our Free Book, "Reasons for 'Pandora' Popularity."

THE RING

THIS BOXER SURE GIANT

Those with a superficial knowledge of modern boxing bouts are wont to regard pugilists as of a low order of humanity. In spite of their prejudices, however, the most censorious critics of boxing will have to admit that Jesse Willard, one of the crop of white hopes, looks at the things of life from an elevated viewpoint. Jesse stands six feet four inches in his sandals, and if he ever fails as a boxer he should have no trouble in getting a job with a circus as the Wyoming Giant, the tallest man, ladies and gentlemen, that ever came from the bounding west.

It is said that Jesse learned to duck as a result of bending his neck in entering ordinary doors, and up to date he never has dared to put on a high hat. This is partly due to his desire not to incur the disfavor of the fellow cowpunchers of the west and partly to a wish not to be confused when on the streets with the Woolworth and other tall buildings.

But Willard, who came east with less flourish than any of the other western white hopes, does not depend on altitude for recognition by the boxing fans. In the matter of boxing skill he far outclasses Morris and McCarty, and if he gets as good a chance as these two westerners have had Willard will deliver the goods. To begin, Willard has a thinking apparatus in his cranium, which was conspicuously absent in the cases of Morris and McCarty. The tall chap has a staight left-hand punch, which, with his astonishing reach, will connect with the probocis of an opponent half way across the ring. He used that left hand on McCarty with telling effect, and varied it with a right uppercut that was very discouraging to the recipient.

Willard absolutely declines to get rattled under fire, and boxes methodically and carefully all the time. Experience is all that he lacks, and it seems singular that with his skill he should not have more bouts.

After Al Palzer disposed of Bombarder Wells so summarily in this city the Englishman and his friends, while manfully admitting that the Briton had been fairly defeated, expressed the opinion that in another encounter with the victor there would be a different tale to tell.

On the arrival of Wells in England, A. F. Bettison, manager of the National Sporting Club of London, having heard that Wells desired another chance at Palzer, offered the English champion a match with the American in the National Sporting Club. It was the opinion of Bettison that Wells, boxing in his own country and with the advantage of training in a climate to which he was accustomed, would be able to do himself justice in another contest with the American.

To the surprise of Bettison Wells promptly declined. Wells said he had come home to rest, that he was to be married, and that in any event he was to return to America for a series of bouts.

While there was considerable question as to Palzer being able to go to London owing to the tangled legal condition of his affairs, still it is evident that the Briton is not anxious for another combat with the Iowa farmer boy.

BASEBALL.

It is announced that all of the 5,000 reserved seats will be distributed in person, except in the general allotments to the national baseball commission and to the players. No tickets will be sent out, by mail, registered or otherwise. No money is accepted with applications, and the club has sent back thousands of dollars in checks and cash to persons who sent bills or checks with their applications. Only requests for tickets for all the games in this city are being noticed, and only one ticket will be issued for three games. This it is expected, will minimize the operations of the speculative element.

NATIONAL COMMISSION MEETS

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 20.—Chairman August Hermann of the national baseball commission will meet in New York next Wednesday to arrange for the world's champion series.

Mr. Hermann said all matters pertaining to the games would be placed in the hands of the national commission. He believed the arrangements for the distribution of the tickets made by the Boston club management were premature and even if applied would not be successful.

PREPARE FOR WORLD SERIES

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 20.—The business end of baseball—in the form of arrangements for the games in this city in the coming world's championship baseball series—is having long innings at Fenway Park these days, while the Red Sox are on the road seeking to clinch their claim to the American League championship and the consequent right to contend for the blue ribbon of baseball. A force of nearly 100 clerks and carpenters is at work daily to complete the accommodations for between 30,000 and 35,000 persons expected at each of the games to be played here.

The carpenters are rearing temporary stands on every inch of available space. Ten thousand seats in addition to the normal capacity of 22,000 seats is expected to result from their labors.

The clerks, working well into the evening, face each day a fresh pile of correspondence from all parts of the country, regarding the 15,000 seats which will be reserved.

To prevent a recurrence of the troubles which attached to the distribution of tickets for the last series, the Boston management has adopted an elaborate system of protection against tickets being got by speculators. This has added greatly to the clerical duties, but it is expected to result in entire fairness in the allotment of seats.

The system has already disclosed attempts to secure tickets in bunches for speculative purposes.

Many a man's bad luck is due to the fact that he has neither inherited ability nor acquired industry.

The N. Y. Stock Market

By HUGH M. CREIGHTON.

(Mr. Creighton, whose address is No. 60 Broadway, N.Y. City, will be pleased to answer readers' inquiries regarding any stock or bond.)

MONEY

Ruling Discount Rates:

	Open Market	Govt. Bank

60 days—5¼—5¾

Six Months—5½

Commercial paper:

Prime 5¾ @ 6, Single Names 6.

Paris controls the financial situation being the only nation in a position to discount in volume bills. During the past sixty days, the United States has been a steady borrower abroad and at the present time, European bankers are in a position to dictate terms should the $50,000,000 worth of bills sold some sixty days ago in Paris for October maturity, require renewal. Combining the outlook abroad with the situation at home, so as to get a true perspective, the outlook is for high rates for some time to come. This was reflected in the further advance this week for both call and time money.

A broad demand now exists for time money over the year end. Such loans are going at 5½% and better. Commercial paper is now on a firm 6% basis.

THE STOCK MARKET.

The stock market this week attempted to ignore the financial situation and advance to a higher level. The movement cannot be said to have been successful. However the attempt was of importance, as it clearly indicates a tendency toward higher prices whenever financial conditions improve. Temporarily financial conditions are chaotic, due to the heavy demand for money to finance the marketing of the crops. For this reason little relief can be expected until the demand subsides and money begins to return to the usual channels. This should be early in October. Prices for stocks will not doubt, discount such a happening. For this reason I believe the outlook, is for much higher prices for all stocks, with little reason to anticipate any recession of importance.

RAILROAD EARNINGS.

During July, 416 Railroads with 236,712 miles of road made gross earnings of $245,595,532 and, net earnings of $72,427,565, which compares with the same month in 1911 as follows: Gross $222,587,872 and net —$70,537,977, an increase of $8,890,588 or 12.61%. Preliminary figures indicate that the same satisfactory condition will continue into the month of August.

COPPER STOCKS.

There is a rumor that one of the principal copper companies, owning shares in seeveral of the big producing companies will be dissolved and a distribution of the stocks owned made to the stockholders. The offices of this concern evidently view with envy the profitable dissolution of other large holding companies.

LUCK OF A DRAGOON

Officer Marries an Archduchess in Vienna.

VIENNA, Sept. 20.—The marriage of Archduchess Elizabeth Franziska, daughter of Archduke Francis Salvator, and Count George Van Waldburg, a dragoon officer, took place to-day at the Castle Chapel of Schoioss Wallsee, in the presence of Emperor Francis Joseph. The Archduchess, who was born at Vienna in January, 1892 recently renounced her royal rights. Count Von Waldburg was formerly the tutor of Archduchess and her brothers. He was born at Wallsee and in nearly two years younger than his bride.

Golden Text—Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life. John vi:35.

(1.) Verse 30—What is the advantage of telling God in detail about ourselves and our affairs?

(2.) What would you say the twelve told Jesus concerning "what they had done and what they had taught?"

(3.) Verse 31—What is the relative importance of necessary work and necessary rest?

(4.) What evidence is there that, notwithstanding his busy life, Jesus taught by precept and example the need of taking proper rest?

(5.) Verse 32—Is it either wise or necessary for a faithful minister of the gospel to tell the people when he takes a rest?

(6.) Verse 33—If Jesus intended to go away "privately" how do you account for it that his plans were upset?

(7.) Jesus intended to take a rest with his disciples, but instead was plunged into more intense work. Now, which which would you say was God's preference, that Jesus' intentions should be carried out or that which actually happened?

(8.) To a man of God which is divine guidance, what he expects to do or what he actually does?

(9.) Verse 34—If preachers and other Christian teachers succeed in making Christ actually known to the masses will the people flock to Chirst, as in those days? Why?

(10.) What was the condtition of the people which so moved the heart of Jesus, and what conditions today are there which when known stir similar compassion in all Christian hearts?

(11.) Which are the people in more need of today, preaching or teaching?

(12.) Verses 35-36—Were the disciples right or wrong, and why, in calling the attention of Jesus to the needs of the multitudes?

(13.) It our heavenly Father knows our temporal needs what is the benefit of calling his attention to them?

(14.) Verse 37—Does God ever command his children to do that which he nows they cannot? Give your reasons.

(15.) Whom does God command to feed the millions of the earth who are spiritually hungry, and when and how does he expect it to be done?

(16.) When God commands us to do that which looks to us to be impossible is it wisdom or folly for us to attempt it, and why?

(17.) Verses 38-40—What is the proof that we have all the necessary qualities and opportunities to accomplish the work in life to which we are appointed by God? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(18.) When a man is not systematic and works without method is that any evidence that he is not true to the laws of God? Why?

Parole Old Man But Must Report Weekly for 7 Years

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Every Sunday morning for seven years to come Erman Dunker must make a pilgrimage to the police court and report to the probation officer. There had not been a ripple of discord in the Dunken home in Greenpoint for the forty years the couple had lived together until last Sunday, when Dunker developed a "grouch" and discharged a revolver at his surprised spouse. Then she had him arrested. The old man was so repentent when arraigned that the judge decided on the period of probation. Dunker was bewildered at the long term.

"But I am already an old man and I shall die before the time is up, judge," he midly remonstrated.

"Well, if you do you will not be punished for breaking your parole," the judge assured him.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell Dying

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—A London cable to-day says:

"Little hope is held out to-day for the recovery of Mrs. "Pat" Campbell, the actress, who is ill at her home in Kensington Square. She was stricken suddenly Sunday. Four specialists who were called in were unable to agree whether or not peritonitis was the affliction from which she was suffering. Because of this disagreement an immediate operation was deferred."

Two Suicides

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 20.—A number of fatalities are reported from different parts of the west to-day. At Lethbridge an Austrian sectionhand on the Canadian Pacific Railway, named Peter Patrick, took his life by hanging. At Arcola, Sask., Stuart Burrell, a young farmhand, whose home was in Winnipeg, drank gopher poison and his body was found in an oatfield. Martha Serenson, the two-year-old daughter of Martin Sorenson of Kenora, was drowned in the lake at that place. At Fleming, Sask., a young son of C. A. Johnson, was crushed to death under a farm wagon.

Broke World's Record

GLASGOW, Sept. 19.—J. Q. Hatfield, the English swimmer, who was one of the competitors in the last Olympic games, broke the world's swimming record tonight at 1,000 yeards. He covered the distance in 13 minutes 19 1-5 seconds. The previous record of 13 minutes 20 3-5 seconds, was made by C. M. Daniels, in 1907, at New York.

IMPROVED METHOD OF HANDLING EXPRESS.

The Canadian Express Company has recently adopted throughout its entire system of seven thousand miles of railway and steamship lines a carefully worked out plan, having for its object the prevention of double collection of charges at destination when shipments have alerady been prepaid; the prevention of overcharges and undercharges and the elimination of the ccurrence of packages going astray or being found over without mark, resulting in delay in delivery and inconvenience and loss to the public.

The foundation of this new plan for the correct receiving billing and handling of shipments is the fact that waybills and package labels of distinctive colors are used. For example all packages, the charges on which are to be prepaid, will bear a label printed on golden red paper. This serves as a warning to all employes that charges are not to be again collected. Where charges are to be collected at destination a white label is used; for C. O. D. shipments, green paper and for shipments in bond, pink paper labels. Waybills printed on paper of corresponding colors will also similarly distinguish the one class of business from the other. A waybill is made in triplicate for every consignment, one copy being handed to the train messenger in whose custody the package is forwarded, and one copy retained for office use. For mutual convenience special arrangements are made with large or regular shippers to supply them with labels to be attached to shipments in advance of the call of the driver.

Where a consignment consists of a number of packages a special "lot shipment" label is placed upon each package which gives reference to the entire consignment. This it is consignment from going astray, and will go a long way towards removing the difficulty which the public have heretofore experienced.

The Canadian Express Company relies upon the co-operation of its patrons in making this system effectual for their own benefit.

English Suffragette Coming to Canada

LONDON, Sept. 20.—Miss Barbara Wylie left to-day on the Empress of Ireland on a Suffragette mission to Canada. Miss Wylie was one of the deputation to interview Mr. Borden here three weeks ago. Her speedy departure for Canada is assumably a response to the Premier's careful and non-committal attitude on the question. Miss Wylie to-day refused to disclose the plans of her campaign, beyond announcing that she intended to seek a further interview with Mr. Borden, which she anticipated would be readily granted. She described as folly the report that she may be refused a landing. Her airy comment in a double sense was: "Even if we are refused a landing, we still have aeroplanes."

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

LAURIER AT COCHRANE.

Reception Was Good But Not Remarkably Enthusiastic.

Cochrane, Sept. 21.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his party filled the last engagement of their Northern Ontario tour here yesterday. The reception tendered to them in the morning was hardly sufficiently demonstrative enough to satisfy the local committee, in fact the evidences of party affection by the electorate in Northern Ontario during the past four days cannot be considered as substantiation for the claims of party leaders that they have made an appreciable quantity of political capital.

Sir Wilfrid said that he was proud of his policy, especially on account of the fact that he was in Cochrane, because the building in which the meeting was being held was the partial realization of his earlier dreams.

He dwelt upon the evolution of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which had a great future, not only as a commercial project, but as a national enterprise. He referred to the charges that the road was to be degraded, and said that his ambition was that the railway should be superior to any one on the American continent. He depreciated the idea of making the line between Cochrane and Quebec a sort of elongated camel's back.

"I do not charge the Government at the present time," continued Sir Wilfrid, "but this is a thing which if contemplated should not be allowed to go on. We must not allow this railroad to be degraded. If it will be the intention of this Government to destroy the character of this road I call upon you men of the north to protect the national road against such action, and to insist that the railway shall be completed as it was conceived by the late Government."

"Fear not for the future," he said. "No! Canada will come into her own. My faith is in our country and in our Canadian people. Right will win. Twenty-five years hence there will be no east and no west, no distrust and difference. There will be continuous, united Canadian sentiment from the valley of the St. Lawrence to the valley of the Red River. Let us hasten the day when the heart of the whole Canadian people will beat as one and all our national dangers disappear."

Addresses were also delivered by Hon. Messrs. Graham, Murphy, Lemieux and King.

Insisted on Flight.

Chicago, Sept. 21.—"Officials in charge of the aviation meet are all millionaires and none of them know the first thing about aviation. They violated every rule to safeguard the lives of the aviators."

William Pickens, manager of Aviator Horace Kearney, so testified at the inquest yesterday of Howard W. Gill of Baltimore, Md., who was killed at the aviation meet at Ciero last Saturday when his biplane collided in the air with a monoplane driven by Geo. Mestach, a French aviator.

"Gill told me before he went into the air on the day of his death that he was displeased with the way the meet was being conducted," said Pickens. "I don't like this idea of flying at twilight," Gill told me. "Gill was nervous before he started. He only went up after the officials insisted the meet would be a failure if the crowd were disappointed. Mestach is not to blame for the accident. In fact, I do not believe either aviator was."

Fatal Riot at Election.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—A tale of a terrific struggle in a polling booth, terminating in the death of one man and the burning of ballots, is set forth in brief form in that usually staid document, "the return of the twelfth general election to the House of Commons."

The tragedy occurred in one of the far north polls of Edmonton, the constituency of Hon. Frank Oliver, and is told of in the official records as follows:

"Poll No. 169, Leaman. Poll was held and 79 ballots cast for Hon. Frank Oliver, but owing to a riot and death of one man in the polling booth, and the alleged burning of ballots, as substantiated by the affidavit of the deputy returning officer, Frank Van Canneyt, the returning officer did not count the said 79 ballots in his recapitulation."

Wilson Opens Campaign.

Columbus, O., Sept. 21.—Twelve hours did Governor Woodrow Wilson spend in Columbus yesterday, but in these were crowded the formal opening of the Democratic campaign in Ohio, a luncheon with Governor Harmon, Representatives James M. Cox, the Democratic candidate for governor, and state leaders and a series of speeches and receptions.

It was a strenuous wind-up to the Presidential nominee's first week of consecutive campaigning. As he started back to Sea Girt, N.J. last night, he said he was more than satisfied and pleased both with the thrill of campaigning and the enthusiastic greetings he had received.

Stolen Money Found.

Chicago Sept. 21.—Part of the $272,000 loot robbers long ago got from the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B.C., has been recovered by Chicago police.

How much money was found the police refused to say, but it is intimated the amount would run into the thousands. It was said the money was in Canadian bills of large denomination.

Decisions Delayed.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—The Chicago drainage canal case, wherein the levels of the lakes and St. Lawrence River are seriously involved, has not been decided by U. S. Secretary of War Stimson, and it is not expected here that it will be determined until after the November elections.

Where Is Annie McAuley?

Montreal, Sept. 21.—The authorities are anxious to find a Miss Annie McAuley of Toronto because it is thought, from a letter he had, that she can give information about a man named Jack Munro, killed on the docks by a locomotive on Wednesday.

COVENANT IS POPULAR

Ulster Enthusiastic Over Sir Edward Carson's Manifesto.

Former Solicitor-General Continues His Campaign Against Home Rule Addressing Several Meetings and Concluding With a Big Gathering at Londonderry — Special Prayers for Ireland In the Churches.

Londonderry, Ireland, Sept. 21.—Sir Edward Carson, former Solicitor-General for Ireland, yesterday continued his campaign in Ulster County against home rule for Ireland. He was the recipient of a remarkable ovation when he arrived here from Belfast, in which city and vicinity he addressed several meetings yesterday. Cheering crowds lined his route from the railway station to the Guild Hall, a distance of two miles, while others formed in procession and escorted him to his destination. The streets were gaily decorated for the occasion.

The enthusiasm culminated last night in a big demonstration at the Guild Hall, at which the Duke of Abercorn presided. Sir Edward in the course of his speech said the covenant which all the Ulster Unionists would sign on Sept. 28, pledging themselves to stand together "in defending our cherished position of equal citizenship in the United Kingdom and in using all means which may be necessary to defeat the present conspiracy to set up home rule in Ireland," had disappointed the Radicals because of its moderation. It was a solemn document, the speaker added, no fireworks having been permitted to creep into it.

Frederick Edward Smith, Conservative member of Parliament for the Walton division of Liverpool, also addressed the meeting, assuring the Irish Unionists that they had England at their backs in their fight against home rule.

Carson to Sign First.

New York, Sept. 21.—A London cable to The Tribune says:

The terms of the solemn covenant of Irish Unionist against home rule caused great enthusiasm throughout Ulster.

The Liberal papers of London are naturally trying to pour ridicule upon this latest development of the Unionist campaign, but the covenant will certainly be hailed by all Protestant Unionists with enthusiastic approval. The document will be signed on Ulster Day after most impressive religious services in the various Protestant places of worship.

Sir Edward Carson, Solicitor-General in the last Conservative Ministry, who has been the leading spirit in drawing up the covenant, and who is probably responsible for most of its phraseology, will be the first to sign in Belfast at the City Hall, and after him will come other Irish Unionist members of Parliament, and the members of the Belfast Corporation and other civic dignitaries.

Special Prayers In Ireland.

Armagh, Ireland, Sept. 21.—Most Rev. John Baptist Crozier, Primate of All Ireland of the Church of England, has designated next Sunday and the days following it, including Saturday, Ulster Day, as "days for special intercession and prayer on behalf of our beloved native land." During the week the following special collect will be read:

"Deliver us, we pray Three, from these great imminent dangers that threaten the welfare of our church and country. Grant that all that is said or done this week may tend to the glory of Thy great name and the welfare of the church and people, so that truth, justice, religion and piety may be established among us for all generations."

West Contributes to Ulster.

Winnipeg, Sept. 21.—Samuel Larkin, grand auditor and deputy grandmaster of the Loyal Orange Association in Winnipeg, states that funds are being sent from here for the protection of Ulster.

No Orders for Deportation.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—It was stated at the Immigration Department yesterday that no instructions had been issued to prevent the landing of Miss Wylie, the English suffragette, who is coming to Canada.

"I will not say what I am going to do in Miss Wylie's case," said Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of the Interior. "She must be, however, quite a girl."

The Ottawa Suffrage Association will hold a special meeting to decide what attitude to adopt when Miss Wylie arrives.

British Potatoes Banned.

Washington, Sept. 21.—The U. S. Department of Agriculture issued a quarantine against "Common or Irish" potatoes from Newfoundland, the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Germany, and Austria-Hungary. The order is effective immediately.

TO MEET CZAR'S ENVOY

Sir Edward Grey Will Confer With M. Sazonoff.

Russian Ambassador Will Be Received by King George at Balmoral and Momentous Discussions Regarding Tibet, Persia and the Balkans Will Take Place—Fanatic Causes a Disturbance at the Station.

New York, Sept. 21.—A cable to The Tribune from London yesterday says:

Balmoral, King George's Scottish residence, may become the scene of deliberation of a weighty character when His Majesty receives there M. Sazonoff, the Russian Foreign Minister, and the Russian ambassador, Count Benchendorff, to-day. Both of these diplomats left for Balmoral last night, following Sir Edward Grey, who has already left for the north to take up his duties as Minister in attendance upon the King during the coming week.

The chief object of the discussions between M. Sazonoff and Sir Edward Grey is the attainment of some satisfactory and equitable solution of the grave problems with which Persia stands confronted.

The Anglo-Russian agreement in 1907 has been found, as a result of changing conditions, not to have worked altogether satisfactorily, and it is hoped that the conferences of the coming week will so revise it as to make the task of mutual co-operation, particularly in Persia, the Balkans, Tibet and Mongolia, easier.

The Tibetan question is a simple one. Since China has attempted to convert Tibet into a Chinese province it is said that Great Britain will ask Russia to agree to the sending of the British consul at Lhassa to deal directly with the Tibetan Government, in order to ensure the continued existence of that Government.

When M. Sazonoff stepped from the train at the Victoria station a man rushed toward him, shouting "Down with Russia!" At the same time he displayed a poster on which was printed, "Russia must evacuate Persia if she wishes to retain England's friendship." The man was seized by the police, but subsequently was released. He said he was a member of the Anglo-Persian committee.

At Arcola, Sask., Stuart Burell, a young farm hand, whose home was in Winnipeg, drank gopher poison.

At Fleming, Sask., a young son of C. A. Johnson, was crushed to death under a wagon.

BOARD OF EDUCATION IN REGULAR SESSION LAST NIGHT

Full Board Present and Much Business Transacted—Provincial Minister of Education to be Invited to Open Pine and Ann Street Schools—Thirty Pupils in Each Class Recommended—Penny-Saving Scheme May be Inaugurated—Other Business of the Session.

At a regular meeting of the Board of Education held last evning, several matters appertaining to the welfare of the schools were brought up, and either disposed of or referred to a committee to act upon. Hon. Dr. Pyne, Provincial Minister of Education, will be in the city to formally open Pine and Ann Street schools. The Board decided not to sell the unused school premises at present. The penny saving scheme will be inaugurated in Ann Street School and a boys' cadet corps will also be formed at that school.

The members present were: Messrs. C. M. Reid, Chairman; J. H. Anderson, E. J. Butler, F. S. Deacon, S. T. Harris, P. Harrison, B. Mallory, F. E. O'Flynn, L. C. Pascoe, W. N. Ponton, W. C. Reid, J. F. Wills, A. E. Bailey.

After the reading and confirming of the mintes of the last meeting some communications were read.

Principal MacLaurin of the High School, wrote that in order to meet with the approval o fthe Department of Education it would be necessary to have nine classes. There are at present 211 pupils and the department recommended that no more than 30 pupils be in one class.

This matter was referred to the School Management Committee.

Principal Mott of Ann Street School, wrote asking that the penny savings scheme be inaugurated in that school and he would attend to same. Also that the boys desired to organize a cadet corps.

Miss McKay wrote, asking that a lavatory, or at least a wash basin be provided at Ann Street school for the children in the primary division.

A report was presented showing that two offers of $2,500 each had been received for the unused Pinnacle Street school and one offer of $200 for t'e Station Road school. The report recommended that the properties be not sold at that figure.

The Board went into Committee of the Whole on reports, etc., Mr. F. S. Deacon in the chair.

SALE OF PROPERTY.

Mr. O'Flynn was of the opinion that the Board should not sell the school properties at the present time as property was advancing rapidly in this city.

Mr. Wills thought that price tendered for the Station School property was altogether too low. He considered it worth $1100.

Mr. O'Flynn moved, seconded by Mr. Anderson, that the properties be withdrawn for sale for the time being.

Col. Ponton spoke in support of the Pinnacle Street school grounds being utilized as a school flower ground.

The motion of Mr. O'Flynn prevailed.

The School Management Committee reported that Mr. B. Serviss had been appointed caretaker of the High School at a salary of $500 per annum, Jos. Mills, caretaker of Pine Street school at $650 per annum, and Mr. Facy caretaker of Pine Street school at $600 per annum.

The report was adopted.

The communication of Principal Mott re savings bank and cadet corps was considered.

A motion was adopted that the penny savings bank system be established in Ann Street school and also that permission be given to form a cadet corps.

The question of providing a lavatory and wash basin for the primary division of Ann Street school was referred to the Sites, Building and Repairs Committee to look into and report to the Board.

Principal MacLaurin of the High School wrote the Board that dumb bells, Indian clubs and wands for the physical culture class of girls at the High School were required. A piano for the High School was also asked.

Col. Ponton spoke of his recent visit to London, England, and seeing physical culture exemplified without the aid of dumb bells or clubs.

A motion prevailed that this matter be referred to the Printing and Supplies Committee.

The Committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

Mr. O'Flynn moved, seconded by Mr. Bailey, that the Principal of Ann Street school report to the Truant Officer that if there are children within the jurisdiction of that school divison who are not attending school the parents be required to send them.—Carried.

OPENING NEW SCHOOLS.

Mr. Wills said the new schools would be formally opened and he had conferred with the Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, who had signified the pleasure it would give him to be present at a formal opening of the schools. He moved that a formal opening of the schools be held about November 1st and Hon. Dr. Pyne be formally invited to open the schools and fix a date that will be convenient to him.—Carried.

The naming of the two schools was referred to.

Col. Ponton suggested that Mr. F. S. Deacon be added to the committee appointed to select appropriate names for the schools. The speaker referred to the fact that there were two Bellevillians who had been honored by the King in being knighted, namely, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Sir Gilbert Parker, and these names might be considered.

Mr. Deacon was added to the committee and the Chairman of the Board was asked to be convener of the committee.

Mr. Reid, Chairman of the Board, stated that it was anticipated that Pine Street school would be opened a week from next Monday.

Board adjourned.

Burglar Receives Stiff Sentence

Frank Smith who claims his home is at El Paso, Texas, will involuntarily be a resident of Canada for some time. This morning Police Magistrate Masson sentenced him to serve a term of five years at the Kingston penitentiary. At an early hour on Saturday morning last Smith was caught red handed whilst attempting to affect an entrance into Mr. James Goodsell's place of business in this city. When the charge was read over to him Smith pleaded not guilty but the evidence against him was conclusive and he was convicted and sentenced. He made a request to be deported from this country to the United States, but it was considered safer to lock him up for a period. Smith claims that for the past two years he had been travelling with a circus and came into Canada recently. He is a young man but 22 years of age, and apparently a crook.

GLEANED FROM OUR EXCHANGES

Lovers of baseball will see an interesting game between Belleville and Picton at the Fair Grounds, Thrusday, Sept. 26th.

The citizens of Picton held a meeting in the opera house of that town Thursday evening for the purpose of taking up the question of securing a suitable lot on which to build an Armoury, for which purpose the money has been appropriated.

The Gazette is jubilant over the capture of the next annual session of the True Blues, which will be held in Picton, Ont. This choice was made on account of it being the site of the True Blues Orphanage, and it is planned to combine the annual picnic held in the interests of this institution with the next meeting of the delegates. Though the exact date has not yet been decided upon it will likely be during the first week in August.

The editor of this paper is not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but just put this in your hat: Deseronto will be a Canadian Northern divisional point. This is not a case of the wish being father to the thought. We got a little bit of information recently that strengthens our belief in the assertion made above.—Deseronto Post.

Wipe the dust from your eyes, Brother Lyons, Belleville has the prior lien on that privilege.

A child belonging to Mr. David Morden of Hillier, near Allisonville, met with a trying experience the other day. The youngster climbed up on a seed drill, the box of which was open and crawled in, the cover falling down and holding the child fast. with no room to turn. Its cries for help were not heard. At last a woman passing by heard the noise, and after an investigation found the source thereof. The child when taken out of the box was wet with perspiration, and after being taken to its home had to be worked with for some time before it was revived.—Picton Gazette.

We do not know just how much of a flock the Gazette man possesses, but it is evident the very mention of a baby sends him into a rabble. Just listen to him: "Everybody is interested in babies, that's why the baby show promises to be the event of the first night of the Picton Fair. Those who haven't any babies will go there and envy; those who have will go to be envied, and would not trade their darlings for a king's ransom. And when it comes to babies, Picton can hold her own with any town in Canada. Yes! Oh, yes! Everybody will be at the baby show. The babies, sure, and their fathers and their mothers and their sisters and their brothers, and their uncles and their aunts."

The Trenton Advocate remarks:—Leading railroad men have been telling a former Trentonian, now making good professionally in our Eastern town, some fine things about Trenton's future. One thing they told him was that Trenton would be a city of 20,000 within five years. What wise chaps these railway men are to be sure? Our pessimists will receive quite a few bumps within a year or two.

This must be an instance where optimism has been stretched to a breaking point. However, these railroad men are used to "going some."

The Daily British Whig writes:—"A Kansas man nominated for office has declined because his opponent is a woman. He holds that it would be unchivalrous in him to contest for office with a woman. If this obligation of gallantry should obtain in suffrage states what a condition we should be in. The women would have all the government."

Kansas, if we remember correctly, was the state made famous by Carrie A. Nation, whose activities (with her little hatchet) gave the liquor traffic in this state quite a jolt. Now, under the circumstances, this political aspirant must have had his physical welfare at heart, and more so possibly than the inclination to be chivalrous to "the gentle sex."

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Author of "The Romance of War," "Under the Red Dragon," "Fairer than A Fairy," etc.

With his Highland pistols tied to his neck, the gallant Seton and a few others struck out for the shore, only to become entangled among the slimy weeds and trailers that rose up a hundred feet in length from the bottom of that tropical sea, and to perish there miserably, a prey to the innumerable sharks.

'The story of their bravery and generosity," said Bonteine "would fire even the heart of a Quaker; and that is saying a great deal."

Then they detailed to me the storming of Macomo's stronghold the six attacks on the Water Kloof, and all the operations of the army, down to the present march it was performing to attack the great Basuto chief, whose defeat would—as it ultimately did—put an end to the Kaffir war.

"This long story of yours," said young Calder, "is like one of old Somerset's despatches, as dreary as the overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser"—about the most excruciating piece of music that ever was concocted by meandering musician."

"Not at all. I am as jolly as a sandboy—as Sandilli himself," replied the ensign, caressing what he supposed to be a buff-coloured moustache.

"Fanny—Mrs. Douglas—I mean—never saw Carysfort, I suppose, after his being wounded at the Dutch village?" said I longing to hear more of those in whom I felt a deeper interest than for the details of a barbarous war.

"Never," replied Bonteine; "and perhaps it was just as well."

"Why"?

"I don't think she could have cared much for Carysfort."

"How do you thinks so?" I asked abruptly.

"I happened to be close by when Douglas dried the pretty widow's tears," said Bonteine, lowering his voice. "'And after all that has passed, you love me still, Gerard?' she said demurely, casting down her long eyelashes. 'Passionately,' responded our Captain of Highlander. 'I feel very grateful and happy, dearest,' said she, 'with the conviction of being loved by one so good, so gentle and so kind.' I was Douglas's groomsman soon afterwards, and—What the deuce is the by sniggering at?"

"At your love story, Bonteine—that is all," replied the unabashed Ensign Calder; "so don't quote the Mutiny Act about laughing at one's superior officer. I knew that the fair Fanny was a bride the moment I saw her."

'How? What should you know about it? You were on detachment at Fort Armstrong."

"Her marriage ring looked so new, and fitted the tiny third finger so tightly."

"It is a fine thing to talk rakishly, and it costs nothing but respectability," said the doctor gravely. "But pass that bottle, young fellow, and look sharp, please."

"And how about your wife's wedding ring, my lad?" asked Campbell, who had taken no part in this camp chaff.

"Wife! Don't think I shall ever have one, or go beyond an affaire du coeur with a handsome young flirt, married to a rich old party, having a good wine cellar, and no tattling incumbrances in the shape of children to tell who kissed mamma's hand in the shrubbery. All such observant brats should be strangled."

"But a kiss of the hand is not a very deadly affair," said Bonteine, laughing.

"Don't encourage the boy to talk in this loose fashion," said the doctor angrily. "I am older than you, Calder—"

'More than twice my age, I should think."

"Yes,— and age learns more than youth."

"Youth learns to love," lisped the ensign.

"Yes, and old age learns to lose as well as to love," retorted Forbes, and his words, and still more his tone, told of some secret story, too sacred for the present company.

"Was the health of Miss Haywood impaired by what she had undergone?" I enquired, with an air of casual indifference, while lying on the green sward which formed the floor of the tent, imbibing with intense satisfaction the fragance of a fine havanna.

"No. She looked a little pale, and perhaps careworn; but such might be expected."

"I'll sweair that she blushed red enough when that fellow Graves kissed her," said the incorrigible ensign.

"How?—where?" asked Bonteine.

"How?—as people usually do; and where?—on the cheek."

"When, Mr. Calder?" I asked.

"On the day the Fingoes brought them into camp; but we were all inclined to do the same thing, so overjoyed were we to see them alive and safe."

"On the cheek?" I repeated with a sterness that I could not conceal.

"Yes. It seems to have made an impression upon you," continued the saucy Calder.

"How that brat's tongue runs on," growled Dr. Forbes.

"And Graves went with them to Jamaica?" I resumed.

"Yes," replied Bonteine, who went blundering on in a fashion quite as bad as Calder, talking barrack-room rubbish, perhaps, but such rubbish as proved very annoying to me—maddening, in fact. "Graves went with them—with her, I should say."

'Why?"

"Because, if they are not engaged they should be. We heard that you had been spoony on her, but so were others—some of the 12th Lancers, and one of the Rifles especially. Graves, however, was seldom away from her side after that hideous skeleton was found in the wood by Sergeant Burns of ours. He thought all was square then. I should know how engaged people look—have been engaged myself about ten times, but never was hooked yet, and I don't mean to be till I get my spurs by brevet of the murrain among the majors. How mighty and mysterious are the secrets of your engaged stupidities—how nicely they ope pedal communications with one another, and squeeze hands behind curtains or under the tablecloth! I know all about that style of thing, and have done it scores of times, though engaged only ten times, as I have said."

I laughed incredulously, taking these speeches at their current value, but the Scotch doctor said, with one of his most saturnine grins:

iniquity. He has got a diamond ring and gold watch and appendages which to my certain knowledge at least ten girls have worn in succession."

"Every one of whom was spoony on yours truly, Jack Bonteine, till the route or letters of readiness came."

"Or till you got some one of ours who was on leave to telegraph, as your father or uncle, that you were about to be cut off with a shilling. Then the watch and ring were returned; but they are as well known in most garrison towns as the goat of the Welsh Fusiliers."

"It is profanity in you, Forbes to mention such tender mysterious. Yes," resumed the laughing Bonteine, "Graves went with la belle Clarice, and notwithstanding the Dutch—what was the fellow's name?"

"Van Neukerque," said I huskily.

"Yes; being present, he will improve the golden opportunities—and we all know that they are manifold—afforded by a long voyage at sea. Pass the Cape smoke, Haddon, You don't drink, old fellow."

'Thanks," said I, and swallowed a bumper to hide or to drown my chagrin.

"Fill again, Haddon," said Bonteine; "you look as if you lacked the Circean cup that cheers but not inebriates."

"Nay, but it does," said I, "if you read the classics aright."

"Bother the classics. Don't talk of them; it makes me think of my old cramming and grinding days at Sandhurst," said Calder.

Poor rattlepated boy! He perished next day of a sunstroke when on the march, and was buried nuder a pine tree in the wide and desert karoo over which I had so lately fled.

Undeterred by the troubles which had beset me, my first intention had been to accompany my old friends, the 74th, in the new campaign against Moshesh, the Basuto, to give one more clasp to the war medal which I knew to be my due, and to write by the first mail to Douglas and Clarice, at Jamaica; but the information I had received, in the bantering manner just related, made a complete alteration in my plans; and so, when next morning, the tents were struck at daybreak, and the army resumed its march, I bade adieu to my whilom comrades, and taking advantage of the companionship and escort of some twenty men of the various corps, who under an officer, were going back to the town of Burgherdorp, being found unfit for field service; and with something of a sorrowful heart, I heard the wail of the pipe and the tap of the drum die away by the banks of the Great Orange River, as we turned on our homeward march over the almost pathless Karoo.

CHAPTER XLI.

People rarely, if ever, fall in love with those they have known long.

I had been known to Clarice Haywood for years—since her girlhood almost. We had loved each other, and had been separated by misfortune but to meet again under sudden and extraordinary circumstances. Now, once more we were parted, to her apparently for ever, by my supposed death, for so sure were all of that event, that Douglas's company of the 74th had fired three volleys over the remains of Hans Bruins Kasteel as mine.

Chicago Police Recover Bank of Montreal Money

Part of the $272,000 loot robbers got from the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B.C., has been recovered by the Chicago police, according to an admission by Assistant Chief of Police Scheuttler to-day.

How much of the money was found he refused to say, but he intimated that the amount would run into the thousands. It was said that the money was in Canadian bills of large denominations.

We are not ready to say anything, except that some of the money was found, said Scheuttler. The robbers are still at large, but we have not given up hope of arresting them in Chicago. We still believe they are hiding here.

It is believed that the loot of the Canadian bank robbery was hidden by the two men who escaped after they had beaten a Police Lieutenant into unconsciousness, when he attempted to arrest them single-handed.

Mrs. Harriman As a Witness

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 23.—Mrs. Edward Harriman, widow of the late railroad magnate, will be subpoened to appear before the Committee engaged in investigating campaign contributions and expenditures in the Presidential campaigns of 1904 and 1908. Miss Lizzie Bliss, daughter of Cornelius Bliss, will also be summoned.

Daniel N. Ransdell, Sergeant-at-arms of the Senate, is now in New York to serve the subpoenas. It is presumed that Mrs. Harriman and Miss Bliss will be requested to produce papers, including the letter file containing the private correspondence of Mr. Harriman and Mr. Bliss.

Wife Suffragette Jailed for Debt

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Mark Wilks, a schoolmaster of Clapton, has leaped into fame. Mrs. Wilks is an ardent suffragette and refuses to pay her income tax to the government which imprisons militant workers in woman's cause. Consequently Mark Wilks has to go to prison for her. For even if he were willing to pay, he has not enough money of his own to do so.

Mrs. Charles Stansfield, a sister of Mrs. Wilks, has given a clear exposition of the case:

"Mr. Wilks is in prison," she said, "because he has not got 37 pounds ($185) to pay the tax on property he does not own and cannot control. That is really the whole case.

Suffragettes are making a campaign on behalf of Mr. Wilks. A demonstration in Trafalgar Square, processions and meetings outside the jail, and an address by G. Bernard Shaw are the the programme.

Girl's Bones Found in Cave

A Canadian Northern construction gang recently discovered human bones in a cave near Perth Road Village. Dr. Stewart, the railway camp surgeon declared that the bones were those of a fifteen-year-old female. Old timers recall that about half a century ago a child disappeared from the district and was never heard of again. It is thought that the discovery of the bones solves the mystery of her disappearance. Beside the bones were found eight small silver buckles such as were worn years ago.

It is thought the child crawled into the cave either out of curiosity or to secure protection from the elements or from the wolves that abounded in that district at the time and was overwhelmed in a land slide.

Six Men Slumber In Blazing House

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont Sept. 22.—Six men were rescued from a burning building at the foot of Bridge street early yesterday morning, by Richard Carney, a porter at the Roslie Hotel, and John McCarty, a switchman employed on the local trolley line.

The fire broke out during a thunderstorm and is supposed to have been caused by a flash of lightning. The building occupied as a restaurant, and an office of the International Railway Company, was burning rapidly when the fire was discovered by McCarty. He sounded the alarm, and Carney rushed to his assistance in arousing the inmates, six men, employees of the Railway company, who were asleep in the upper rooms.

Two doors were smashed in by the men and then they went pounding on the doors of the rooms, arousing the inmates, who escaped through the smoke and flame filled halls, to the street in scant attire.

RUMORED PETITION CIRCULATED IN CITY

Report Current that An Appeal Will be Made to City Council to Deprive Farmers of Retail Marketing Privileges and Sell Only at Wholesale to Grocers--Complications which May Result.

A rumor is current that a petition is now being circulated preparatory to an appeal to the City Council, for a bylaw preventing farmers from selling at retail, fruit, garden truck, butter and general produce on the market, and compelling them to sell at wholesale to the local grocers, who alone, shall have the privilege of selling at retail. Whether such a bylaw would stand law, in that it is a movement with a view to restrain trade, is problematical, and that the intent of the petition is to form a trust favorable to the grocers, who would hold the producer at their mercy, buying at their own prices, charging the consumers what they willed, is a question yet to be threshed out. The rumor proving true, it is up to our farmers to inaugurate a strenuous battle for the protection of their rights. It is also for the citizens of Belleville to say whether they wish to run the risk of paying increased prices for their supplies. Let us hope the rumor is groundless. In any event, we believe our City Council will deal with the movement intelligently.

Tax Man Who Holds His Land

EDMONTON, Sept. 20.—(Special)—Instead of the Act passed at the last session of the Alberta Legislature in which assessment on land was made the sole basis of municipal revenue, with a rebate of twenty-five per cent. to farmers who improve their holdings, it is now proposed to ask the Legislature to increase the rebate to fifty per cent. so that he man who owns a quarter section all under cultivation will only have to pay in taxes exactly half what owners of adjoining unimproved farm pays.

Will Remodel The Olympic

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 21.—The White Star Line has cancelled future sailings of the steamer Olympic, says the correspondent of the Chronicle at Southampton. He adds that on the return of the Olympic from New York early in October she will be sent to Belfast, where she will be fitted with an inner skin and additional bulkheads. This work, it is said, will occupy six months.

General Diaz Will Not Talk

BIARRITZ, Sept. 22.—The Star correspondent asked General Porfirio Diaz, who is stopping here, what he thought of the demonstration for his return at Mexico City on the anniversary of independence, and whether he intended to go back to that country.

General Diaz thanked the correspondent for offering to cable his views, but added:

'I am unable to break my rule of not speaking on politics."

Has Ruined Trade of Charlatans

LONDON, Sept. 22.—The recent action of the police in forbidding West End and and suburban fortune tellers, crystal gazers and all charlatans of that sort from advertising in any way on their own walls, doors or windows, or by sandwich men or in newspapers or magazines all publishers being warned that they will be proceeded against if they publish advertisements, has had immediate and ruinous effect upon a rapidly-increasing class of swindlers.

Col. Sam Hughes Dines with King

LONDON, Sept. 22.—At the close of the military manoeuvres, which terminated on Friday, Colonel Sam Hughes and the Canadian officers present were presented to the King by the Minister for War, Colonel Seeley.

Colonel Hughes and some of his officers propose to sail on Wednesday week, and in the meantime the Canadian Minister hopes to bring about a scheme for the interchanging of officers during camp and of visits between the home and Dominion regular and territorial forces.

Taxi Crashed Into Church

GUELPH, Sept. 20.—J. H. Johnston garage proprietor, was driving a taxicab late Wednesday evening on Paisley street when he lost control and the auto smashed into the old Methodist church the car upsetting. Johnston was pinned down by the auto. Being taken to the hospital it was found that one if his legs was broken in two places. The occupants of the machine, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Chart, were hurled out, but were fortunate to escape with with a few bruises. The machine was badly damaged.

Boy Killed in Runaway

LINDSAY, Sept. 23—Angus Brown, the young son of Mr. Brown, manager of the Kinmount Cooperage Company, at Kinmount, was killed in a runaway. The lad was playing around the freight sheds where a farmer was accepting a small shipment of brick and the little fellow climbed into the waggon to place them in position. The horse became frightened and ran down the street turning the corner near the post office upsetting the waggon and throwing the boy to the pavement where he lay unconscious.

He died within an hour after being taken home.

Glen Curtis Has Sold Aeroplane

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Glen Curtis is negotiating with Vickers, Sons and Maxim for the sale of rights to the patents of his company for manufacture of hydro-aeroplanes.

He said to-day that he has had a successful trip in Europe. In France he sold his rights to Haultain, the manufacturer. In Germany he sold two hydro-aeroplanes to the Deutsch-Fluggesellschaft. He also sold ten of his machines in Russia.

Mr. Curtis will sail for the United States immediately after the conclusion of his negotiations with the Vickers people.

Turkey and Bulgaria On Verge of War

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The relations between Turkey and Bulgaria have suddenly become critical, and twenty wagon loads of war material transshipped to Saloniki for the Servian Government, according to a despatch from that city to The Times, have been stopped by the Turkish authorities.

A Sofia despatch to The Times says that the decision to suspend or curtail the Bulgarian manœuvres Saturday was very sudden.

Further trouble is reported in Samos, a Greek island on the west coast of Asia Minor. Profiting by the departure of a French and British warship the Samian leader, Sofulius, secretly landed a body of men from the Island of Nicaria, which recently proclaimed its independence. The Porte has despatched 800 troops from Samos to Smyrna, and it is reported that a battle is imminent. The British and French warships have been instructed to return to Samos.

Roosevelt Picks Wilson to Win The Presidency

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Theodore Roosevelt has not much hope of winning the presidential fight, judging by the tone of letters received by personal friends here.

He wrote to one correspondent, recalling Kermit's remark to the effect that "Daddy was praying for Champ." Had Champ Clark received the nomination he thought he might have had a good chance, but with a man like Governor Wilson holding the Democratic vote he had no hope of obtaining a majority of the election. Anyhow, he was making a good fight and doing better than his enemies had expected, and that was a very satisfactory thing.

President Taft was hardly mentioned and apparently did not enter into Mr. Roosevelt't calculations. Governor Wilson, according to my informant, is Mr. Roosevelt's private tip for the presidency.

Rough Handling For Suffragettes

CARDIFF, Wales, Sept. 22—As usual, suffragettes repeatedly interrupted the speech Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George made yesterday at the opening of the Institute at Llanystumdy, the Welsh village where he spent his boyhood.

After roughly handling them, the crowd pushed the disturbers into a neighboring field.

Reinforced by local sympathizers the suffragettes then attacked and partly demolished Lord Hamilton's automobile. The infuriated crowd then made a rush at them, knocking several down and trampling them. Others escaped violence by taking refuge in cottages. The police were helples.

One suffragette was thrown over a hedge and the clothes were torn from the backs of others. [illegible] the suffragettes refrained from interruption.

The Chancellor said that the instituion was not due to his benevolence, but to the depth of his enemies' hatred. He had spent on the institution $30,000 which had been given to him as damages in libel suits.

Ottawa Wants Head Office of C.M.A.

OTTAWA, Sept. 22.—The fifty members of the Ottawa Valley branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, at a meeting held Saturday night, decided unanimously to support the resolution which will be offered at the coming convention recommending the transfer of the head office of the association to Ottawa. Ottawa will likely be supported by Montreal and the Western branches, but it is stated that Toronto and Hamilton will strongly oppose the proposed change. A number of western men here for the convention state that Ottawa is the logical location for the office, and say they would rather come to Ottawa for meetings, as they usually have more business to attend to here than in any other eastern city. That there will be a merry fight over the resolution seems certain.

About 600 members are expected for the convention, which opens Tuesday morning. There are over 3,000 members of the association, and many of the delegates will send proxies to vote on this important question.

Would-be Regicide Insane

ROME, Sept. 22.—The Anarchist D'Alba, who made an attempt on the life of King Victor Emmanuel last March, is to be tried shortly. He refused to select counsel for himself, and the district attorney appointed Enrico Ferri, a disciple of Professor Lombroso, the famous criminologist, a professor of anthropology, to defend him. His acquittal on the ground of insanity is thus assured. The choice of counsel shows that the judicial authorities are convinced that D'Alba is insane.

Irish Nationalist Hurt

BELFAST, Sept. 22.—Joseph Devlin, the Irish Nationalist member of Parliament for the West Division of Belfast, received serious injuries today by jumping from an automobile whose axle had snapped while going down a steep hill, near Carrick, in Donegal.

Neglect the Real Cause of Blindness

Many of the screens to be on exhibition at the Child Welfare Exhibition strenuously combat the idea that hibition of the Child Welfare Exhibi- come to people in spite of themselves, and in spite of anything that they can do for themselves. They state that much of the blindness existent to-day could have been averted if at the proper time certain simple remedies had been applied.

For instance, it is stated that the cause of one-third of the blindness in Montreal has been caused by the symptom of which is running eyes in newborn babies. If two minutes of time had been given to each of there blind ones at birth, they would have been saved seventy years of darkness. Two cents would have been enough to pay the cost of all that was necessary to do at that time for protection, and it would have saved the city $10,000 in each case for support. This lesson is further enforced by a screen upon which is tied a bottle of silver nitrate with an eye-dropper, and the information in large type, that a few drops of silver nitrate in each eye of a newborn babe would destroy the germs of disease and would not harm healthy eyes.

So strong are the city eye specialists who are taking charge of this department, on the necessity of this precaution, that it will be agitated both by means of screens and talks given at the exhibition, that laws should be passed to make it obligatory upon physicians and midwives to report all cases of red and swollen eyes in the newborn to the local boards of health within twelve hours after discovery, and to require the local health officers to see that all cases of ophthalmia receive intant treatment.

Then a very dirty towel taken from some public place in Montreal, where it is placed for the convenience of the public will be displayed upon another screen with the word under it, "The common carrier of eye disease." These towels are used in offices, factories, hotels, stores, schools and railway lavatories, and they are among the chief agents in spreading diseases from eye to eye. The further warning will be given that any discharge from the eyes should be investigated as it may save years of blindness or seriously weakened sight.

Another screen displays a very deadly array of weapons like forks, pencils, hatpins, knives, pens, hairpins, pins scissors, needles, sharpened sticks, butocnhooks, stones, matches, tin swords beanshooters, and the like. Underneath the question is asked, "Why let children play with such dangerous toys?"

Says Price of Coal Should be $3.25

Mayor Blankenbury and Director Cooke of Philadelphia have received from the experts on the anthracite coal freight rate case the preliminary plan which they will use in the case against the coal-carrying roads, to reduce the present rates and so ameliorate the high cost of living by an attempt to bring this necessity down to the price at which it is declared it should be sold. These papers show that coal, which now sells for $7 a ton, should not retail at more than $3.25 a ton, and the smaller sized coal at $3.05 a ton.

FREIGHT EXPERT AT WORK

The plan was prepared by professor W. Ward Pierson of the University of Pennsylvania, who asserts in this case he has the endorsement of Harry E. Bellis, the well-known freight rate expert, and it shows that the constitation of the state contains a provision which is most rigid in stipulating against and form of preference or discrimination by the railroads and against the charge of a greater rate for a shorter haul. This provision is direct and unequivocal and is further strengthened by the acts of 1883 and 1907, which give effect to the long and short hauls of the provisions of the constitution which were placed on the statue books to regulate freight rates in this tate.

The plan submitted by the mayor's experts show that the published tariffs of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company on prepared sizes of anthracite coal from the Schuylkill district to Philadelphia, when consigned to points outside the capes, is $1.30 a ton. The carriers charge twelve cents a ton for handling this coal over the piers, so that practically the railways hcarge $1.18 a ton on this coal, whereas coal shipped to Philadelphia for consumption in this city is charged for at the rate of $1.70 a ton.

SOME FIGURES

The brief which Professor Pierson has prepared in the action of the city against the anthracite companies further shows that if Philadelphia were allowed by the carrier the advantages it naturally enjoys with respect to coal freight rates, the rates on coal shipped to this city, based on the cost of coal shipped to other cities, would not be $1.70 a ton, but, on furnace coal $1.01, on egg coal $1, on stove and nut coal 97 cents, on the pea coal 84 cents. The city, it is claimed for redress, is asked to make this plea: "That if the present traffic is profitable, then the rate of $1.70 a ton on prepared sizes of coal is excessive and exorbitant, because the character of the service rendered in both instances by the carrier for the long and short haul is identical."

Finds Natural Gas

PETERBOROUGH, Sept. 23.—Yesterday afternoon natural gas was "struck" on the grounds of the parsonage of St. Joseph's Church Duro, of which Rev. Father McGuire is parish priest. A man was enlarging an old well on the premises when a flow of natural gas developed, compelling the digger to beat a hasty retreat. The nature of the gas was tested by applying a match. It burned brightly. The flow has persisted for several hours, and is still strong. The place is five miles east of Peterborough.

Strike at the Bank of England

LONDON, Sept. 23.—"Strike at the Bank of England; picketing the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street," and similar headlines in the evening papers gave the city a mild sensation today.

One hundred and fifty boys from the printing department of the bank were dismissed in the morning and many of them spent several hours in marching round and round the great square square building somewhat disconsolately, with dinner baskets or parcels under their arms.

The cause of the trouble, the boys alleged, was the unsatisfactory working of a new time checking machine installed on Monday to register the incoming and outgoing of the boys. "It takes such a long time," said one boy, "to take our checks out when we go to dinner and put them in on returning that a good part of the time is wasted. Three boys had some of their pay stopped for being late. That was not fair, so we struck and asked for more time for dinner, and they dismissed us all with part of our wages. We got from seven shillings six-pence ($1.80) to fourteen shillings six-pence a week.

All the Bank of England notes are printed in Threadneedle street as well as Indian notes, postal orders and old age pension orders. The boys were very much impressed with their importance as creators of the Nation's wealth.

"The machines cannot run without us," said one of the moneymakers, "and the bank has been losing about two thousand pounds a minute since we came out and they stopped printing notes. They have been trying to get some more boys, but they haven't got any yet."

This view of the financial situation was not taken by an official, who stated that the bank would not cease payment immediately. Nor did the directors decide to change the bank rate.

PARTITION OF PERSIA

That Will Be Outcome of Conference, Says Rumor.

Belief In London Is That the Present Meeting Between Grey and Sazonoff at Balmoral Will Result In Russia and England Establishing Protectorates Over It — Balkan States Alert.

London, Sept. 23.—The practical division of Persio between Great Britain and Russia appears almost assured as a result of the conferences which Sergius Sazonoff, the Foreign Minister, had with British statesmen. All the newspapers which are in the closest touch with the Foreign Office, particularly The Times, looked upon recently as Sir Edward Grey's mouthpiece, are forecasting this arrangement and are apparently preparing the public mind for it. The necessity of preserving order in the interests of trade is the principal reason advanced.

The Manchester Guardian and other Liberal papers oppose the project bitterly. The Guardian says:

"The Foreign Office, although not ordinarily over-solicitous about the trade interests, knows well how to quote them for is own ends."

Since the signing of the Anglo-Russian convention of 1907 for the maintenance of Persia's independence and integrity, and incidentally for the division of the country into British and Russian spheres of influence there has been a steady growth of this influence and a corresponding shrinkage of independence in Persia. The exact division of territory will not be easy. The Russian papers claim Teheran. If the Emperor gets the capital, Great Britain's share will be decidedly the smaller value.

Some of the Liberal papers bewail the disappearance of Persia as a buffer state and foresee a great increase in the British militry establishment when the British-Russian boundary is drawn across the middle of what is now Persia.

Nowhere is the outcome of the conference between Sir Edward Grey and M. Sazanoff awaited with greater interest than in the capitals of the Balkan states as it is believed that they have a vital bearing on the crisis in the near east, the gravity of which unless the powers induce Turkey immediately to introduce reforms in Macedonia, all are agreed upon.

The representatives in London of Bulgaria, Servia, Greece and Montenegro are watching closely the progress of the convention which began in London Saturday and will be continued at Balmoral Castle to-day.

There is no confirmation here of the reported alliance of the four Balkan states to make common cause against Turkey, but it is acknowledged that a rapprochement exists for their protection.

Dr. Pearson Turned Down.

Guatemala City, Sept. 23.—The Guatemalan Government has rejected the proposal of a syndicate headed by Dr. F. S. Pearson, president of the Mexican and Northwestern Railroad Co., to irrigate the extensive plains of the Zacapa district in Guatemala. The project contemplated the water rights and the ownership of a large tract of land.

Canada is Ninth Maritime Nation

Canada is now ninth in tonnage list of the maritime states of the world, as published in a report for 1911 just issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The other eight, beginning at the top, are Great Britain, Germany, United States, Norway, France, Russia, Italy and Japan.

The total number of vessels on the register books of the Dominion at the close of the year was 8,088, measuring 770,446 tons, a marked increase over the total for the previous year. The number of steamers is given as 3,444, with a gross tonnage of 588,741.

Estimating the average value to be $30 per ton, the value of the net registered tonnage at the end of the year would be $23,113,380. New vessels added to the list during the year numbered 139, with a net register of 27,736 tons. Estimating the value of the new tonnage at $45 per ton, the value of the new vessels is given at $1,148,120. During the year 279 vessels were removed from the register. Of these, 37 were wrecked, 15 stranded, 12 lost, 10 abandoned at sea, 12 floundered, and 31 reported "out of existence."

The department estimates that 41,447 men any boys found employment on the ships of Canada during the year. Quebec is the third important "maritime" province, according to the list of registered ships, having a total of 1,511 sailing vessels and steamers. The other provinces appear in the list as follows: Nova Scotia, 2,105; New Brunswick, 996; Ontario, 2,014; P. E. I., 149; British Columbia, 1,227; Saskatchewan, 5; Manitoba, 96, and the Yukon Territory, 15.

Famous Actor Now a Cripple

It is almost certain that Nat C. Goodwin, the comedian, who has delighted thousands by his art as a funmaker all over the world, will never again appear on the stage to play a part.

A letter received recently by his friend, John Ernest Warren, Secretary of the American Dramatic's Association, brought the news from California that the actor is now paralyzed in his lower limbs. Mr. Warren recently visited Goodwin at his home near Los Angeles on business connected with the publishing of Goodwin's "Memoirs," which the actor is editing for publication this winter. Mr. Warren says that on leaving California a few days before Goodwin met with his accident the actor was in fairly good health, although somewhat tired after his work during his last season here.

The letter received by Mr. Warren explained that the stories of Goodwin's mishap already published have been misleading, and that the facts of his accident and his conditions have been inaccurately given. The facts, as detailed by the California friend of the actor are that Goodwin is suffering from a fracture of the pelvic bone, which was not discovered for some time after he was thrown out of the boat and received his injuries.

Goodwin, his secretary, Miss Moreland, and the Captain, Al Hyder, started in the actor's yacht to look at some property on a sand strip beyond Yerba Buena canon, on the Malibu coast, on August 15, during the brief period of excessively high tides which prevail at that time. On arriving at the place, the entire party was going to land, but owing to the heavy surf running at the time, Capt. Hyder refused to allow Miss Moreland to get into the small boat. He and Goodwin went alone. As the boat neared the shore a high sea overturned it, and, as Goodwin was fighting through a braker fully twelve feet high, a second heavy sea picked up the oak dory and it dropped from the crest of the wave on top of Goodwin, who sank with a scream.

Capt. Hyder fought for twenty minutes before he could rescue Goodwin, who was almost helpless, having been dashed against the rocks before Hyder could reach him. With great difficulty, the actor was got on board the yacht and taken home, where examination was made. The doctors decided that no bones had been broken.

It was not until two weeks afterward that the fracture of the pelvic bone was discovered, and the delay in that discovery probably saved the patient's life. In almost every case of such a fracture, it is customary, the physicians declared, to perform an operation instantly. The doctors agreed, in discovering the fracture, which had been hidden by swelling caused by the blow of the boat in falling on him, that the delay in discovering the fracture had probably saved Goodwin's life, as in his present condition the usual operation would almost certainly have proved fatal. They now find that no operation will be necessary.

Since the accident he conditon of the actor's mind has not been good, and his friends fear a breaking up of his mental powers. He is said to have become morbid and morose, due to his fear that he will never be able to walk again or appear upon the stage. It has been thought best, however, by the doctors and those in atendance upon him not to inform him of the discovery of that fact.

Miss Moreland, the actor's secretary, and a corp of trained nurses are in constant attendance upon him and are doing their best to cheer him up. He is just able to draw himself up by his arms in bed and use them to change his position, but is unable to use his legs or feet.

His last engagement here was in the role of Fagin in "Oliver Twist," and he was to have opened in the same role in San Fransisco three weeks ago, supported by the Belasco Stock Company. During the coming season Goodwin was to have appeared in New York under the management of Oliver Morsco in the first production of Lee Arthur's "The Fox," in which he was to have played the title role, or in Hartley Manner's "Gauntlett's Pride."

ITALIANS IN COMBAT

Three Are in Hospital as Result of Sanguinary Fight.

Brothers Go From Argument to Blows In a Toronto Lodging-House and Nine Men Are Soon Engaged In a Gory Conflict—Three Are In Hospital and Two Are Charged With Wounding.

Toronto, Sept. 23.—Six Italians are locked up in Agnes street station and three more are in a serious condition at St. Michael's Hospital as the result of a terrible fight with razors, stilettos, knives, clubs and beer bottles in a little boarding-house at 103 University avenue last night. Two of those in the police station are charged with wounding, while the others are held as material witnesses of the most gruesome and bloody combat that ever occurred among the foreign element in Toronto.

Five policemen broke into the house, where about twenty Italians live, and there found a vendetta with all its ghastly features. Four Italians were fighting with stilettos and razors, their faces and heads badly gashed, and huddled in a heap on the flour four others lay helpless and bleeding as the result of wounds inflicted in the fracas. A woman, a wife of one of the combatants, who is now in the hospital, was picked up in the hallway, her face having been smashed by a beer bottle. Six of the nine Italians were taken to the hospital and treated by a small army of surgeons, and the others were locked up in the police station.

Rocco Leambardo and Guiseppi Paggiera, both cut up themselves, are charged with wounding. The material witnesses, all of whom came out of the affray with numerous scars, are Guiseppi Bagrinello, keeper of the boarding-house, and Mickele Puggnola, Donato Puggnola, Joe Canele and Fedele Rosino. All of them are street laborers, and, as far as the police can ascertain, are related to one another—brothers, brothers-in-law and cousins.

The affair started about 9 o'clock last night. According to an Italian priest, Donato and Mickele Puggnola, two brothers, argued about something, and, not satisfied with the result, indulged in wielding stilettos. Others in the house joined in the affray, and the entire nine men fought in one small room, hardly large enough to accommodate them. When the police arrived no liquor could be found, but there were a number of empty bottles, which seemingly had been used as weapons. According to the interpreter, the men arrested were responsible for the wounding. Both are giants in build.

The cause of the fight was a celebration out of the ordinary among the foreigners. There is considerable clanish feeling among those from different towns in Italy. All of those engaged in the affraiy hail from Monteleone. Yesterday was known as St. Rooh Day among the Italians. St. Roch is the patron saint of a few inhabitants of Toronto's "Little Italy." Those who worship St. Rooh were afraid to celebrate the day on account of the enmity of the natives of Monteleone. So the great day passed off unnoticed, and these foreigners from Monteleone were so overjoyed that their hated brothers were afraid to commemorate the day that they simply had to give vent to their enthusiasm by consuming beer and otherwise making merry. The fight resulted

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

With the presentation of the big spectacular drama, The Light Eternal, at Griffins Opera House for two nights starting Wed. Sept. 25th, a point of extraordinary importance in local theatrical history will have been reached. That an attraction of the size, importance and expense of The Light Eternal can be successfully given at moderate prices for two and three nights in cities of the class of Belleville would seem contrary to all precedent, but a little study of the general theatrical conditions past and present will serve to show the excellent business sense that prompts the management in the radical departure.

Probably no American business has ever been hedged in by so many utterly foolish usages and supposedly irrevocable rules as that of the stage. It has ever been the custom among managers—and "custom makes the law"—to present their attractions in the largest cities for indefinite periods; in cites of the next grade for engagements of one week; and in still a third size for the time-honored "one night only." This is the law governing duration of engagements as it has been handed down from father to son; and the equally absurd fallacy that high class plays must of necessity be high priced has to come to us in the same manner.

High prices beget the one-night stand, and the one-night stand necessitates high prices. Instead of depending on a few at the maximum price, the management of The Light Eternal declares for the masses at a medium price. Every item of expense in connection with the traveling company, except the salaries of the players, is reduced one-half—the theatre goer receives his share of the savings in reduced prices and the manager flourishes as was never possible under the one-night stand and high price arrangement.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

DOG KILLED BY TRAIN

Saturday afternoon a large Newfoundland dog the property of Mrs. A. Horne, of this city, was instantly killed. The canine was walking across the C. N. O. R. bridge which spans the river here when the west bound express struck it. The body was cut in two.

PREACHED AT ANNIVERSARY

Rev. W. G. Clarke of the Tabernacle was absent from his pulpit yesterday preaching anniversary sermons at Aiken's Church, Sidney. As an agricultural community there are few sections that can equal this beautiful part of our county. Large congregations were present, many coming from a distance. The Thankoffering contributions were liberal. The choir rendered effective service.

BARN BURNED

At a few minutes after 11 o'clock Saturday night the greater portion of the city was illuminated by the outbreak of a fire in the east. It was at first thought that the blaze was within the city limits and an alarm of fire was sounded. The brigade responded to the call and went as far east as the city limits, when it was ascertained that the fire was in Thurlow Township, about a mile east of the city limits. It proved to be a large frame barn owned by ex-Mayor Lingham of this city. When discovered the flames had gained considerable headway, and it was only by heroic efforts on the part of some men that the horses were liberated. The structure contained about 20 tons of hay, the season's crop of grain, farming implements, etc., all of which fell a prey to the devouring element. The loss to the building and contents was about $4,000, partially coverd by insurance. How the fire originated is not known, but it is surmised that tramps were in the building as that part of the country is at present infested by this class of humanity.

A FALSE RUMOR

It was currently reported upon the streets to-day that a grocery store in the vicinity of the G. T. R. station was burglarized last night. Upon investigation it was ascertained that there was no truth in the report.

CALLS FOR POLICE

On Saturday night the police answered three calls as a result of which one party was arrested on a charge of drunkenness. The other two calls were in reference to tramps being about the G. T. R. station and at a private residence in the city.

WENT UNDER CANVAS

The new 34th Field Battery went under canvas at the Fair Grounds this morning, 103 strong, under Major Ryerdon. The battery is compored of as fine a lot of men as one could find in a day's travel, fully equpped with four guns and ammunition, carriages and a full complement of horses. The boys are out for two weeks, and as this is their first drill, under regimental discipline, a strenuous outing is anticipated.

ASSAULTED BOARDER KEEPER

Thomas Harding, who is a stranger in the city, was arrested on Saturday night on a charge of being drunk and assault. The accused boarded at Mr. James Doyle's on Mill Street and it is alleged that whilst in a state of intoxication he assaulted Mr. Doyle. This morning Harding appeared before Magistrate Masson and was fined $5 for being drunk or in default 10 days in jail. On the charge of assaulting Doyle he was remanded to wait for a week, the Crown not being prepared to proceed with the case. It is stated that Harding abused Doyle in a terrible manner without provocation. Magistrate Masson was inclined to allow Harding out on bail, himeself in $500 and one security of $300, but the accused was unable to procure bail and was subsequently remanded to jail.

SUNDAY SCHOOL RALLY

The 21st annual rally of the Tabernacle Sunday School was held yesterday afternoon with most gratifying results, there being a large number of scholars and parents being present. A fine programme was prepared for the occasion, including an address by Rev. John Aikens of Toronto, associate secretary of the Moral and Social Reform Society of the Methodist Church of Canada, and vocal selections by Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Rockwell of Wellington. In the evening Mr. Aikens delivered a powerful sermon in the church auditorium, which, with special music, was well received. The congregations throughout the day were large.

Dancing Class will be open in the Foresters' Hall, over Blackburn's Jewelry Store. Open Wednesday, Sept. 25th from 8.30 until 1 o'clock. Orchestra in attendance. Floor in good condition. Ladies 15c., gents 25c. T. RAMSEY. S23,3t

Mother's Heroic Leap

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 22.—The infant child of Mrs. A. Reed of West Chester Avenue had a narrow escape from drowning in the hydraulic raceway Saturday morning, and was rescued only in the nick of time by its mother. The child had been left in its baby carriage a short distance from the roadway leading to a small bridge. Baby and buggy went over the bridge into the waters of the raceway. The carriage sunk to the bottom, but the baby, though it had been strapped in, in some unaccountable manner, floated to the surface. Mrs. Reed noticed the child as it was being carried away face downward by the waters, and hastened to its rescue. She leaped into the water and rescued it after it had been carried 70 feet. Canal employees came to her help and assisted mother and child. The former collapsed after reaching her home. The baby soon recovered.

Drove Auto Over Cliff

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Sept. 22.—Death in a weird mountainside tragedy came to Niles C. Folsom, a young lawyer and deputy constable of this city, and Thelma Bartee of San Diego, last night, when Folsom, with the consent of the woman, deliberately drove an automobile off a high precipice at Toanga Pass, at the mouth of Topanga Canyon, about seven miles from Santa Monica, killing himself and the woman. Love with threads crossed and recrossed caused Folsom and his woman companion to end their lives, and yet it was not love for each other that led them to seek death. Folsom, according to letters left by him and the young woman, was infatuated with Ethel Jones, a Los Angeles chorus girl. Because she had repulsed his suit he sought to die. Thelma Bartee, in a letter which bares the innermost secrets of her heart, shows that her love for the young lawyer was so great that she tried to bring him and Ethel Jones together, and failing, decided to share his fate rather than grieve over his great unhappiness and his certain end. An automobile party found the wreck of the automobile and the bodies at a sharp turn on the road up the pass.

Providence-New York Service

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Sept. 22.—The Grand Trunk Railway of Canada is preparing to inaugurate a daily passenger and freight service between this city and New York which, according to present plans, will begin in the late spring or early summer of 1913.

For nearly two years negotiations have been under way for the entrance of the Grand Trunk to Providence, and at the present time the plan is well along toward accomplishment.

The Rhode Island Company, a subsidiary of the Grand Trunk, is chartered under the name of the Southern New England Railway Company.

At the present time two big twin-screw steamers are building for the Southern New England Railway at Wilmington, Delaware, and vice-president Murdock said that the contract reads that they shall be ready for service in May of next year.

"If they are done on time," said Mr. Murdock, "the daily passenger and freight service between this city and New York wil begin next day.

"The water line will be run in connection with the railway which is now building between Providence and Palmer, Mass., where the Southern New England will connect with the Central Vermont Railway, also a Grand Trunk subsidiary.

Toy's Long Flight

It is a long way to Cleveland, Ohio, but not too far for a small toy red rubber balloon, such as the children play with, to travel without any outside aid, simply using the air route.

Mr. W. Reif, of Kingston Road, when he left the door of his home at 5.30 in the morning, found one reposing on the ground, torn into shreds, with a card attached which bore an inscription intimating that it was the property of The Cleveland News, and was "good for one reserved seat at the Opera House, Sept. 19 and 20; Acc't Cleveland News."

The little balloon had evidently made excellent progress until last evening, when it was probably caught in the rainstorm and torn into shreds causing it to come to earth. Cleveland is 300 miles from Toronto by rail.—Toronto News.

CHICAGO, Sept. 21.—Threshing delays this side of the Canadian border and crop damage across that line proved insufficient today to offset in the wheat market the bearish effect of expected heavy world shipments and an increase in the United States visible supply. Oats finished 1-8c to 1-4c off to 3-4c up, and provisions less costly by a shade to 15c to 17 1-2c.

MONTREAL, Sept. 22.—The foreign demand for wheat was much quieter, and the prices bid were away out of line. Consequently no new business was done, and it is expected that not more than four to five million bushels of new crop wheat has been sold for shipment up to the end of December, and that the bulk of the ocean freight from this port and St. John, N.B., has been engaged for American wheat and oats. The local oat situation is very strong, owing to the increasing scarcity, as fully [illegible] per cent. of the stock in store is held for export account, of which there is about [illegible] American. Canada's Shipping Growth

The people of Canada will be agreeably surprised to learn that this country stands ninth in the tonnage list of the world's maritime states, according to statistics of the Marine Department. Canada grows so fast that the people scarcely realize the position the country occupies at any given time. And each part of the country is so busy doing its own particular work that it seems to pay little attention to other parts. Thousands of people in Canada never saw a ship or a sailor outside a picture book or paper, and to these people it will come as a surprise to learn that 41,447 men and boys found employment on Canadian ships last year. The fact that Ontario is the second most important province according to the list of registered ships, just below Nova Scotia, would seem to show the relative importance of navigation on the Great Lakes compared to traffic on the ocean. And Canadian shipping is bound to continue to receive a great impetus from this condition.

Canada's and Her Railways

A Northwestern paper predicts that "Canadians will wake up some morning in the near future with the news of two of the greatest railroad alliances that have ever been formed, and one of these alliances will make the Canadian Pacific Railroad the strongest in the world, according to rumors now floating around in railroad circles.

"Behind the rumors is a story of the invasion of Canada by American roads, and the story going around is that the Great Northern road, already into Portage la Prairie and Brandon, and heading for Regina, contemplates coming through Manitoba and Saskatchewan and heading up with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and at the same time coming from the Montana boundary line into Alberta and meeting with the G. T. P. in this province, practically net-working Western Canada with branch roads and trunk lines.

"To offset this, the Canadian Pacific and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul roads are contemplating an alliance, and although it will not be an amalgamation, they will work together and invade the Jim Hill territory in the United States, part of which is already invaded by the C. M. and St. P., together making the strongest combination in the world. The heads of all the big roads of the American continent realize that Western Canada is going to be the big railroad field of the future, and amalgamations being formed are the result of this realization."

Ontario's Minerals

The output and the value of the minerals produced in Ontario during the first half of 1912 were as follows:—

		Value
Gold, ounces	11,854	$ 235,198
Silver, ounces	14,258,403	7,936,600
Copper, tons	5,170	786,469
Nickle, tons	10,679	2,266,875
Iron ore, tons	12,342	32,060
Pig iron, tons	283,926	3,942,638
Lead ore, tons..	17	819
Cobalt and nickel oxides, crude Cobalt, lbs.	854,325	192,073

As compared with the first six months of 1911, the gold output increased in value $192,876, chiefly as the result of the operations of the Dome mine, Porcupine.

During the first half of this year the output of silver from Cobalt amounted to 14,258,403 ounces. This was a decrease of 973,566 ounces, as compared with the first half of 1911. The price of silver, however, advanced sufficiently to redeem the situation and to make the decreased tonnage worth $7,936,690, or $292,400 more than during the first half of 1911.

Adam Bede, who has been hot on the trail of the Bull Moose all through the West, was a member of Congress a long time ago, and has a fine gift of speech. For example: "The plain people are saying: 'Thou shalt not steal, and when beaten in a convention with your fellows, thou shalt not squeal.'" That was very neatly done; but it was not quite so good as Bede's comparison of Lincoln and Roosevelt: "It was Lincoln's conservatism that saved the Union and established constitutional liberty forever. He was not of the Bull Moose type. He never threw a friend or told a lie."

Securities of Provinces for British List

The Hon. A. J. Matheson, Provincial Treasurer, who returned recently from a two months' trip to England, announced that Lord Strathcona, as the result of an interview with him during his visit to London, had written the Provincial Treasurers of the Dominion provinces, asking them to unite with him in an endeavor to have provincial securities placed on the English trustee list.

Mr. Matheson added that it was Lord Strathcona's intention to try to secure Imperial legislation to make this possible. If the effort proves successful, the provinces will be able to secure more interest in their bonds than they now receive, and they will be placed in the same standing as that now enjoyed by the Dominion.

U. S. Government Refuses British Tenders for Shells

It is announced from Washington that a British Company has underbid to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars every foundry in the United States for heavy projectiles for use in the big guns of the navy. This fact became known when bids were opened for two million dollars' worth of shells of varing calibre. No sooner had it been ascertained that the British bidders were far below every American competitor than the representatives of six of the largest steel works in the United States held an indignation meeting at the New Willard Hotel to-day.

They declared emphatically that if the Navy Department awarded the contracts to the British Company they would never again submit a single offer for the American projectile. This statement was promptly communicated to the Navy Department, and later in the day it was made known that in spite of the great discrepancy in bids the awards will be distributed as far as possible among The American competiors. It was explained that under the protective system, it is impossible for American steel works to produce the high grade projectile at anything like the low cost abroad, and that even with the high bids submitted they expected no profit.

The general policy is that where the foreign article is superior to the American, the contract shall go abroad, but if the difference is entirely one of price, it will stay in America.

British firms' representatives are now asking: "Why call for tenders at all?"

Big Spectacular Drama Here Two Nights

A distinct departure in local theatrical drama of early Rome—The Light Eternal—at the Griffin Opera House for two nights starting Wednesday, Sept. 25. In announcing the attraction Manager Kissock asserts that an innovation is marked in the general scheme of things governing the routing and management of first-class traveling companies. Whereas in the past it has been thought impossible to give the better class of plays more than one night in moderate sized cities, or to give them at less than the standard $1.50 an $2.00 scale of prices, the remarkable success of The Light Eternal the past two seasons has proven that even greater profits may be made by an entirely different plan.

The Light Eternal comes to the local stage as a strictly high-class attraction in every respect. It is a beautifully written romantic drama of intense power and broad appeal; it is presented by a large company of more than ordinarily capable men and women; it is staged and costumed along massive and magnificent lines; and, what is more, it is presented at moderate or so-called popular prices. The contention of the management is that they can better afford to give the play for two and three nights in each city at moderate prices than to play them for one night only at high prices. The appeal of the play is so broad and the saving in expenses of transportation, advertising, etc., so great that the reduction price is more than overcome by the added volume of business.

The Light Eternal is now in its fifth successful season. The first three years were spent in the larger cities, last season and the present one being given over to the so-called one night stands. The piece was first presented at the Majestic theatre, New York city, by Henry Miller, where it ran for some fifteen weeks to enormous business; since which time it has been one of the most successful attractions on the road. It will be given here with the same magnificent staging and costuming as when seen in New York and other cities. The cast numbers some twenty-five people including a number of men and women not unknown here.

Seeking Closer Trade Relations With Dominion

Development of trade with Canada was informally discussed with the Hon. G. E. Foster yesterday by representatives of three countries, France, Holland and Venezuela.

The French representative was Mr. Henry F. Fletcher, president of the Canadian section of the British Chamber of Commerce at Paris. He came over to the Trade Congress at Boston and incidentally is enquiring into methods of developing trade between Canada and France.

Mr. F. E. H. Goernman, a member of the Holland consular staff, is here to look into openings for Dutch business men in Canada, and as a result the amount of capital they have invested in Canadian enterprises is likely to be materially decreased.

Mr. Leopold Terrero, the newly appointed Venezuelan consul at Montreal, presented his credentials to the Government and made several calls. He would like to see closer trade with Canada, and believes it would not conflict with the West Indian trade agreement. A good market for Canadian flour is offered, he states, while from Venezuela coffee and hardwoods could be purchased. While not authorized to make any agreement, he believes one is possible, and that it would be mutually benecifial.

Pickles and Radishes

Put the tomatoes, onions and peppers through the meat grinder, or chop fine, and sprinkle over them one cupful of salt. Let stand over night. In the morning drain off the water, put in the other ingredients and let come to the boiling point, then add one 10-cent bottle of horse radish. Seal in jars having a glass top.

Chili Sauce.—Six ripe tomatoes, 1 onion, 4 green peppers, 1 tablespoonful of sugar, 1 tablespoonful of salt, 1 1-2 cupfuls of vinegar.

Chop, or put through the meat grinder, tomatoes, peppers and onions, add sugar, salt and vinegar. Boil one hour and seal in jars.

Corn relish.—Eighteen ears of corn, one onion, one cabbage, one-quarter pound of mustard, one pint of vinegar, four cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of salt, two peppers.

Cut the corn from the cob, chop onion, peppers and cabbage, add sugar, salt and vinegar and cook slowly three-quarters of an hour. Ten minutes before taking from the fire, add a very scant fourth of a pound of dissolved mustard. Seal in glass jars.

Chow chow.—One-half peck green tomatoes, one large head of cabbage, six large onions, one-half pint grated horse radish, one-quarter pound of white mustard seed, one quarter cupful of ground black pepper, one-half ounce of celery seed, two pounds of brown sugar, three quarts of vinegar, one cupful of salt.

Chop or grind tomatoes, cabbage and onions very fine and salt over night. Next day drain off the brine, add vinegar and other ingredients, then mix well and put into glass jars. Do not cook.

Mixed pickles.—Two quarts of green tomatoes, two quarts of cucumbers, two quarts of small onions, two heads of cauliflower, two green peppers, one gallon of vinegar, one-half pound of ground mustard, three cupfuls of sugar, one ounce of tumeric powder, one cupful of flour, one cupful of salt. Cut the tomatoes, cucumbers, onions, cauliflower and pepper into small pieces. Pour over them boiling brine, made of three quarts of water and one cupful of salt. Let this stand twenty-four hours, then pour off the brine. Stir the flower, mustard, sugar and turmeric powder together and wet with a little of the vinegar, then stir it into the boiling vinegar, as you would make gravy. Put the other ingredients in and simmer together until all are tender. Seal in glass jars.

Tomato catsup.—One peck of ripe tomatoes, eight onions, six red peppers, six cupfuls of vinegar, two cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of salt. Chop or grind onions or peppers. Put with tomatoes, stew and press through colander, then add the rest of the ingredients and boil until it is thick. Seal while hot in glass jars.

Pickled cauliflower.—One cauliflower, two tablespoonfuls of salt, one quart of vinegar, one tablespoonful of whole cloves, one tablespoonful of white mustard seed.

Pull the cauliflower into pieces, put into cold water with the salt, heat gradually and boil five minutes, then drain until dry. Put this into a glass jar. Boil the clove an mustard seed in the vinegar and pour over the cauliflower, hot. Have it covered with vinegar. Seal while hot.

Cream mustard.—One half cupful of vinegar, one-half cupful of sweet cream, one egg, one tablespoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of mustard.

Put the vinegar on the stove and let it come to a boil. Have the cream, salt, mustard and egg well beaten together, and pour the boiling vinegar over them, then set the whole over boiling water and stir constantly until it thickens. When cold it is ready for use and is very nice.

Women Smokers On the Increase

BALTIMORE, Sept. 23.—The custom of women smoking cigarettes has become so general that managers of fashionable hotels are confronted with the problem of providing suitable places, where they can puff to their hearts' content.

Robert S. Downs, manager of the Hotel Stafford, said to-day

"I am positive the custom is becoming general, because we find evidences of it throughout the hotel. In private parlors and washrooms that have been occupied by women, half-smoked cigarettes are constantly found. I am opposed to women smoking public dining rooms."

King Manuel is Arrested in Paris

King Manuel of Portugal, was arrested in Paris recently by a policeman, who thought he was far too young to be wearing the decoration of the Legion of Honor. The unlawful wearing of decorations in France is a punishable offence.

King Manuel was walking along the Champs Elysees with the decoration displayed in his buttonhole. The policeman, glancing at him, knew instinctively that the wearer was far too young to have deserved it for his own merit, and questioned him.

Receiving no satisfaction, he escorted the former King to the nearest station house, where the fallen Portuguese monarch was forced to reveal his identity.

He was released with apologies.

New Rules for Water Polo Men

The Canadian Aquatic Polo Association held their annual meeting at the M. A. A. A. on Peel Street last night. All the clubs of last year, excepting McGill, were represented. There will be two more clubs in the league this season, as the president put in an application from the Y.M.C.A. and Mr. N. W. Goldstein and Mr. M. Frank were on hand to represent the Hebrew Y.M.A.A. both teams will be in the intermediate section.

The secretary presented a model annual report which showed the Association to be in a good healthy position. It was decided that in future twenty per cent of the receipts of the association will be held by the secretary to cover all expenses and the balance will go to purchase trophies for the winning teams at the end of each season. Two members of each club are to be chosen to act on a board of referees as it is thought this will cover all difficulties of securing officials in future. The following notices of motions were placed on the table for the next meeting on Tuesday night at the M.A.A.A. at 7.30 p.m., at which time the election of officers will be held and the schedule will be drawn up for the season's play.

First—That no member of a competing club be permitted to act as an official at the game.

Second—That no team be permitted to change a player after once the game has been started.

GENERAL SPORTS.

There is now no senior, intermediate or junior football teams, the men are all on one level and if a man wants to make his place good on the first team he has got to work for it. The boys are all on one level, and the team will be picked from the best men, whether this is their first year or their fourth at McGill. If they want to be on the first team they have got to earn their position by practice and merit and by adhering to the rules laid down for to turn them out as efficient as possible. These are the words of Frank Shaughnessy, the new coach of McGill, to a reporter yesterday as he left the Union with a crowd of the boys to see how they were getting along with the Law house, where the football squad are to put up. Jimmy Lee, Laing, Lewis, Bigwall and Paisley are already geting into shape and probably Turnbull and Mathewson will turn out to-day or to-morrow. Billington has not ben heard from yet, although a tracer has been sent to cable that was despatched to him a few days ago.

Asked if he thought the boys would give up the smoking, as the new rules demand, Shaughnessy said he was sure they would, as they had to sign a pledge to that effect, and from the interest and enthusiasm they were displaying he was sure they would do anything if they thought it meant victory for them in their matches.

It is now Captain, "Dade" Burkart. Friday, after the Toronto Rugby Club practice, the players elected the popular outside wing captain for the coming campaign. No better choice could have been made. "Dade" has lots of ginger, and if he can succeed in inspiring his men with the same spirit the new club will take a lot of beating.

The Hamilton Alerts tried to secure the appointment of "Tout" Leckie, the former Queen's player, to the City Engineer's staff, but the Engineer did not consider him qualified for the position. It is probable that Leckie will not be in Hamilton for the football season.

Describes An Aeroplane Fall

Miss Treenawse Davies, who, with the airman Astley, had a wonderful escape in a fall near Lille, France, of the monoplane in which they intended to fly from Liege to London recently, made the following laconic entry in her diary when the machine had already heeled over on its side and was tumbling 200 feet to the ground:

"Planing madly to earth, 2.20. Bits of us flying now."

At the time when she made the entry Miss Davies was held in her seat only by luggage and other impedimentia, which tumbled upon her. Her writing was naturally of a very shaky character, and hardly legible.

"We fell from a height of about 200 feet, I think. Things began to fly about and the compass rushed up at me. I caught it and then the oil-can fell in my lap. I tried my best to write something, but had not much time. Soon after the dive began I was turned over and saw the propeller whirling, and bits of it being hurled into the heavens.

"When we were about to strike the ground I wondered whether my head would stick in the earth and they would find me in that position. I was rather surprised when I had no shock and found I was unhurt."

Mr. Astley explained that the cause of the accident was that when flying at a height of about three hundred feet the floor board cracked and a piece, two or three inches square fell out. His heel became wedged in the hole and he was unable to steer the machine. When the machine crashed to the ground, he said, he was astonished to find himself alive. When he crawled out he found Miss. Davis coolly fixing her camera to take a picture of the damaged machine.

An examination of the aeroplane showed that the hole in the floor-board was due to the collapse of a knot. Mr. Astley thinks that some recent air fatilities may be similarly explained.

FOOTBALL

The Ottawa University football club has recived an invitation to play a game against the Hamilton Tigers in the ambitious city on Saturday of next week. It appears that the Hamilton Alerts, who are cutting inroads through the territory of the Tigers, have arranged for an exhibition game against the Toronto Argonauts.

The Tigers wish to put on a counter attraction and have wired to the university, guaranteeing Father Stanton's team $500 and expenses for the proposed game. The college club has not yet had an opportunity of discussing the challenge, but will probably do so immediately. It is not likely, however, that he game will materialize, for the Queen's and college teams open the Intercollegiate season here the following week, Oct. 5, and Father Stanton would not like to run chances on having some of his star men injured. The Hamilton proposition called for the appearance of the regular fourteen. The match would, on the other hand, give the collegians an excellent chance of getting into condition for their Intercollegiate campaign.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

NEVER WAS CONQUERED.

And Ulster Never Will Be Declares Carson.

Coleraine, Ireland, Sept. 23.—"Ulster has never yet been conquered and never will be." This was the keynote of the speech of Sir Edward Carson, who addressed a big meeting here Saturday in opposition to home rule. Ulster loyalists, he said, had been accused of plotting treason, but they would sign the covenant, and not caring tuppence whether it was treason or not, they would keep it, and he was sure Ulster would win the fight against home rule.

Denounced From Pulpits.

Belfast, Sept. 23.—Ulster intercession services were held in the churches throughout the province yesterday. In addition to the special collect which was ordered read by the Most Rev. John Baptist Crozier, primate of all Ireland, of the Church of England, who had designated this week, including "Ulster Day," as "days for special intercession and prayer on behalf of our beloved native land," sermons were preached making particular reference to the solemn covenant. In many cases the national anthem was sung.

Saturday the Climax.

London, Sept. 23.—On Saturday, Sept. 28, the Unionists of the northern counties of Ireland propose to register their formal defiance of home rule. Gathering in halls and market places, even in churches, the men of Ulster will sign a covenant pledging themselves never to submit to any Government from Dublin, which may be imposed upon the country by the Asquith-Redmond home rule bill passed in the House of Commons.

Carsons Narrow Escape.

London, Sept. 23.—Sir Edward Carson had a narrow escape from injury during the rioting at Londonderry, according to a despatch received in London by The Evening News.

A large stone was dropped into Sir Edward's open carriage from the city wall, missing him only a few inches.

SURPRISED LAURIER.

North Bay Citizens Held Procession In His Honor.

North Bay, Sept. 23.—A surprise party waited upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier at North Bay while he was at supper on his private car here Saturday night.

Mayor Gaughey, accompanied by the council and 2,000 citizens, headed by the town band, marched in torchlight procession to the siding upon which the special car "Ranger" had been shunted preparatory to being attached to the night train for Ottawa.

The ex-Premier spoke briefly from the rear end of the car. He thanked his audience for the ovation. He also dwelt upon his defeat just a year ago.

"To-day, the Conservatives in Toronto and Montreal are celebrating the first anniversary of their victory, and I am enjoying my first birthday as leader of the King's loyal opposition, which I have more reason to celebrate because I went down on a principle. I can always take defeat like a man, and that is what keeps me so young.

"At the time of the Conservatives' declaration of the defeat of Laurier, they promised that you would have the Georgian Bay Canal within a year. I have been anticipating the finishing of that project, but I am afraid you will have to wait for Laurier's return, which I am confident enough to predict will be at the next election."

Hon. G. P. Graham, spoke for about twenty minutes. He supported the organization of a Canadian Lloyds. He adjured the people not to support the "degradation" of the Transcontinental Railway. He also urged the young men to take example from his chief, and support the party's policy.

Awards For Gunnery.

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—The militia orders announce the results of the artillery competitions held during the summer in all parts of Canada and including the shooting of each battery at Petawawa.

There were 26 batteries competing in the field battery competitions.

The first prize for general efficiency, the Governor-General's Cup and the Earl of Stradbrooke Cup, was won by the 2nd Field Battery of Ottawa with 550 points. The batteries next in order were 17th Sydney, 533 points; 22nd Sherbrooke, 494 points; 4th Hamilton, 472 points; 13th Winnipeg, 468 points, and 19th Moncton, 463 points.

For gun practice the Sydney battery was first with 290 points; the Ottawa second battery second with 277, and the 4th Hamilton Battery third with 252 points. In the personal appearance competition, the 2nd battery with 273 points, first; 22nd Sherbrooke, second with 272 points, and the 3rd Montreal Battery third with 266.

To Fight American Goods.

London, Sept. 23.—The movement against cheap automobiles is the forerunner of an attack on typewriters, cash registers, safety razors and other American products sold here.

One of the leaders in the British automobile movement said:

"The fight on automobiles is simply the entering wedge. We hope to obtain the passage of a tariff law which will insure the English market for English manufactures and provide remunerative work for English labor. Our movement is not anti-American, but pro-English."

Duke In Vancouver.

Vancouver, Sept. 23.—Unclouded skies have graced the whole of the two and a-half days' stay of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia here and the many and varied functions arranged by the municipality and others in connection with the royal visit have been marked by a smoothness and eclat which redound infinitely to the credit of all concerned.

Youthful Burglar Heavily Sentenced.

Belleville, Sept. 23.—A young man named Frank Smith, who claims El Paso, Texas, as his home, was on Saturday sentenced in this city to five years in the penitentiary for burglarizing Mr. I. A. Goodsells music store in this city.

Must Abandon Canal?

Niagara Falls, Ont., Sept. 23.—"I do not believe that the first vessel will pass through the Panama Canal on Oct. 15, 1913," said Henry Lovering, a mining engineer of Cape Gracias, Nicaragua, who is visiting U. S. Consul Edward Trimmer. "I don't believe that any vessel will ever pass through the canal."

"Why not?" he said. "Well, the engineers have not been able to find bottom in the Culebra cut and they have gone down 200 feet. You remember what happened about two weeks ago — that fall of millions of cubic yards of earth? That bears me out. I believe Stevens & Shontz knew that a canal at Panama was impossible, that's why they quit. There's no better engineer in the country than Col. Goelthals. He was sent to Panama to dig the canal, and he is doing great work against tremendous odds. Army officers are not supposed to express their opinion. They do as they are told. The engineers who were sent down to make the preliminary survey some twenty years ago, reported that the Panama route was not feasible. They favored the Nicaragua route, despite the fact that the Panama route is about three miles longer."

Run Down by Auto.

Toronto, Sept. 23.—Robert Martin, bedel of the University of Toronto, who lives at 758 Crawford street, was seriously injured on Saturday afternoon when struck by a Telegram motor delivery car. Mr. Martin was riding a bicycle along West Bloor street from the university to his home. While cutting across the road to turn south on Crawford street he was run down by the motor car which was traveling at a fast rate. He was thrown against the curb and rendered unconscious. It is feared that he will not recover. He is now at him home in a precarious condition.

Mr. Martin has been bedel of the university for some time and is very popular among the faculty and students.

Plenty of Cars.

Winnipeg, Sept. 23.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy on his way east declared here that the Canadian Pacific had plenty of cars for moving the grain eastward though they were lying idle now owing to delay in harvesting and threshing. He found conditions satisfactory on the line between Montreal and Vancouver, all of which he inspected by daylight.

He was unable to say if the company would build a tunnel through the mountains, calling it one of the difficult problems which need solution.

Barn and Contents Burned.

Belleville, Sept. 23.—On Saturday night a large barn situated a mile east of the city limits, in Thurlow Township, was with its contents, destroyed by fire. Ex-Mayor Lingham of this city owned the property. The barn contained 100 tons of hay, the season's crop, vehicles, farming implements, etc. The horses were saved. The loss is about $8,000, partly covered by insurance. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Touring New Ontario.

Port Arthur, Ont., Sept. 23.—Hon. W. R. Hearst, Hon. Dr. Pyne, and Hon. J. S. Duff, of the Ontario Cabinet, spent Saturday in Port Arthur and received deputations from various parts of the district, who placed various matters before them. The Ministers are concluding a tour of the Thunder Bay district.

STARVED 44 DAYS.

London, Sept. 23.—Discussing the release of Mrs. Leigh from Mountjoy prison, The Daily Express says that the woman had undergone a hunger strike and forcible feeding for forty-four days and that her collapse was due to deliberate starvation, she having acquired the knack of ejecting food as soon as it was administered by means of the tube.

At suffragette headquarters it was said on Saturday that Mrs. Leigh and her fellow-prisoner, Gladys Evans, who is under a sentence of five years for having tried to burn the Theatre Royal, where Mr. Asquith was to speak, were offered the privilege of wearing their own clothes and having the hospital diet served to them if they would abandon their hunger strike. This they refused. It was said that Mrs. Leigh had abstained from water as well as food, and the prison attendants had to strap her in a chair, as both she and Miss Evans smashed everything breakable in their cells.

Unconditional Discharge.

Dublin, Sept 23.—Although Mrs. Leigh was released "on license," the official notice of her discharge simply says the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland ordered it so that she might be removed to a hospital for treatment. The woman was taken in charge by friends and immediately visited a hospital. Thence she went to a private house in Dublin, where she now it. Her release from prison was ordered after a medical examination by Sir Christopher Nixon, ex-president of the Royal College of Physicians in Ireland, and Sir Thomas Myles, surgeon to Richmond Hospital, and practically amounts to an unconditional discharge.

Mrs. Leigh Threatens.

Dublin, Sept. 23.—Phoenix Park was the scene yesterday of a disorderly suffragette meeting. A letter from Mrs. Mary Leigh declared that unless Miss Evans was liberated within a few days, she would lead a march on the prison to effect her release.

Seven Years In Prison.

Galt, Sept. 23.—Seven years in the penitentiary for bigamy and seven years for perjury, terms to run concurrently, was the sentence imposed upon Ernest Moyes of Berlin in the police court yesterday morning by Magistrate Blake. The crime was one of a most despicable character, Moyes' victim being Lena Schnarr of Berlin, a blind invalid. She was also charged with bigamy and found guilty and committed to the house of refuge at Berlin. The convicted woman had to be brought to Galt in an automobile.

Moyes, who pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy, had to face a charge of perjury, committed in taking out a marriage license on September 9 by saying he was an unmarried man.

Feared Boat Was Wrecked.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Sept. 23.—Excitement almost as great as that attending the great ice bridge tragedy of last February resulted Saturday afternoon from the belief that the little steamer Maid of the Mist had struck a submerged rock at the very foot of the falls. Like wildfire the rumor spread and the river banks were soon lined with anxious spectators. To those on the banks the little craft was apparently fast on a rock and the newspapers published stories of the disaster.

Those aboard later explained that the boat had stopped in an effort to pick up a body, the attempt being unsuccessful.

TO MEET IN NOVEMBER

Mr. Borden Will Then Make the Naval Announcement.

Premier Tells Montreal Gathering Which Met to Celebrate First Anniversary of Fall of Reciprocity That the Plans Will Be In His Hands In a Week and the House Will Assemble In November.

Montreal, Sept. 23.—That definite and detailed information of the naval situation, which has been asked for from the Imperial Government, is to be in his hands by the end of next week and that this information will at once be submitted to the Cabinet and a plan of action in connection with the navy question drawn up, which plan would be submitted immediately to the Canadian Parliament, which will be called together in November, was the announcement made by Premier Borden last night at the Windsor Hotel to celebrate his return from Great Britain and the victory of his party a year ago.

Hundreds of prominent Conservatives with a number of Liberals attended the banquet at which, in addition to the Premier, many members of the Cabinet and leaders from other provinces were present.

The Premier spoke at length on his visit to England, on the administration of his party since coming into power, and in defence of the attitude of the Conservative party in connection with many public questions.

L. T. Marechal proposed the toast to the Premier in a speech paying tribute to his work and defending the national policy, which, he declared, the Conservatives would always adhere to and "which had enabled Canada to open up the western country and connect it with the east."

Other speakers in addition to the Premier were Hon. Robert Rogers, who denied that there was any increasing sentiment in favor of reciprocity in the west and delivered a virulent attack upon the Liberal press and the Liberal leaders of the west who, he declared, were continually stirring up race hatred and religious and sectional prejudice for their own ends. George Drummond, who urged that Canadian manufacturers establish themselves in the western provinces so that the needs and views of the east and west might become more similar. Hon. Mr. Monk, dealing with the prosperity of the country and prophesying a triumphant and speedy settlement of the questions which his party has to handle, and Hon. Wm. White, who dealt briefly with the commercial and financial issues of the day.

When Mr. Borden arose to speak he was greeted with applause which compelled him to remain bowing and smiling for upwards of ten minutes before he even attempted to speak.

"We inherited from the previous Government a considerable number of very difficult and delicate questions and I am not going to enter fully upon these to-night. When I do it will be in more detail than is possible at such a gathering as this. But having to take these matters up, we dealt with them as seemed right according to our consciences and according to the constitution of the country.

Mr. Borden then spoke of his visit to England, and declared.

"I told the people of Great Britain that we in Canada had sharply distinguished between two questions—first, that of grave conditions confronting the Empire which might demand certain considerations and certain actions at our hands, while the other was the more complex and difficult, the question of permanent cooperation in the defence of the Empire which would be brought about in that regard.

"And I ventured to tell the people of the Mother Country that if I understood the spirit of the Canadian people aright, Canada did not propose to be an adjunct even to the British Empire.

"And speaking at a great many places, before Parliamentarians, before the Royal Colonial Institute, before the London Chamber of Commerce, and before an audience of 5,000 people at Glasgow, no statement that I made was more warmly received, or more enthusiastically applauded than the statement that with co-operation in imperial defence must also come a certain voice with Canada in settling the issues of peace and war."

Mr. Borden then made the announcement that Parliament would open in November and by that time following the receipt net week of detailed information regarding the naval situation from the Imperial authorities the Cabinet would be in a position to present their naval policy.

Baby Floated Down Stream.

St. Catharines, Sept. 23.—The infant child of Mrs. A. Reed, Winchester avenue, had a thrilling experience Saturday morning and narrowly escaped with its life. It was securely strapped in the baby carriage, which started rolling down an incline leading to a bridge over the hydraulic raceway. There are no side supports on the bride, and the carriage went over the edge into the water. In some manner it became free from the carriage, which sank, and the baby floated down stream. The mother saw the child, jumped into the water and rescued it after it had been carried seventy feet. Both were helped out by some canal employes. The mother collapsed when she reached home.

Buffalo Calves.

Buffalo calves, as a rule, are born in April and May. They are active, vigorous little creatures, mild eyed as domestic calves, but possessing much greater strength and endurance. In a few seconds after birth they can get on their feet, and in twenty minutes they are fit to fight for their lives.

"THE OUTFITTERS"

The Launch of The "Mons Meg"

(Communicated)

On Saturday the Sept. 21st, there was launched by Robert Weddell and Co. at Picton, one of the most powerful submarine drill boats in the history of rock excavation in Canada.

Like most of the blasting drills, her name is not the least important part of her. All of those boats at present working on the rivers and harbors along the great lakes bear peculiarly destructive names, such as, "Vesuvius," the "Torpedo," the "Dynamiter," etc. This one will be called the "Mons Meg," thereby runs a story.

From time so long ago that it passes the memory of man, there has stood on the splendid Esplanade at Edinburgh Castle, overlooking the beautiful Firth of Forth, a most wonderful gun.

In the dim regions of the past, "Auld Reekie" was besieged, and the outside lads were making it pretty hot for them. The oatmeal was pretty wel down in the barrel, and the periodical excursions after meat, which is a Scot's particular delight, didn't visbly affect he market price of mutton, mainly for the reason that there was no mutton. Altogether they were in pretty bad shape.

A braw hammersmith by name "Macmonnies," told the Mayor and the Civic Guild that, if they would furnish him iron and lots of help, he would build a gun that "would hammer the tar" out of the boys outside. He got help and the iron, and he built the gun, and she did knock the tar out of them.

This blacksmith had a big rawboned, freckled-faced, muckle-mouthed wife, by name, "Margaret." By all accounts of this sturdy lady, which run in parallel lines with the gun, she was two-fisted and terrible. The present suffragettes are thinking of adopting her as their militant mother, and well they might, for, while they only break glass, Margaret broke heads, and the dealers in arnica and court plaster, as well as the dentist, had many customers when she went on a rampage.

When the great gun was fired for th first time it made such an infernal roar that the startled citizens said it was "Macmonnie's Margaret." This was abbreviated to "McMon's Margaret" and finally to "Mons Meg." Like the roads built by the Caesars, the massive abutments of Stirling Castle and the beautiful stone work of Iona and the Western Isles, she has stood the test of time so well that the first band which was shrunk on her mighty girth is as sturdy and as true as hammered iron and a perfect circle can make it.

With this object in view, the "Mons Meg" was constructed. Her machines are the most powerful and the finest to be had in America. Her independent double cylinder anchor engines are right up to the minute, and her pumps, by Worthington of New York, will work at a pressure of 1000 lbs. to the square inch. Her boilers are of the Scotch type and of 500 h.p., and they will maintain 100 per cent. more power with everything at its maximum than she requires. Her living quarters will be the equal of any first class hotel, and her range of work will run from ten to fifty feet, giving her the advantage of any boat on the great lakes.

Her lighting plant will be equipped with a Westinghouse closed-in, direct connected dynamo, of the very latest design, with light units of 100 c.p. Tungsten.

A brilliantly illuminated sign with the firm's name and a faithful model of the great gun, which was sent direct from Edinburgh, will stand out in a blaze of electric light across the Candian sky and will proclaim, to all and sundry that she is "aye ready" to do business.

In those days of much talk and little doing in the Dreadnought's and armor plate business, it is a comfort to find a new idea employed in the peaceful paths of commerce. By an invention of the senior member of the firm, Mr. Robert Weddell, her sides will be protected with steel armor plates, arranged with heavy springs, to lessen the concussion caused by the heavy explosions of the dynamite.

This is the second boat in America to have this improvement, the first one ,the "Quinte Chief," being so successfully protected that she has never been on a dock since it was put on.

The inventor says that, while not looking for trouble in any way, still, if that irrepressible German, to wit: Bill Hohenzollern, comes prowling around Canadian waters, that if the Canadian Naval Bill hangs fire, he will bet his last iron bone that the "Mons Meg" won't.

Capt. Tom J.. Flynn, the well known patriot who is superintending the construction of her, told our special man that Mr. Weddell had in mind the prediction of the old warrior, Macmonnies, when he designed the gun.

Mac built the great gun, "Mons Meg," to knock the tar out of the other lads and she did it. By the same token and by all the signs, her up-to-date god-child of the same name will be just as lusty and just as sturdy infant.

In a word, the "Mons Meg" will be just a little the finest of any submarine boat in Canada, and that, as all good patriots know, in this age of progress means the world.

Wheat Crop Late But No Blockade

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 21.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, arrived yesterday after making a thorough inspection trip over the Western lines as far as Vancouver. With him were George Bury, vice-president and general manager of the western division, and K. G. Sullivan, chief engineer.

"I am delighted with all I have seen in the West," said Sir Thomas. "I find development and progress everywhere. However this continued wet weather is very unfortunate, as it is delaying the crop movement. We have cars distributed throughout the west waiting for the grain movement to start. The transportation situation this fall depends on weather conditions. If it clears up there will be no great danger of a blockade on our lines, but if it remains wet it will be bad."

Crop Started Late.

"The crop of last year started to move later than ever before. I am sorry to say that this year's crop will be still later." This is the opinion expressed by George Bury, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

"Owing to the wet weather this year the crop will all move together, and will place a greater strain than ever on the railways.

Pope an Assassin Declares Deputy

ROME, Sept. 22.—The Vatican newspapers protest against the speech of Deputy Podreca yesterday during the celebrations of the fortieth anniversary of the occupation of Rome, when he declared that the Pope was an assassin, as "in his name Catholic Spain assassinated Prof. Ferrer, the martyr."

The pope does not seem to be worrying over the abuse. Yesterday, referring to the speech, he remarked to a friend, "Well, they have caelled me many names before, but this is the first time they thought of calling me an assassin. As a matter of fact, I did everything that was possible to save Ferrer, but failed. At and rate I am an assassin in good company, as Podreca also called Pius III., Pius IV. and Pius IX. assassins, so I must not complain."

Interesting Sermon at Christ Church

At Christ Church yesterday harvest festival services were held and appropriate sermons were preached by the Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave. The interior of the sacred edifice was nicely decorated for the occasion with grain, fruit and flowers. Large congregations were present at both services, and entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion. Special music, vocal and instrumental, was provided by the choir. At the morning service the Rector preached an appropriate sermon. Taking his text from Psalm c:4, he spoke as follows:

"It is an advantage to live at the present day beyond the realization of most of us. There is no reason why, by divine decree, we should be sent as souls to the world at this present period save that He willed and chose to send us. All the industry, toil, ambition and achievements of all past ages are the inheritance of the pres-progress of our development all the eras of strife and strain were necessary before the production of our era.

It would have been interesting to live in the dawn of history, to have been an element in the making of the great nations of antiquity, the progenitors of our own, but more interesting still to contribute to national development, with the pages of the long past before us. There must have been splendid stimulus to those who lived in the formative period of Grecian literature and art, to whom the songs of gods and heroes were veritable actualities. It must also have been a glory to be a citizen of the great Roman Empire whose every battlement and tower was crowned with the glittering eagle and whose every citadel was held secure by the invincible sentry and soldier. It would have fired the blood to live in the age of the great European Reformation and to be a contemporary with those who glorified and immortalized English letters. But all these we have as our heritage. The Greek gods and heroes are to us legends, Roman law is ingrafted into our modern jurisprudence, the classics of all ages are open to us and we are rich in our inheritance. For all this that has come to us in our time we should be immensely thankful.

Modern discovery and invention for our comfort and convenience are made possible because of the past and we enjoy what others never dreamt of. What a deprivation now to do without the advantages of the press which makes modern democracy possible. The world is only a day apart for intelligence.

Time was when men hardly dared think, much less speak their mind, religiously or politically. We have come into this heritage of liberty for which others have paid a great price in life and sacrifice. Do we appreciate it? We are secure in the honest protection of property and the preservation of civil and religious right. All these are characteristics of our civilization, and back of our civilization is our religion. Christianity lies back of our advantages, and back of Christianity, nay, its very being, is Christ. He is the standard, the ideal, the ethic of all we have and are and enjoy.

General Nogi of Japan was a great General, as Japan is a great nation. The man was better than his religion. His religious conviction compelled him to suicide to save the Emperor in the next world. Thank God for Christianity, which calls for sacrifice only to benefit mankind and to advance God's eternal truth.

Will Spend Two Million

The Grand Trunk Railway management having realized that they have not sufficient motive power to handle their business, have placed on order for the building of 100 new locomotives of the most modern character.

The contracts have been divided among firms in Kingston, Montreal and Philadelphia. The contractors have been requested to push the work so that they may all be in service in a year. Each of the locomotives will cost $20,000, which means a total expenditure of two million dollars. It also means that the workmen in those shops will be kept busy all winter.

Two Air Fleets For British Army

LONDON, Sept. 22.—It is stated at Aldershot that the British War Office was so impressed by work of the aeroplanes in the recent army manoeuvres that it has decided to build two fleets for special purposes One will be armed with rapid-fire guns and the other will be used solely for scouting purposes. The former, whose work will be to demolish the enemy's aircraft and so clear the way for the scout machines, will be heavier and faster than the existing army type, and will be capable of carying a crew of at least three persons. The gunner will be in front and the pilot amidships. The propellor will be in front instead of in the rear, and the machine will have a speed of eighty miles an hour.

FOR WOMEN ONLY.

That is the nature of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—the one remedy for women which contains no alcohol and no habit-forming drugs. Made from native medicinal forest roots. Dr. Pierce tells its every ingredient on the bottle-wrapper. Prominent physicians and some of the best medical authorities endorse these ingredients as being the very best known remedies for ailments and weaknesses peculiar to women.

MRS. COFFEY.

This is what MRS. GENETTI E. COFFEY, of Longstreet, Ky., says: "I feel it my duty to write and tell you what your medicines have done for me. I was a great sufferer for six years from a trouble peculiar to women, but I am thankful to say, after taking four bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' I am not bothered with that dreadful disease any more. I feel like a new woman. When I first wrote you for advice I only weighed 115 pounds—now I weigh 135.

"I thank you very much for your kindness. You have been as a father to me in advising me what to do, so may God bless you in every effort you put forth for good.

"I hope this testimonial will be the means of some poor suffering woman seeking health."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, newly revised up-to-date edition, answers hosts of delicate questions about which every woman, single or married ought to know.

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Percival Graves was with her, and he, though a fop, was insinuating in manner, handsome in figure, and every way an eligible person. She was alone in the world; her only sister was married again, and what more probable than that now she might fall in love with this new suitor, and commit to oblivion, if she could, the memory of the old? I even imagined all that my old friend Douglas might have to urge upon the subject.

Then, what weight was I to attach to the mention that obnoxious name of Neukreque in conjunction with hers? Was it reality, or the mere rantipole of Bonteine and the thoughless boy Calder, that such a person hovered about Clarice, and had actually sailed with her to the West Indies? And who was he, the unrepressing stranger who had so suddenly turned up, and in the neighborhood of Graham's Town too?

This new feature in our fortunes filled me with perplexing thoughts, from which I sought to shrink; but they would not be cast aside, and rose hydra-headed in my mind.

Nevertheless, whatever might happen, I was bound to follow her, and I burned now with longing and impatience to reach the coast, to embark and set forth upon the sea; but when thinking of the distance to be traversed by land, and still more by water, my heart sank within me, for the time that would consume might serve to destroy all.

From the Orange River to Algoa Bay was a distance of two hundred and fifty miles; thence to Cape Town wher, alone I could hope to find a vessel for the West Indies, was four hundred and fifty miles by coaster, and then four thousand two hundred more or less were to follow by sea, and there were neither railroad nor telegraphs as yet in that remote land.

Every mile of that long voyage would be traversed by Clarice long before me, and I recalled with jealous bitterness and irritation the hints that Bonteine had given of the "manifold opportunities" afforded by a long voyage for tenderness and love-like attention.

My homeward march with the little band of invalid soldiers was but the beginning of an end that I could not foresee. I strove to be patient, to be resigned, and to persevere. We had escaped with our lives from the hands of the Kaffirs, and there was yet hope.

Two days' march brought us to Burghersdorp, a little town with a thatched Dutch church, where we procured a store of cherots and lucifer matches, and pots of cold cream, wherewith to anoint our sun-blistered cheeks and noses. A sand-storm compelled us to make a long halt in Fort Armstrong, a strong square tower, surrounded by a score or so of wattle-and-daub houses, which had been heavily shelled and stormed by General Somerset at an early period of the war, when garrisoned by the rebel Kat River Hottentotes, who had been wont to sally forth to plunder the country.

Down through the provinces of Colesberg, Cradock, and Somerset we made our march—a long and most toilsome one it proved, for many of the poor invalid soldiers died, and were buried by the wayside—till we came in sight of the South Indian Sea and the Bay of Algoa.

As we marched into the town of Port Elizabeth, its dull looking streets and dreary background of bare hills were not without a certain nameless charm to me, for I remembered that the eyes of Clarice Haywood must have rested on them, though she was in the society of others, who then, as now, would enjoy and feel all the influence of the fascination that pervaded her whole being, and all she said and did.

In the bay, H. M.'s sloop Active was lying with her steam getting up. A signal was made from the harbour, and no time was lost in transferring us on board of her. No difficulty was made about a passage for me to Cape Town, as I had served as a volunteer with the 74th Highlanders, the remains of whose officer's dress I still wore.

Astride the naked shoulders of some athletic Fingoes we were placed in the boats of the ship, which soon conveyed us on board of her. My luggage consisted of Jan Cupido's double-barrelled rifle, which I hoped yet to hang in Haddonrig, as a souvenir of perilous times.

There were a few preliminaries to adjust, and the Active steamed out of Algoa Bay. On the morning of the third day I beheld that which I had note seen for five years, the great Table Mountain, over which a snow white mist was floating.

Running in from Table Bay we came to anchor. I soon bade adieu to the Active, and was ashore in Cape Town at my bankers' for funds at the tailor's ofr an outfit, and at the harbour in search of a ship bound for Jamaica. My bankers had long since thought me numbered with the dead, and were about to advertise for my heirs or representatives in the London and Edinburgh newspapers.

I soon discovered the agent of the favour me with a list of her passengers. It was duly shown me, and I read the names of "Captain and Mrs Gerard Douglas, Miss Haywood Lieutenant Perceival Graves, Mynheer S. van Neukerque, Mr. John mith," &c.

"I—can you tell me the Christian name of this person, Van Neukerque?" I inquired of the clerk who showed me the ledger, and I felt while doing so that I was somewhat blank in visage, and sorely vexed in heart.

"No sir."

"But, why?"

"Simply, sir, because I don't think he gave it."

"It was surely not Schalk?"

"I cannot say, sir, never having heard it," replied the clerk.

"Had he any friends in Cape Town?"

"None; I believe he was a total stranger."

"Did you see him?" I asked anxiously.

"Yes sir; twice. First when he came her, accompanied by Miss Haywood and Captain Douglas, to secure his berth, and secondly, when he came to pay for it, before the sailing of the Eugenie."

The incidental conjunction of his name and that of Clarice made me wince.

"Pardon me troubling you with so many questions; but what manner of a man was he—handsome, eh?"

"Describe him, please. I feel particularly interested in this Mynheer van Neukerque, having once had a friend of the same name."

"He was a pale and colourless man; with quick restless eyes, and very red lips. He possessed a very insinuating manner. He seldom smiled, however, and when he did so one was always struck by the whiteness and apparent sharpness of his teeth."

"That will do, thank you."

"Do you recognize your friend by this description?"

I hurried into the sunshine, and wandered as one would do in a dream. I could not collect my thoughts, which were now of the most alarming nature. Could this man, this creature, whose story and whose nature were so monstrous as to be incredible, have come back from the valley of the shadows to cross my path again? Or this fellow passenger of Clarice—this admirer, too, as I have been told—but one who bore the same name?

If this man resembled his appalling namesake, Clarice was safe from him as a lover; and Graves was the person, I knew, from whose presence and attentions there was most to fear.

After a delay that proved sickening to one of my impatient temperament, I at last secured a cabin passage on board the ship Wanderer, bound for Jamaica. We sailed from Table Bay on the last day of the month of December. I remember the moon, low, round, and large apparently as a wheel, rose slowly upward to light the sea with her crimson radiance. On that same moon, in another latitude, the dark eyes of Clarice might then be sadly gazing, while she thought of me as I thought of her, and prayerfully and hopefully I whispered to myself:

"Shall I win her, and yet wear her in my heart."

CHAPTER XLII

We had not been a day at sea before I discovered a kind of old friend in Captain Walmer; for though we had never met before we had often heard of each other, as he proved to be a native of Colchester, where I had twice been quartered; and, moreover, he was the elder brother of Isabella Walmer, a girl concerning whom Douglas had quizzed me more than once, the friend, gossip, and correspondent of Clarice and Fanny Haywood, both of whom he had seen when visiting Walcot, and knew well. Thus, we had several topics to discuss in common, when pacing to and fro on the quarter-deck by day or lingering over cigars and a glass of brandy and water at night before turning in.

John Walmer was a round-headed curly-haired good humored looking fellow, about thirty-five years of age, and stood five feet eight in his shoes. He had clear blue eyes, a fine set of teeth, possessed rather handsome features, and voluminous brown whiskers. During twenty of his thirty-five years he had seen nearly every sea and shore in the four quarters of the globe, and had been shipwrecked and cast away some four or five times, and had abundance of anecdotes and stories to tell, and as he was well educated, he told them remarkably well.

His conversation was lively, amusing, and by no means ovedloaded with nautical jargon, like that of convental seamen, such as William in Black-eyed Susan.

Captain Walmer had three mates, the chief of whom, Mr. Bill Hawsewood, was somewhat of a character in his way. He was the captain's senior in years, and a rough-spun tar, rather of the old school, before "wooden walls" went out of fashion and iron ones came in, and in addition to the other members of the crew we had Joe Mullins, the boatswain, and Derrick, the carpenter.

Mr. Bill Hawsewood, perceiving that I was very bronzed in visage, and that my hands, long strangers to gloves, were browned by the hot African sun, was pleased to compliment me in his own fashion.

Expects History To Repeat Itself

BELFAST, Sept. 21.—Londonderry was the centre of Ulsterism to-night. Sir Edward Carson, the leader of the anti-Home Rule forces, addressed an enthusiastic meeting, at which he said they were rewriting the history of more than two hundred years ago. They were, he said, confronted with the old danger and the old enemy and they were going to have the old victory.

Alluding to the siege of 1686, Sir Edward said:—"We mean by signing our covenant to close the gate again against the enemy." The covenant, he said, covered everything essential to beat back the attempted aggression.

"By the covenant," said Sir Edward, "we are defying the Government. They have not the courage to prosecute me; they have not the courage to prosecute a cattle-driver in the south or west.

The Bishop of Derry said:—"We are making history, making it at our peril and are not afraid."

The meeting enthusiastically endorsed the 'No Surrender" attitude.

Sir Edward in the course of his speech said the covenant had disappointed the Radicals because of its moderation. It was a solemn document, the speaker added, no fireworks having been permitted to F. E. Smith, member for the Walton Division of Liverpool, also addressed the meeting, assuring the Irish Unionists that they had England at their back in the fight against Home Rule.

AFTER SPECULATORS

Alberta Legislature May Protect Honest Buyer.

EDMONTON, Alta., Sept. 20.—To further relieve agriculture from the burden of taxation and to place the burden upon speculative holders of farm lands, amendments to the rural municipalities act will be sought at the next session of the Alberta Legislature. By an act passed by the session of the Legislature, assessment of land was made the sale basis of the municipal revenue while a rebate of 25 per cent. of all taxes was provided for the benefit of farmers who improve their holdings. It is now proposed that this rebate shall be raised to 50 per cent. so that the man who owns a quarter section wholly under cultivation will pay in taxes exactly one half as much as the man who is owner of an adjoining unimproved farm.

Peaches Plentiful.

St. Catharines, Sept. 23.—Upward of 2,000 baskets of peaches were disposed of on the Saturday market here, probably the finest array offered in this city this season. Prices ranged from 40c. to 80c. a basket. Tomatoes also were most plentiful, selling at 15c. a basket. Plums, pears, etc., were offered in abundance at the usual prices. Canning factories cannot handle all the fruit which is being brought to them owing to their inability to secure enough labor.

Send Refrigerated Animals Across To Revive Them

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 23.—The Russekow of Slovo, of Moscow, has published an article by Prof. Kalin, describing experiments made by Prof. Bachnetieff, formerly of Sofia, and now of Moscow University.

Prof. Bachmetiec, his colleague says, has proved that animals may be frozen alive and then resuscitated none the worse. Prof. Bachmetieff calls this process "anabiosis." The first experiments were made with cold-blooded animals and insects. Butterflies were enclosed in a vessel containing air at a temperature of minus 23 degrees Cent. The body fluids immediately froze hard, all vital actions ceased, and in ordinary phraseology, the butterflies were frozen to death." A special apparatus showed the very low temperature of their bodies; and when taken out suddenly they "turned into stone."

Despite this Prof. Bachmetieff discovered that by slow and careful warming they could be restored to life at any time before the body temperature had fallen below minus ten degrees Cent. Tests showed that when the resuscitation was begun at a body temperature of minus 4 1-2 degrees Cent. recovery was quickest and most complete.

The next stage was the repetition of this experiment on warm-blooded animals and on mammals. Two hundred tests were made. Nearly all succeeded. Bats were refrigerated and kept "dead" for a long time and latter completely restored.

Dr. Kalin says that these experiments open out remarkable prospects for the future. It is implied that it may even be possible to send refrigerated animals across the ocean and resuscitate them on arrival at their destination.

Too Many Automobile Mishaps

PARIS, Sept. 23.—The alarming increase in the number of automobile accidents on the French highway, hardly a day passes without a collision resulting in deaths or injuries, has led the Minister of Public Works to urge the magistrates to inaugurate a more energetic prosecution of violation of the laws governing automobiles.

The French Government plans a more elaborate examination of persons seeking driver's licenses, and it also is considering the wisdom of withdrawing licenses temporarily or permanently in the case of serious or repeated accidents.

Reported Purchase Of Halifax R. R.

Peace Conference Opened at Geneva

GENEVA, Switzerland, Sept. 23.—The Nineteenth International Peace Congress opened here to-day, and every country in the world except Italy was represented by delegates.

The proceedings began with the ringing of the "Liberty Bell," cast some years ago from the metal of cannon, swords and bayonets presented by various nations.

State Councillor Quarter de La Tente was elected president during the brief sesion, after which the Congress adjourned in honor of the memory of the late "Peace Apostle" Frederick Passy.

The programme of the Congress includes the discussion of questions of international law, commercial rivalry, and international relations, and the duty of pacifists who are citizens of another country engaged in a war of conquest.

"Elora" Kerr Was Born on a Train

Elora Kerr is the name of the little one born recently on the C. P. R. car Elora en route to Toronto. The mother is Mrs. R. Kerr, wife of the assistant postmaster at Regina, who was on her way to her Toronto home, Silver Birch Avenue.

Mrs. Kerr was taken ill at Coldwater, and Dr. Farley of Trenton, a passenger, was called in attendance.

The physician was accorded the privilege of naming the newly-born, and all agreed that he name of the sleeper would be appropriate. On arriving here an ambulance met Mrs. Kerr, who was accompanied by her sister.

The passengers in the sleeper gave the mother ten dollars as a gift from her baby's first associates.

The way a mother acts over the baby's first tooth, one would think she had never been in a dentist's chair.

DARING ESCAPE FROM THE COUNTY JAIL

Frank Smith, a Five-Year Term Prisoner Hailing from Texas, Makes Successful Dash for Liberty—Efforts Now Being Made to Locate the Wily Convict.

Rumors of a somewhat startling nature were prevalent about the city at an early hour this morning. They were to the effect that five prisoners confined in the county jail had succeeded in making their escape after an encounter with the jailer, and that the latter had been very roughly handled. Upon investigation it was ascertained that, as usual, the facts had been greatly exaggerated. There was, however, some foundation for the circulation of the rumors. A succesful escape from the prison premises was made in a rather daring manner. Frank Smith, a young man who asserted that his home is in El Paso, Texas, was arrested at an early hour on Saturday morning while, it is alleged, he was making an attempt to burglarize the music store of J. A. Goodsell, situated on Front Street. On Saturday last Smith was tried before Police Magistrate Masson for the offence and was found guilty. A sentence of five years in the Provincial Penitentiary at Kingston was imposed upon him. Smith was confined in the county jail in this city, pending his removal to the pen, and it is evident that he made good use of the time he was in jail to plan an escape which he successfully carried out.

At about 6.30 this morning Mr. R. Colling, Turnkey at the jail, let some eight prisoners out of their cells, and they were allowed to go out into the yard. Smith was among this number. The turnkey then went into another part of the jail and was absent about five minutes. Upon his return he was naturally surprised to find that Smith had flown, and there was every evidence as to the manner in which he effected his escape. In the prison yard there was a long bench, probably 12 or 14 feet in length. He had taken this bench and placed it in the corner of the prison yard, at which place the wall is 18 feet high. He had also torn up the blankets upon his bed and made an improvised rope. This he fastened to the upper end of the bench and threw the other part over the wall. Once up to the top of the bench, Smith did not have much difficulty in reaching the top of the wall, and then he slid down the rope, and finally dropped to the ground outside.

As soon as it was ascertained that the prisoner had escaped an alarm was sounded and in a few minutes the Sheriff, Jailer and Turnkey of the jail, Sergts. Naphin and Harman and Officer Donovan of the local police force were out searching for the fugitive. Although a diligent search was instituted about the city, the G. T. R. yard and other places, no trace of the missing man could be found. Telegrams were sent out to various chiefs of police in cities and towns surrounding, giving a description of Smith, and the authorities have every reason to believe that he will be captured.

The escaped prisoner is a young man, but it is believed in police circles that he is a genuine crook and that the name he gave here is not his proper name. He is represented to be an athlete, and the training he has received no doubt helped him in his successful attempt in scaling the wall, which was built with the intention of deterring any person from getting over it.

LATER.

It was reported that a man answering Smith's description was seen in the east yard of the Grand Trunk Railway here, and had jumped upon an eastbound freight train. A member of the local police force was at the east yard shortly after Smith effected his escape, but could find not trace of him in that locality.

Up to the hour of going to press no trace of the fugitive had been found.

SAYS HE CARRIED MAN AND CANOE FOR 53 MILES

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—For fifty-three miles afoot through the Maine woods, W. S. Cowing, a teacher, carried on his back a companion, Chas. Claxton, jr., who was helpless from an attack of pneumonia, according to Cowing's description of their experiences as the two men passed through this city to-day on the way to their homes in Philadelphia.

For sometime after Cowing and Claxton, near starvation, reached the little French-Canadian village St. Pomphile, Quebec, and travelled thence by rail to Bangor, Claxton, son of a physician in Philadelphia, lay near death in a Bangor hospital.

Cowing and Claxton were eighteen days reaching civilization. They had been on a canoe trip, intending to explore the head waters of the St. John's River. The stream by which they expected to return, they found was only six inches deep. They abandoned their camping outfit and started on foot, carying their canoe. Then Claxton was stricken with pneumonia, and Cowing was forced to carry a double burden, explaining to-day that he felt it necessary to have the canoe when they should reach deep water so that he might get Clayton under physicians' care as quickly as possible.

They used the canoe for the final forty miles of a trip of nearly one hundred miles to St. Pomphile.

Italians Will Stay in Canada

"Don't believe a word of it. The statement is absolutely untrue," declared Professor Sacco, spokesman of the Italian colony in Toronto, when shown a report to the effect that 500 of his countrymen had already booked their passage to Italy. The Italians, he explained, do not begin to go back until November, or December, in order to be with their families at Christman time, and rarely buy their tickets until a couple of days before leaving.

"No one can give any report as yet," he continued. A larger proportion of those who have come out this year than ever before have brought their familes with the intention of settling. The Italian immigration this year has been about 2,000 and not more than 600 or 700 will return to Italy for the winter.

"These people go to Italy to support their families, because there is no work for them here during the winter months. They can live more cheaply in Italy and prefer to return rather than to depend upon charity. In this respect the Italian is different from the people of any other nationality. He considers it a disgrace to go into an institution and would rather starve."

Thousands Go to See Him Die

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—In the presence of thousands of spectators a man named Buettner committed suicide in Berlin this morning. He had entered into a contract with a group of film companies to jump from the top of the famous "Column of Victory" in the Thiergarten. The structure is 245 feet high, and is composed partially of cannon captured in Germany's wars.

The police had knowledge that Buettner had attempted suicide because of a love affair, a fortnight ago, but had no hint that his project today was with a view to killing himself. The film companies were also unaware of Buettner's real intention.

Equipped with a faulty parachute, he jumped from the top of the column which visitors reach by aspiral stairway inside, and plunged to the stone base at a great speed. The man was instantly killed.

The crowd, incensed at what it thought to be the complicity of the film operators, handled them and their cameras roughly.

Dr. Dickie's Suicide Due to Depression

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 23.—The suicide of Dr. T. S. Dickie, Professor of Anatomy at the Medical School of Western University, was revealed this morning when John Nash, the janitor, found his dead body in the pathological laboratory of the school. Dr. Dickie was only about thirty years of age, and was a brilliant graduate of European institutions, his home being in Belfast, Ireland. He arrived here just a month ago, and was a fine type of man, physically and mentally, standing six feet two inches, and his suicide was a surprise to all who had met him.

He had deliberately planned his act, having written numerous directions, and on Saturday evening had apparently gone to the school after the caretaker had made his last visit. He had put a note outside the door instructing the finder to turn off the gas at the meter before entering the room. The room was full of gas when the janitor went in this morning, and Dr. Dickie was found in a state of rigor mortis. He had used a tube to receive the gas.

The only explanation seems to be that his mind had been overbalanced by his worrying over the trouble in Ireland, papers he had written showing this. To Dr. Eccles, Dean of the Medical Faculty, Dr. Dickie wrote as follows:

London, Friday, Sept. 19, 1912.

"Dean of Medical Faculty, London, Ont.:—

"Dear Sir,—I came to Canada hoping that the change of country and work would alleviate the periodical fits of mental depression to which I have been more or less liable for a good many years back. But this has not been the case, and I feel unable to take up my duties of teaching here in this town, or probably in any, such is my morbid outlook in life. Letters addressed to me should be readdressed unopened to 48 College Park avenue, Belfast, Ireland, wher my mother lives.

"T. S. Dickie."

Shortly before his death Prof. Dickie wrote a lengthy treatise on conditions in Ireland and the possibilities of war.

No inquest will be held.

Belgian Workers To Go on Strike

BRUSSELS, Sept. 23.—A great general strike is projected by the Socialists of Belgium in support of a universal suffrage amendment to the constitution. Hostilities against the Government, which has resolutely set its face against the desired legislation, will begin in November. Half a million workers, it is calculated, will be involved in the strike, which it is proposed shall last six weeks, at a cost to their funds estimated at ten million dollars

The railway, the postal and telephone services, mines, docks, arsenals, factories and workshops of all kinds are to be involved in what its promoters contend will be a bloodless campaign. Women seem as earnest as the men in the propoganda, which reaches throughout Belgium. Promises of substantial financial support have been received, the committee officials are from the United States, France England Germany, Sweden and elsewhere, and arrangements have been completed according to the same authority, to send forty thousand children to temporary homes in the north of France on the declaration of the strike.

Carefully Planned Scheme

The thoroughness of the Socialist leaders who are engineering this movement is in evidence on all sides. All extra work in the mines has been strictly avoided, so that there shall be no accumulation of coal stocks against the evil day. Similar action has been taken in factories, and workers are limiting the output strictly to quantities necessary to meet requirements from day to day. Any attempt to depart from this rule is prevented by the workmen. In the homes of the workers the strictest economies are being observed so that funds may be available when the weekly wages cease to come in, and the men and women are saving up their money as though for their annual holiday.

In spite of the announced desire of the committee that the peace shall be in no way disturbed during the strike, such vast numbers of revolvers have found their way into the hands of workmen that the Government has issued special instructions to Burgomasters, police and gendarmes to institute a general round-up of war-like weapons. The Government is making its arrangements to repress any attempt at excesses with an iron hand, and the troops will be rushed into all the industrial centres the moment the strike is declared.

Noise in Ulster Is Not All Bluff

WINNIPEG, Sept. 23.—The Earl of Stanhope, who just returned from the west, declares in an interview here that the noise in Ulster is not all bluff. History will show that Ulster men have always been serious in their convictions and are prepared to stand by them.

If a man has loved and lost he is apt to consider marriage a failure.

Woman Policeman Proves a Success

The experiment of appointing a woman policeman to take care of the flotsam and jetsam of the streets and attend to the women who have passed through the criminal court, which was initiated last March in Stuttgart, has met with unqualified success, so much so that the Council of Public Safety, under whose jurisdiction she is, is considering the advisability of giving her an assistant. The duties of this woman policeman have been exceedingly numerous, and the sum of $10 weekly, at which the thrifty burghers of Stuttgart placed her salary, seems quite incommensurate with the discretion and courage she is called upon to exercise.

Allege Gum Chewing In England Now

LONDON, Sept. 23.—A London newspaper asserts that it has discovered that Britishers have fallen victims to the chewing gum habit.

Only within the past few months, it is added, Britishers have surrendered to this custom, but now thousands of men, women and children are chewing gum.

"Of course," says this authority, "there are people in the British Isles who will never chew gum, just as there are people who will be in the minority when the first census of chewing gum experts is taken by the Government. It is stated that all Lancashire has got the habit, and the factory girls there have the whitest teeth in England in consequence."

Continue to Admit Pulp Free if Canada "Is a Nation"

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—Whether Canada is a nation or merely a dependency, not entitled to classification as a separate entirely in international parlance, is the question which must be decided by the United States Customs Court of Appeals when it meets here on October 1.

The dispute between the Treasury and importers, who maintain that pulpwood and paper should be admitted into the United States free of duty from certain European nations entitled to preferential treatment in trade relations under the favored nation clause, will be passed on them.

The case is on appeal from the Board of General Appraisers, and will be argued for the Government by Assistant Attorney-General Wemple, and for the importers by Albert H. Washburn, of New York.

The controversy is the outgrowth of the reciprocity law, which not only provided that pulpwood cut from private lands in Canada,—that is, lands other than Crown lands—should be admitted free of duty. This section of the bill passed.

Importers claim that in admitting pulpwood free of duty from Canada the United States was discriminating against Norway, Sweden, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Belgium, and demanded that pulpwood from these countries be brought in without payment of duty. The Treasury Department opposed this contention, and the Board of Appraisers held that there was no descrimination against the European countries.

It was contended that Canada was not to be regarded as a nation, and that the action affecting it did not set a precedent for complaint by the other nations who are enjoying favored treatment.

Turkey Receiving Advice From The European Powers

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 23.—Official papers which have been issued enumerating recent concessions made to the Albanians and the extension of simlar reforms to other provinces, make the unusual admission that these reforms are the result of advice tendered by the Ambassadors here and of conversations between the Ottoman Ambassadors abroad and the Foreign Ministers of the respective countries, notably Russia.

The display of deference towards the wishes of Europe is much commented upon in connection with the threatening situation in the Balkans. Peace negotiations are still the subject of discussion at the Cabinet Councils and there is a constant interchange of despatches with the Turkish delegates who are endeavoring to arrange a settlement with the Italian representatives in Switzerland.

Further trouble is reported in Samos, a Greek island off the west coast of Asia Minor. Profiting by the departure of a French and British warship, the Samian leader, Sofulis, secretly landed a body of men from the island of Nicaria, which recently proclaimed its independence. The Porte has despatched 800 troops from Samos to Smyrna, and it is reported that a battle is imminent.

The British and French warships have been instructed to return to Samos.

Says Woman was On His Back

CHICAGO, September, 23.—The names of the alleged New Westminster Bank of Montreal robbers who escaped from the Chicago police are J. S. Morgan, alias John Harris alias Frank Clark, alias "Chicago Slim," and Frank West, C. J. Porter, said to be another member of the band is believed to have gone to England. Morgan and Porter are about 43 years of age, while West is but 38. Pictures of the men and their Bertilon measurements were published in the police department bulletin to-day.

The many conflicting stories told by police officials in conection with the escape of the alleged bank robbers may lead to an aldermanic investigation of the entife affair, according to reports late to-night.

Lieutenant Burns made a statement last night in which he declared that a woman who leaped on his back and held him while the men beat him into unconsciousness was responsible for the escape of the bank robbers.

Judging by the quality of the product, it is no wonder we get so much free advice.

Diamonds Found In the Congo

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The Brussels correspondent of the Daily Mail telegraphs:

"The discovery of diamonds in the Belgian Congo has given rise to much discussion here. The following are the facts based on most careful inquiries: The largest discoveries have taken place in the Kassai district, close to the Portuguese frontiers. Some 600 diamonds were discovered in tributaries of the Kassai River.

"The discoveries were made by the Forestiere Miniere Company, a Belgian-American concern, belonging to the Brussels Societe Generale and Messrs. Guggenheim, Ryan, and others of New York.

"Te diamonds discovered, if not as valuable as the Kimberley ones, are at least as valuable, if not more valuable, than the diamonds of German Southwest Africa.

"Other discoveries have been made by prospectors of the Tanganyika Concessions, Ltd., a British concern, in the Katanga district, near Northern Rhodesia. Some diamonds were also discovered in the Mutendele River, a tributary to the Congo River, but at present no attention is being paid to them."

A SPIRITED YOUNG LADY WRITES OF HAIR AND HERPICIDE

I am really ashamed of some of my girl friends when I look at their hair. There is no sense in having such looking heads. It simply shows that while they may be scrupuously neat in every other way, they are careless about their hair.

Thin, scraggy, wispy hair generally indicates dandruff and dandruff is caused by a germ. Newbro's Herpicide will kill that germ and keep the scalp as clean and healthy as can be. This permits the hair to grow naturally and luxuriantly. That terrible itching which goes with dandruff stops with almost the first application.

Substitutes or remedies said to be "just as good" are sometime offered, but it is better to buy the genuine original germ killer, Newbro's Herpicide. There is no guess work about that preparation. A trial isn't necessary, just buy a bottle and use it The results are sure to be better than you expect.

Newbro's Herpicide in 50c and $1.00 sizes is sold by all dealers who guarantee it to do all that is claimed. If you are not satisfied your money will be refunded.

New Spelling In England

A campaign in favor of spelling reform is to be conducted in London and the provinces in the autumn and winter.

Mr. William Archer, under the auspices of the Simplified Spelling Society, is to conduct a lecturing tour on his return from the East, and lectures will also be delivered by many other well known men throughout the country.

The lecturers will advocate the reform of what they regard as the present 'chaotic spelling,' which they declare is so remote from pronunciation that it is no guide to the English language at all, and tends to degrade our speech.

The society desires to fix a standard of pronunciation of the English language throughout the Empire.

It has been stated that the English people in Australia and South Africa, are deviating so seriously from the general standard of speech prevailing in the mother country that the time might come when visitors from these parts of the Empire might fail to make themselves understood in London.

Mr. Tate, Director of Education in Melbourne, has suggested several spelling reforms to which effect has been given in the official papers issued by his department. Discussions have taken place and the Council of Public Education in Melbourne is addressing a letter to the president of the Board of Education in London, urging upon him, in the interest of education, the necessity of a general adoption of a simplified reform of spelling.

Two Killed and Twenty Injured

FRIENDSHIP, N.Y., Sept. 23.—Two persons were killed and a score were injured, three probably fatally, last night when an excursion train on the Pittsburg, Shawmut and Northern Railroad collided with a coal train at Nile, two miles wset of here. The wreck is said to have been due to a misunderstanding of orders.

THE DEAD

W. A. Harris, of Filmore, N.Y.

Miss Grace Marsh, of Portsville, N.Y.

W. H. Johnson, of Olean, engineer on the passenger train, will probably die.

Mrs. E. J. Scott, of Boliver, terribly crushed, will die.

Mrs. Ida Costello, Portaville, in a critical condition.

The wrecked passenger train was a regular Sunday excursion train which carried passengers from points along the Shawmut east of Olean to Story Brook, a summer resort between Hornell and Danaville. The crew of the excursion train had orders to take a siding at Friendship for an eastbound freight train.

In the Friendship yards the engineer saw a freight train standing on the siding, which he believed was the one he had orders to meet, and the excursion train pulled out from the west after discharging a few passengers.

The passenger train was running at the rate of about 40 miles an hour it collided with the freight train at Nile. The combination baggage and smoking car was badly wrecked, and all but one of the four day coaches were derailed. The injured are under treatment here.

Trouble Feared at Foo Chow, China

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—United States Consul John Fowler reported to the State Department from China today that a most serious situation has arisen at Foo Chow, and that great disorder is imminent. He reported that the chief of police there had taken advantage of his powerful position in the vicinity and is defying all superior authority. He has threatened to destroy the city. It is reported that Government troops are being sent from Pekin to subdue him. Great unrest and disorder prevails.

There are about one hundred American missionaries in the vicinity of Foo Chow and a few American business men. Consul Fowler did not request that a naval vessel be sent there, however so State Department officials conclude that foreigners are not in any danger.

Kills an Actress

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 23.—Thomas Harry Hector, a wrestler, shot and killed Lucille May, a pretty ingenue with a stock company, late last night, while she and her mother, Helen K. May, were in a restaurant at Vincennes, Ind.

This morning Hector's body was found in the pen of the Knox County Jail, swinging from a rope improvised from a towel. Hecton had planned the killing for four months, the girl's refusal to marry him being the cause. She had written to him on Sept. 12, bidding him good-bye and telling him that he had cruelly deceived her in not telling her until lately that he had a wife and daughter living at Bridgeville, Penn.

Among the letters left by Hector were three addressed to his wife, containing deeds of 160 acres of land in Maricopa County, Ariz. A hundred-dollar bill, four checks for $200 each, issued by the Valley Bank of Phœnix, and a deposit note for $250 in the same bank were also left. Across one envelope was written, "Enclosed find $100. Am sending you two envelopes, which I bequeath to you, with all my worldly goods. Best love to you and Nora (his daughter.)—Tom."

Another letter, addressed to his brother, James Hector of Vancouver, B.C., said: "I am sane and have figured for four months on this. If I can do you any good in the other life I'll try. And if there is anything in spiritualism you'll hear from me. Good-bye, all. Enclosed find $200 I owe you."

Strong Emotional Actress

LOUISE DUNBAR in "THE LIGHT ETERNAL"

There are few actresses on the American stage, aside from the transcendent stars, who can read lines in the classic drama as effectively as Louise Dunbar, who comes to the Griffin Opera House on Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 25-26, in the principal role of "The Light Eternal," a highly successful romantic drama of the early Christian period. Many competent critics contend she is among the most able Shakespearean actresses of the contemporary stage—first, because she has intelligence and has undergone a splendid apprenticeship in her art; and second, because she knows the value of music in words. Call it elocution, if you will—call it anything else; the fact remains that she knows how to give good writing the lilt and cadence that pleaseat the ear. Sometimes they call it "old-fashioned acting" when lines are read intelligently and with a ringing clarity. At the New Theatre in New York a year or so ago they called Rose Coghlan "old-fashioned," but all the wise little actresses of that company and of most of the companies playing New York sat quietly down at her feet and learned lessons in dramatic art. The same is true of Louise Dunbar—though Miss Dunbar has the added advantage of comparative youth, and her present role affords ample opportunity for the display of this particular detail of her histrionic equipment. Several big scenes fall to her lot in "The Light Eternal" and she dominates them masterfully. Of superb figure, fair of face and graceful of poise she fully visualizes the haughty Roman princess, projecting herself into he complex nature of the role with an abandon that is truly delightful. Her rich powerful voice is particularly effective in the reading of the poetic lines, and she plays the part with genuine feeling and intense emotional fire.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING

The annual Harvest Thanksgiving service of St. Luke's Church, was held on Sunday Sept. 22nd.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and fruit. The Rector was assisted in the services by Rev. A. L. Geen and Rev. W. Spencer, M. A., Rector of Camden East. Mr. Spencer preached at both services of Matins and Evensonn. He enforced upon the people the lessons of thinking about the mercies of God and thanking Him for them. Some few are inclined to be so taken up with summer pleasures, that they actually bid God good bye for their vacation time. There was a special musical programme well rendered by the efficient choir. Mr. Marshall, organist of St. John's Church, Portsmouth, presided at the organ. The collection at all services were for the organ fund.

He used many helpful passages from the Bible and spoke of Joseph, Joshua, and Daniel as three of the greatest citizens of the Old Testament. As Christian Citizens we will place God first, our neighbor second. Ending with the words "True Citizenship is based on God and the Bible."

Mr. J. W. Johnson made a few well cosen remarks. Making us proud of being citizens of Canada, and bringing out most clearly the tie between the Mother Country and our own land.

Mr. E. A. Ridley favored us with a solo in his usual fine voice entitled "Face to Face."

The meeting closed with singing "Onward Christian Soldiers," and the Mizpah Benediction.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

"THE THIRD DEGREE".

One of the dramatic sensations of the present season is Charles Klein's play, "The Third Degree." It is being presented in the principal cities and on one night stands with a company equal to the one that was one year at the Hudson Theatre in New York City. The story of this play will appear in condensed form profusely illustrated, in Saturday's edition of the Intelligencer. Every "Intell." reader should make it a point to procure a copy of this particular issue.

Tried to Break Jail

MOOSEMIN, Sask., Sept. 23.—On Friday night a prisoner named Baker in the provincial jail, sawed through the bars of his cell door and escaped into the corridors and attacked Turnkey McKinnon with a sandbag made with an old stocking filled with brickdust, used for polishing the kitchen knives. After a lively struggle he was overpowered.

New Manuals Issued

TORONTO, Sept. 23.—Manuals to be used in teaching English to French speaking pupils in Ontario schools have just been issued by the Education Department.

"The aim," says the book, "is to bring the French speaking child to a conditon similar to that of an English speaking child on entering school. It will, of course, require much repetition and practice to give the former the fixed, unconscious habit possessed by the latter of thinking and expressing his thoughts in English.

Aeroplanes in War

GENEVA, Switzerland, Sept. 23.—The question of the use of aeroplanes in time of war was reconsidered at to-day's session of the interparliamentary union, its approval by the conference, as announced last night, apparently having been voted under a misapprehenision.

After a long discussion today the resolution introduced by the Belgian minister of state, Auguste Bernært, interdicting the use of aeroplanes in war was adopted.

Gustave Ader, president of the international committee of the Red Cross, said that numerous protests had been received from Red Cross workers in the field against the Italians throwing explosives from aeroplanes. He added that the Italians denied the allegations.

The Italian delegates at the conference supported the proposal introduced by M. Bernaert, which also was approved of by some of the British and German representatives.

Make it Plain Pine or Ann Street

It is evident from the following communication that there is more or less resentment manifested in the matter of naming our new schools:

>
> Will the editor of this paper kindly name a city or town in Ontario in which a Public School has been named after a man prominent in politics? Names of this kind are apparently the only ones suggested by the School Board. Does the School Board not realize that the ratepayers of Belleville belong to both political parties, and that one party must necessarily resent such names as Pyne, Parker, or Bowell? Our two splendid new schools, for which the Board of Education deserves great credit, are worthy of the names of Patricia, Duke of Connaught, King George, etc.
> W. S. SMITH.

While we agree with the writer that it would be good policy to bar all politicians, particularly those mentioned, we question his ambition in aspiring to royalty, in that so high a title to so modest a structure would in our opinion appear most inappropriate. After the plain, but substantial custom of "ye olden tymes," let it be the simple Ann and Pine Street Schools, thus avoiding discord, and placing structure and title upon a harmonious equality.

Cattle Industry to be Revised

The new government is taking particular interest in agriculture. One of the first acts passed last session, despite the opposition of the Liberals, was a bill to encourage agriculture by giving subsidies to each province. Half a million dollars was voted for the purpose, and agreements have been signed with all the provincial governments, Liberal and Conservative alike, apportioning the subsidies according to population.

The local governments have taken hold of the scheme with enthusiasm and the system of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments is regarded as an admirable one. To further extend the system of co-operation, C. C. James, former deputy minister of agriculture for Ontario, and regarded as one of the greatest agricultural experts in the Dominion, is at present working out a scheme which will be laid before Hon. Martin Burrell very shortly.

Hon. Martin Burrell has been devoting his attention to the declining sheep industry, and as a result of his efforts there are already signs of a revival, particularly in the Maritime Provinces and British Columbia. The cattle industry of the West is another industry which has been threatening to almost disappear in recent years. Formerly Western Canada shipped great numbers of cattle to England; to-day the export trade has dropped to nothing, while there are not even enough cattle raised in the prairie provinces to supply the home market. Recently a conference was held in Winnipeg which was attended by representatives of the railways, stock associations, packers, etc. The government also lent its advice and assistance, and a serious effort will be made by the government to restore this declining industry, so that it will not only supply the home market, but again be on an exporting basis.

The first step has been the appointment by Hon. Robert Rogers of a commission to investigate the whole question of the grazing leases in Western Canada, and to determine what lands can be set aside as suitable only for grazing purposes. One reason for the disappearance in recent years of western cattle from the market has been the unsatisfactory condition of the grazing leases. Ranchers could never tell when they might be crowded out by homesteaders and settlers. The new commission will examine as to what lands are unsuitable for agriculture. These will be set aside for stock purposes and more permancy given the leases. This move has been demanded for some time and it is believed will go a long way towards reviving the live stock industry in the west.

The gross earnings of the Intercolonial are now averaging over $1,000,000 a month, the largest in the history of the road. This is not surprising, since for the first time in more than a decade the road is being operated as a business and not as a political proposition.

The following is taken from the Guelph Evening Mercury:

Hamilton Herald—The Spec boasts that in the last few months, more or less, it has published 6,000 exclusive items that the Herald didn't publish. We have carefully compared the news columns of thet wo papers, and have made the discovery that in the course of sevral months the Herald has published 11,894 exclusive news items that the Spec. missed. So there!

What a discovery. Surely the Guelph paper should be complimented for its untiring efforts in problematical research.

From the Kingston Daily Standard—"Sir Wilfrid Laurier in his speech at Haileybury admitted that the people didn't want reciprocity—as he had offered it. Which is rather a belated discovery since most people clearly realized that fact exactly a year ago when the result of voting in the general election was announced. Sir Wilfrid is not as keen of discernment as in his younger days."

It is rather more practical to be in possession of the symptoms before administering the remedy, a point which Sir Wilfrid had evidently overlooked.

So long as the Canadian Farmer can sell his cash grain at from five to eight cents a bushel higher than the American farmer can sell his—as is the case now—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's resurrected reciprocity idea will make little headway even among the men whose support he most counts on, namely, the farmer. They know which side their bread is buttered on.—Kingston Daily Standard.

And furthermore, the butter being of excellent quality (financially speaking) it will certainly entail some thoroughly convincing proof to influence our farmers to make a change in the brand.

The doctors want a Dominion Minister of Health. The miners want a Minister of Mines. Bigger countries than Canada get along with fewer Cabinet Ministers, and the Canadian voters' wonder is how the dickens they do it.

The London Daily News, in speaking with approval of Mr. Borden's speech at the Ottawa banquet, and referring to the danger of the people of Canada in expressing themselves to the "panic-mongers," said: "If the people of the dominions appreciate truly the strength and virility of these islands they will be proof against the appeals to the German peril." Why should the London Daily News want Canadians to play the role of parasites?

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

THE PRICE

WHO CAN ANSWER CY WARMAN'S QUESTION?

Montreal, Can., Aug. 17, 1912.
Editor, Toronto "Saturday Night."

Dear Sir,—I notice that the price of your paper has gone up from $2.00 to $3.00 a year, and from 5c. a copy to 10c. a copy. Thise represents an increase, wholesale, of 50 per cent, and an increase on the retail price of 100 per cent. My first concern was you. I was afraid that this long jump in the price of your publication would drive great numbers of your readers away. It is heartening to hear that instead of losing you have gained subscribers. I am informed that the increase in circulation is over 50 per cent., one man says your circulation has doubled since you doubled the price of your paper. I congratulate you. After all, it was hardly fair to expect you to take three cents' worth of white paper, cover it with conversation, and sell it to the trade for two and a half cents. Moreover, I presume you pay more for printers' ink, for machinery and men to run it. Even those brain workers who supply the thought waves and who are not protected by a labor trust must demand and doubtless receive higher pay than the rate which prevailed ten years ago.

I should like to ask you, while I have this human dictagraph in hand, if there was any protest, any grievance committee waiting in the outer office on the morning following this 100 per cent. uplift. Just now the railways all over this continent are having hard sledding, and if they could raise freight rates just a little bit, it would be a great relief. Of course no one would think of raising them one hundred per cent. or even fifty per cent., but if they could be raised one or two per cent., it would enable the poorest to sidestep the receiver and others to provide additional equipment with which to move the great crop which is coming to help the farmer, the manufacturer and the merchant. In fact, to help everybody but the railroad. The railroad will merely have that much more work to do, but the increase in gross will in all probability work a hardship instead of adding to the net revenue. As a matter of fact, American railways paid over three hundred thousand dollars during ten months of last year for the privilege of handling 32 million dollars worth of new business. That is to say, the business of the railway increased by 32 million dollars during these ten months, but the net earnings actually decreased. Everything that goes into the making of transportation which is a finished product, is going up in price from day to day. The price of day's work, of a whitelight or a locomotive, has just about doubled in the past twenty years, while freight rates are actually lower than they were twenty years ago. Now, out of our wisdom and experience, can you suggest any way for the railways to increase their rates, just a little bit, without going to jail?

Faithfully yours,
CY. WARMAN.

Civil Engineer For 66 Years

Taking his diploma as civil engineer at Montreal 66 years ago, Mr. William Rese Rombough, who died Friday night at the age of 91, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. David Hunter, 77 Grenville street, Toronto, was the oldest Dominion land surveyor in the Dominion. He was born in Napanee, and, with the exception of a slight stroke about 20 years ago, from which he speedily recovered, he had never had a day's illness in his life, death being the result of old age.

Mr. Rombough was one of the best known surveyors in the employ of the Provincial Government, and in addition to surveying the counties of Brant, Arthur and Bruce, he laid out several districts in the eastern end of the province, and constructed numerous large drains. He resided in Durham for about 42 years, and came to Toronto 12 years ago, having retired eight years previously.

He is survived by his wife, a lady 81 years of age, the couple having been married 55 years; and he also leaves two sons, John B., of Baltimore, and Marshall ., of Vancouver; four daughters Mrs. Van Norman, Vancouver; Mrs. P. A. Cellins, Winnipeg; Mrs. E. J. Cole, Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Mrs. Hunter, Toronto, and ten grandchildren.

Aviator Killed

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, Sept. 23.—Aviator Russell Blair of Kansas City was instantly killed this afternoon at Shenandoah, where he was giving a flight under the auspices of the fire department.

Blair's engine was not working well and he descended in a field to investigate the trouble. Most of the crowd had left the field when he started to fly back to the aviation field. When 50 feet in the air he struck an air pocket, and the biplane was thrown violently to the ground.

The planes crumpled like paper and Blair's neck broken by the force of the fall. He was 21 years old.

Simple Life For Royalty is The Keynote

LONDON, Sept. 23.—There is a wide-spreading notion that to be the son or daughter of a king or prince spells luxury and indulgence. As a matter of fact royal children generally lead the simplest and most regular of lives and have far less actual luxury than the children of many of the rich.

The English royal boys and girls in particular, have been plainly reared. When King George and Queen Mary were Prince and Princess of Wales they were far from rich. Clothes were handed down from one small boy to another, and little boots and shoes were soled and heeled until there was not much left to work upon.

Even now at Buckingham Palace life for the Princes and the Princess is still very simple. The plainest food is served, the plainest clothes are worn and the nursery of Prince John the youngest boy, would be despised by the sons of many rich men.

The Queen of Spain is emulating Queen Mary, her cousin by marriage, in every way and brings up her children in the simplest fashion. She has English nurses, directs them hersilf, has exchanged the silk and tapestries of the royal nurseries at Madrid for chintzes and figured wall paper and rigorously insists on much fresh air and sunshine as well as English milk puddings and junket for her children.

She and the King do buy many and expensive toys for their children, and every visit to England means the purchase of all sorts of the latest mechanical and electrical devices to interest small boys and girls.

The prettiest children of any reigning sovereigns are those of King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena of Italy, Princess Yolanda, the eldest daughter, who is 11, is unusually beautiful. Her skin is of light olive tint and has that delicate peach bloom peculiar to southern races. She has a wealth of soft, curling dark hair, exquisite features and large lustrous eyes.

The Crown Prince Humbert, Italy's future King, is a very handsome boy of 7. Princess Hafalda is the fairest of the family. There are glints of gold in her red brown hair and her skin is pink and white. Giovanna, the baby, promises to be like her eldest sister in type.

The children, though hedged about with every care, are brought up precisely like those of any middle class family. They rise before 7 and are at breakfast by 8. When at the Quirinal Palace in Rome lessons and a walk in the grounds occupy the greater part of the morning. The afternoon is devoted to a drive and preparing work for the next day. Bedtime comes very early.

Queen Helena spends a great deal of time in the plain, airy nurseries. During the first few months of their lives she has always bathed her children herself. She does not approve of too many toys and thinks it best to teach her children to use their minds and invent games for themselves. Pets are alowed in great numbers, and the stables at the Palace shelter a sort of menagerie of Prince Humbert's ponies, dogs, rabbits, guinea pigs and even a staid and very elderly tortoise.

Italy Keenly Interested

ROME, Sept. 23.—Notwithstanding the all engrossing subject of the war in Tripoli, the newspapers in the last few days have been full of discussion in reference to the new fact in Mediterranean politics—the displacement of the English fleet by the French in those waters—and theories about the possible and probable consequences of that course with regard to Italy.

All the Italian papers, however, agree in pointing out that the present movement of the French fleet is more a sign and symbol to the world of changes already made than any real change in itself, and that it does not presuppose any alteration in the traditional naval policy of Italy, which dates from the days of the Triple Alliance, but is a necessary and logical outcome of the system of alliances and understandings which flow rules Europe, of the altered conditions of the political atmosphere during the last ten years, and especially of the recent events in Tripoli and Morrocco.

The makers of the Triple Alliance, and particularly its great originator, Prince Bismarck, based their calculations not only on the traditional Anglo-Italian friendship, but also on what seemed to them to the equally traditional and probably unchanging Anglo-French antagonism.

The new colonial policy of Germany with the consequent desire for a powerful navy, and the policy initiated by King Edward VII in reply, which substituted Germany for France as an object of suspicion and as an antagonist of England, have made great changes in the relative positions of the powers that are chiefly interested in that great "highway of commerce," the Mediterranean. Italian political opinion, always acutely sensitive to anything affecting Italy's naval policy, is profoundly interested in the new problems whoich have come into existence, the solution of which may be of so much importance to her.

France's increased interest of late in colonial and naval affairs, her alliance with Russia, her understanding with England, and the comparatively recent friendliness of her ally, Russia, with her friend, England, has had the important result of unifying the naval interests and strategy of these three powers, especially those of France and England, so that the problem of the Mediterranean and the defence of English interests in it are and may be, to a great extent, entrusted to France.

The semi-official Tribune asks whether this new and important fact may not have the effect of drawing Italy nearer to the Triple Alliance, which until now has governed her continental policy only officially, and may lead her to see in the new naval development of Austria not a cause for suspicion but an assurance of strength and support.

Bomb Killed Fifty Turks

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—A special cable from Adrianople says:

Fifty persons were killed today during an anti-Turkish demonstration in Akchitschelebi, in the vilayet of Adrianople, when some one threw a bomb into the crowd of Turks who were just emerging from a mosque.

Fragments of the bursting bomb tore the bodies of some of the victims to pieces.

The Government immediately started an investigation, and gendarmes searched the houses of a number of alleged conspirators, arresting several men on suspicion.

The outrage is one of a series of similar demonstrations against the Turks in the Balkan States in the past year, which have claimed nearly a 1,000 lives.

"BURIAL OF VOICES"

The above is a photograph of an unique ceremony which took place a short time ago in Paris, when the "voices" of many celebrated Artists, such as Caruso, Tetrazzini, Melba and Farrar, were buried in record form for the benefit of future generations.

As Mr. Emile Berliner is the inventor of "His Master's Voice" Records, which alone bear the voices of these noted performers, naturally his face would be expected to be seen among those present.

The Order lost—

A Freight Elevator is the Great Cost Saver in Handling Goods.

Keeping Prices Below Competitors

THOUSANDS of orders are placed on the "price basis" every day. In machinery lines, quality is important, but the price counts equally as much. Success lies in keeping prices down, while keeping quality up. Economies pay the profit.

In handling heavy materials, the heavy cost of shifting and hauling about the shop either eats into the profits, or boosts selling prices.

In handling all kinds of goods, an Otis Fensom Freight Elevator will save you dollars every day. It cuts out unnecessary labor. It enables you to arrange your tools and stock so as to work most efficiently—without lost motions. You can store stock conveniently. You save money every way.

If you have more floors than one, it puts them all on the same level—makes the top floor as accessible as the ground floor for all kinds of purposes.

OTIS FENSOM FREIGHT ELEVATORS

An Otis Fensom Freight Elevator costs you very little. It saves a great deal. Probably you can have an equipment for much less than you think. Send for "Freight Elevators and Their Uses." It tells the story.

HAPPY THOUGHT

Why Bread is Better Baked in Some Ranges Than in Others

It is all a matter of the way the heat gets into the oven.

Some stoves have ovens that heat easily and quickly and remain very hot.

Others have ovens that require a wasteful amount of fire in the fire-box before baking heat is reached.

These are the two extremes. For some things each type has advantages. But for all your requirements neither is really satisfactory.

"Happy Thought" Ranges give you the heat in the oven that exactly corresponds with the fire in the firebox.

So a little fire means a light heat and a big fire means a perfect hot-blast in the oven.

In baking bread, this feature enables you to secure the benefit of every ounce of heat—to make every lump of coal pay for itself—to continue the heat steadily for as long as you wish in order to have the bread baked uniformly all the way through.

KINGSTON, Sept. 23.—Capt. Erskine, of the Queen's team, states that he expects Sylvester Quilty, last year's captain of Ottawa College, to play with Queen's this eason. The latter will start work this afternoon. Queen's has a number of "finds," and expect to have a fleet fourteen.

Coach Shaughnessy has issued an imperative call to the members of the McGill football squad to get down to business. He complains that valuable time is being lost by the men. Yesterday, he points out, the attendance was so small that a line-up could not be attempted. The serious work cannot be introduced until the squad has gone through several light practices.

OTTAWA, Sept. 21.—Discussing Tigers' chances and team, the Citizen to-day says: "The Hamilton Tigers will not be as strong as first reported. The loss of Gow, who died following an operation for appendicitis; Glassford who has jumped to the Alerts; George and Kid Smith, who have returned, and Art Olliver, who intends to remain in the west. Ther line is all shot to pieces, and their sreimmage will be entirely new."

TORONTO, Sept. 20.—University of Toronto held another good practice today on the campus, but Dr. Wright is handicapped by the absence of most of last year's players, who have not yet returned to College. However he expects by next week to have everybody on hand.

Howard Webster, who played on the half line of last year's seconds, was the only new player out last night. He is very fast, and can dodge. He played an excellent game for the seconds last year, and will be a hard man to keep of the senior half line and Brock is showing excellent form, and if he can improve his catching will make a good outside wing or half back. Pete Campbell is well pleased with the showing made by the players, and hopes to win another championship for the Blue and White.

President Jack Coughlan, of the Intercollegiate Football Union, issued a denial to the story emanating from Montreal to the effect that there would be no Dominion final this fall between the winners of the Intercollegiate and Interprovincial and Ontario Unions. Speaking in his capacity as head of the college body Mr. Coughlan said: "The rumor emanating from Montreal that the Intercollegiate champions would refuse to defend their title as Grey cup holders this season is absolutely without foundation. Canadian football followers may rest assured that the story is an absurdity and that the Intercollegiate winners will again play off when called upon to do so for the Dominion championship. The Intercollegiate association welcomes the strengthening of the Interprovincial and Ontario Union teams and entertains no fears as to the outcome of the final match." Coming from the Intercollegiate president, the above should set at rest a rumor, which caused a lot of talk in football circles.

TENNIS

McGill tennis players are hard at work in view of the intercollegiate to be played in Toronto on the first convenient date before October 12.

Mills from England, Jackson from South Africa, and Dempster from the wild and woolly west, being in evidence nearly every day on the tennis court. Seven men have been picked to form a team, but as only four positions are to be filled, the seven will play against each other until the best is left. In addition to this, any player who thinks he should be on the team can challenge any of the seven, and if the challenger makes good his boast he will have a good chance of gaining intercollegiate honors. The team is well balanced this year and their chances looks exceedingly bright. Last year the cadets of Kingston were the winners, McGill being a close second.

BASEBALL.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 20.—The Philadelphia club of the American League and the Buffalo club of the International League asked the National Baseball commission who was entitled to the services of Schang, each claiming that the other had not kept faith with it, and the commission is deciding the case here to-day pronounced the agreement entered between the two clubs antagonistic to the laws of the game, and for that reason declared it null and void.

The commission also issued a warning to all national agreement clubs that a severe penalty will be imposed on any club which becomes a party to an agreement which is antagonistic to the laws of the game and injurious to the interests of ball players.

Player Schang was obtained by draft from the Buffalo club by the Philadelphia American League club, and the above ruling removes all doubt as to the draft being valid.

Jury Let The Indian Go

SARNIA, Sept. 23.—The Indian, Kyoshk, charged with a double murder by shooting on Walpole Island, was acquitted Saturday after the jury had been out fifty minutes.

It was his second trial. He was convicted in the spring on the charge of killing one of the two victims, but a second trial was secured, after much difficulty, on the second charge, so that new evidence might be introduced. At yesterday's session Joe Williams, an Indian, and his wife and daughter, admitted having committed perjury in their evidence at the previous trial.

Justice Middleton, in his address to the jury, favored the prisoner. After the verdict, which was received with evident satisfaction by the audience in the court room, the judge told Kysohk that he was pleased with the verdict and was sorry that the prisoner would have to be held pending action by the Minister of Justice. It is taken for granted that the previous conviction and sentence of death will now be quashed.

It is not known yet what will be done with the witnesses who have admitted perjury.

The Science of Hypnotism Part of Curriculum

LONDON, Sept. 22.—The value of hypnotism and treatment by suggestion is being increasingly recognized, and many highly qualified physicans are making a specialty of psychic treatment. Enquiries show that the number of reputable practitioners will now probably increase rapidly.

The most recent investigation has shown that the secret of medical hypnotism and suggestion lies in the application thereof to a deeper subconscious part of the mind, that deeper layer, so to speak, of the mind of which we are unconscious under ordinary circumstances, and which in course of time makes use of newly non-acquired language or movement which are practically systematic, as it does in daily habits or actions, such as eating and walking, during which the conscious mind is enabled to concentrate itself on its daily work. This subconscious mind is found to be closely connected with the bodily functions, and, moreover, is very impressionable to ideas suggested from without. The physician, therefore, endeavors to give such suggestion as may act upon the patient's subconscious mind, and through that on the illness. For this treatment the physician asks the patient to rest with closed eyes so that the ordinary sounds and impressions will not interfere. The best authorities here do no put their patients to sleep, as by this method they do not come under the influence of the physican except as regards symptoms. Many specialists never attempt to hypnotize their patients. The discovery of the power of mental suggestion has divested psychic treatment of its former uncanny attributes which used to be so exaggerated by story-tellers as to bring it in the category of medical electricity, baths, massage, etc.

The subject has not yet been taught in the medical schools here, but is the topic of discussions in the leading medical societies. The system is used chiefly for trouble affecting the mind and nervous system. The best results obtained by mental suggestion investigation has shown was in a large group of mind and nerve ailments wherein only rational treatment was used, based on the understanding of the influence of mind or health.

LACROSSE

The proposed post-season lacrosse match between the Nationals and Irish-Canadians, which was to have been played in Quebec, has been declared off, and the players of all the local senior teams have definitely hung up their sticks for the season.

The Nationals have been offered $100,000 for their lacrosse grounds at Maisonneuve—an immense increase over the sum they originally paid for their property. The idea is to use it for commercial purposes.

The Cornwall Lacrosse team, champions of the Natonal Union, and challengers for the Minto Cup, are now well on their way to the Pacific Coast, where they play the New Westminster team two weeks' hence for the world's championship. Nearly everyone who doesn't reside in Cornwall (and some who do live there) concedes the superiority of the Pacific Coast club and predicts that the Fatcory Town people will be snowed under, but the Colts are confident that they will make a good showing, and Capt. O'Neil has declared that they had no intention of gathering an all star team for the occasion. Instead, they will play the regular twelve that won out in the N. L. U. Don Cameron, Fid Cummins, 'Newsy' Lalonde, Dalton Phelan and other Cornwall boys are in the west, however, and if badly beaten in the first game the N. L. U. champions may sign on a few of them for the second match. They will be away about three weeks.

According to the Vancouver 'News-Advertiser' there will be many new faces on the coast teams next summer, Tommis Gifford, Jimmy Gifford, Bill Turnbull and Pat Feeney, of the Royals, will lay down their sticks, while 'Con' Jones will lose Harry Griffith, Bones Allen, George Matheson and Henry Pickering.

Eddie Powers, George Kalls, Petie Barnett, Guy Smith and Donnie Smith may accompany Jimmy Murphy to Victoria to play in the British Columbia league next year, which will necesitate further scouting on the part of the Queen City teams to recruit their depleted ranks for next year's proceedings.

SOCIALISTS TO STRIKE

Agitators Want Universal Suffrage in Belgium.

Since the Conservative Elements In the Government Have Set Their Face Against Extending the Vote Half a Million Workers Plan to Go Out and Tie Up the Transportation and Industries of the Nation.

Brussels, Sept. 24.—A great general strike is projected by the Socialists of Belgium in support of a universal suffrage amendment to the constitution. Hostilities against the Government which has resolutely set its face against the desired legislation, will begin in November. Half a million workers, it is calculated will be involved in the strike, which, it is proposed shall last six weeks at a cost to their funds estimated at ten millions of dollars.

The railways, the postal and telephone services, mines, docks, arsenals, factories and workshops of all kinds are to be involved in what its promoters contend will be a bloodless campaign. Women seem as earnest as the men in the propaganda, which reaches throughout Belgium. Promises of substantial financial support have been received, the committee officials aver, from the United States, France, England, Germany, Sweden and elsewhere, and arrangements have been completed, according to the same authority, to send forty thousand children to temporary homes in the north of France on the declaration of the strike.

The thoroughness of the Socialist leaders who are engineering this movement is in evidence on all sides. All extra work in the mines has been strictly avoided so that there shall be no accumulation of coal stocks against the evil day. Similar action has been taken in factories and workers are limiting the output strictly to the quantities necessary to meet requirements from day to day. Any attempt to depart from this rule is prevented by the workmen. In the homes of the workers the strictest economies are being observed so that funds may be available when the weekly wages cease to come in and the men and women are saving up their money as though for their annual holiday.

In spite of the announced desire of the committee that the peace shall be in no way disturbed during the strike, such vast numbers of revolvers have found their way into the hands of workmen that the Government has issued special instructions to burgomasters, police and gendarmes to round up all arms.

GRAND TRUNK SYSTEM NEWS ITEMS

According to a western despatch Messrs. Franklin Bratt and George D. Hall, two landscape architects from Boston, have reachd Fort George, B. C., where they will platt a townsite for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway on the Indian Reservation recently purchased by the company. Both of these gentlemen were connected with the planning of Prince Rupert. For the past three months, continues the report, Engineer P. S. Gill and a considerable staff has been at work on the Reserve making a careful topographical survey and map of that area which have now been completed.

A novel method of disposing of the scraps of tin left around the canneries has been discovered by the fishing companies around Prince Rupert on the Grand Trunk Pacific. Germany supplies the children of the world with cheap toys and in their manufacture these odds and ends are used. Only recently the steamer Celtic of the Coast Steamshp Company arrived at Vancouver from he Skeena River and Rvers Inlet with some 5,000 cases of canned salmon and a shipmen of 40 tons of scrap tin which will go to the toy makers of Germany.

A quarter of a million dollars will be spent by the Jasper Park Collieries, Ltd., on a new permanent plant which they are installing at their mines in Jasper National Park on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, west of Edmonton. The mines are backed by American and local capital and a party of wealthy financiers, all interested in the mine are in Edmonton today, having just returned from a trip out west where they have spent several days going over the property.

Right in the heart of the Jasper National Park, situated on a high plateau, commanding magnificent views of Mount Miette and other stalwart peaks of the Canadian Rockies, is springing up a well-ordered and well-built mining village, having its own church and stores, school and hospital. About fifty houses have already been built, of which 40 are occupied by the men and the rest are adapted for offices, stores and for management purposes. Another 40 houses for the men will be erected almost at once.

A Water plant, with reservoir on the mountain side above the village has been put in at a cost of $10.000.

The machine shop, power house, supply shops, etc., are nearly completed, and it is expeted that the mines will be in full operation by Dec. 1.

Last month the number of men on the pay roll was 227, and when the mine is in full operation, producing its full output of 2,000 tons per day of ten hours, the number will be increased to 500. At present, a number of men are employed on development work, though the mine is producing about 10,000 tons of coal per month.

Practically evry ton of coal that the company can produce is taken by the Grand Trunk Railway, which is using the Jasper Park Collieries' coal, on the service west of Edmonton on Jasper Park coal. The coal is a high grade bituminous coal, of a very fine coking quality, and it is able to take the place of the coal now being imported from Crow's Nest and Pennsylvania.

Financied by English capital and owning some 12,000 acres of land near the point where the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway crosses the Pembina river, the Pembina Coal Company, Ltd., will also go right ahead with the development of its property, and next spring will be turning out hundreds of tons of coal per day from its mines.

A number of British financiers who are now touring the west under the Directors and Shareholders of the Grand of the Canadian Agencies, Ltd., yesterday went out to the company's property, being conveyed over the G. T. P. in a special train. The party included Sir Ronald Lane, president of the company; A. M. Grenfell, R. N. Grenfell, Capt. Newton, W. E. Stavert, Barrington Kennet, Captain Machell, W. J. Chalis and Forbes Sutherland.

The adjourned annual meeting of the Directors and Shareholders of the Grand Trunk Paific Railway Company were held recently in the General Offices of the Company on McGill Street. Mr. Alfred W. Smithers, Chairman of the London Committee, presided and the meeting was attended by Mr. F. J. Chamberlin, President, and Messrs, Wm. Wainright, M. M. Reynolds, W. H. Biggar, E. H. Fitzhugh, E. B. Greenshields, E. R. Wood, J. R. Booth, and Jules Home. Beyond the election of directors and officers for the ensuing year and business transacted was of a routine character. Good progress was reported in the construction werk of the main line as well as on branch lines, the latter comprisng approximately 2,000 miles, which the company have at present under construction in the western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, which make connection at many different points with the main line.

Track-laying on the main line to the Pacific Coast has now reached mile 1100 west of Winnipeg, which is in British Columbia, beyond the Rocky Mountains.

Track-laying from the Pacific Coast at Prince Rupert easterly has also reached mile 176 at Hazelton, B. C. This leaves a section to be constructed of about 460 miles, which however, is all under contract, and the work is being carried to completion as rapidly as the character of the country and the labor supply will permit.

On account of the large amount of work that is being done throughout the country in almost every direction at the present time labor is not as plentiful as could be desired, and final completion of the railway will depend largely on the supply of labor that can be obtained. The Chairman and President have recently returned from a trip through the country to the coast reported prosperous conditions in the west with a bountiful harvest, which will tax the capacity of present railway facilities to handle, but every action is being taken by the Company to meet these conditions to the greatest extent possible.

The directors elected at the meeting to day were as follows:—

Alfred W. Smithers
Sir Henry Mather Jackson, Bart.
Sir Felix Schuster, Bart.
Sir Wm. Henry White, K. C. B.
E. J. Chamberlin
Wm. Wainwright
M. M. Reynolds
E. H. Fitzhugh
W. H. Biggar
E. B. Greenshields
Hon. R. Dandurand
Wm. M. Macpherson
Hon. George A. Cox
E. R. Wood
J. R. Booth

Mr. Jules Home is the director on the board appointed by the Government under the agreement with the company respectng the construction of the eastern division.

The newly elected directors were Sir Felix Schuster, Baronet, and Sir Wm. Henry White, K. C. B. who are directors on the London Board of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and serve in their turn on the Grand Trunk Pacific Board.

The following officers were elected:—

E. J. Chamberlin,	President
M. Donaldson,	Vice-President & General Manager.
Wm. Wainwright,	Vice-President
M. M. Reynolds	"
J. E. Dalrymple,	"
Henry Phillips,	Secretary
Frank Scott,	Treasurer

The annual meeting of the directors and shareholders of the Grand Trunk Pacific subsidiary companies were also held this morning, and routine business transacted.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

CANADA AND EMPIRE

Premier Borden Expounds His Imperial Creed.

The Dominion's Needs Will Not Be Forgotten, But the Call of the British Empire at the Present Moment Is an Urgent One, He Says, In His Address Before 7,000 Persons at Banquet In Toronto.

Toronto, Sept. 24.—Enthusiasm and more enthusiasm on the patriotic and truly Canadian and British side of citizenship had full rein in the magnificent new Arena last night when Premier Borden was tendered a non-partisan reception and banquet by the Board of Trade. Fifteen hundred guests added to the ordinary seating capacity of the Arena constituted an audience which may easily have exceeded 7,000. The decorations were simple, but ample. The great girders were pearled with electric lights and a huge crown gemmed with colored lights was suspended from the centre of the roof. The proceedings were prompt, and G. T. Somers, president of the Board of Trade, who was in the chair, was admirable in the position, and his address struck a pleasant note.

It fell to Sir James Whitney to open the speech-making, which he did in proposing Mr. Borden's health. Sir James moved off like a stately three-decker and fired double-shotted salutes to the glory of the Empire.

"We have met here to-night to do honor to our own Prime Minister," declared Sir James Whitney, when proposing the health of Mr. Borden, "under the auspices of one of the most important commercial organizations of Canada.

"When the Prime Minister went to Great Britain, conditions in England were in a critical state," said Sir James. "The political atmosphere was charged with high explosives, which called for the greatest diplomacy.

PREMIER BORDEN.

"Our distinguished Prime Minister received a most royal welcome, and what he said and did are now matters of history, and will be written on the future pages of history. He did his duty so remarkably well, and conducted himself with such rare dignity, prudence and skill. So much so, that Sir George Reid of Australia said that he elicited the whole hearted admiration of all classes in Great Britain.

"He also kept himself free from party entanglements, to which the Government leader is so apt to come in contact. He comes back with a knowledge of conditions, and a solution, though not complete, they will be supplemented in time to the satisfaction of all Canadians."

It was only after a prolonged burst of cheering, and table pounding, and applauding that made the wide arena ring, that Mr. Borden was able to speak. Then he spoke, dealing chiefly with problems of country and Empire and only alluding long enough to the Government's naval policy to say that there would be no announcement until Parliament met.

Mr. Borden evoked a burst of applause when he gave as his creed, "that in so far as I have seen my duty I have endeavored to do it; and that I hope will be course through all my life.

"It has been born in upon me that no matter how great the heritage of Canada the heritage of Empire is infinitely greater. I come back to this country more than ever inspired with the ability of the statesmen of the Motherland to work out those problems that will confront the Empire.

"I was told that all through Europe the visit of the Canadian Ministers was receiving as much attention as in the British Isles.

"The maintenance of the Empire depends upon the maintenance of a sure path across every ocean," and continuing upon this subject, Mr. Borden suddenly referred to the Government's policy regarding Imperial defence, but those that thought he might dilate fully on the naval policy were disappointed. He went on:

"It is not for me to make any announcement to you for although an audience like this is a great temptation to a speaker to be indiscreet, I will stand by the rules of the constitution. And I must delay any announcement until the Governor-General calls us together at Ottawa and permits us to deliberate on matters of state."

After alluding to Canada's growth and the welding together of scattered communities by Sir John Macdonald, Premier Borden, and great applause met his words, said, "that God grant that our relations with our neighbors to the south will always be as friendly as they are to-day.

"Our great inland waterways and our railways should be supplemented by great highways. I hope it will be the aim of the Provincial and Federal Governments to lend such aid that will enable the development of roads that will be the equal of any in Europe, and of those being built in the country to the south. Not that we will divert from any of our policies of the past."

Coming back to his mission to the Mother Country, Mr. Borden declared: "I told them there that Canadians would not shirk their responsibilities when the needs of Empire arose, but Canada would not be an adjunct, but would demand to be allowed to assist. When peace or war are to be declared, this country in its place in the Empire, would demand and ought to have, some corresponding voice in the discussions of the issues that mean peace or war."

N. W. Rowell, leader of the Ontario Opposition, who proposed the toast of the Canadian Parliament, paid tribute to Premier Borden as the most influential man in the present administration. "And, although I am not always possessed of the same sentiment and opinions as Sir James Whitney, it affords me great pleasure to be able to concur with him on this occasion," he declared.

When dwelling upon the gradual growth of governmental administration in the country, the Opposition leader declared that Canada was no longer a colony, but a self-governing portion of the British Empire. He referred to the words of Balfour, who said, when speaking of Canada: "It is one of a coalition, not a colony dependent, but a free, self-governing community, which is an integral part of the Empire." It is the business of every loyal Canadian to help to maintain the unity of that Empire, consistent with the free, self-governing principles of these oversea dominions, said Mr. Rowell.

Other speakers were Hon. W. T. White, Hon. A. E. Kemp, Hon. Mr. Pelletier and Hon. Geo. E. Foster.

INQUIRY WILL BE WIDE.

Investigation Into Duncan Charges Begins In Toronto.

Toronto, Sept. 23—The investigation by the city police commissioners as to the alleged laxity of Inspector of Detectives Walter Duncan in handling the papers of the Farmers Bank case promises to be much more far-reaching than was originally supposed. Evidence was taken at the initial sitting yesterday which went to show that there had been more or less general dissatisfaction and lack of confidence on the force itself with Inspector Duncan's handling of police matters.

Certain officers went so far as to say that the inspector's veracity was frequently called in question on the force, and that he had more than once endeavored to shift blame for alleged indiscretions of his own to other members of the force. A number of newspaper men were called to testify that the inspector had given them access to the papers in question, while the trend of all the evidence was to the effect that a friendly understanding existed between the inspector and Percy Haverson, a reporter on The World, through which the latter was accorded privileges denied to other newspaper men. The hearing resumes to-day.

Three Shot for Importing Negroes.

Muskogee, Okla., Sept. 24.—Because they imported negro cotton pickers to Briartown, where negroes never have been allowed to stay, three farmers, Sam Robinson, W. A. Lorrimore, and J. N. Hilton, were shot Sunday night. More trouble is feared.

Prof. Dickie Kills Himself.

London, Ont., Sept. 24.—Prof. Dickie, who came here from Belfast, Ireland, some time ago and has been lecturing anatomy at the Western Medical College, deliberately committed suicide in his boarding-house yesterday.

Going into the bathroom he stuffed towels under the door and then turned on the gas. He left a short note to the janitor begging his pardon for the trouble he was going to cause. Dickie was 35 years old and unmarried. Worry over ill-health is supposed to be the cause of suicide.

Chicago "Raffles" a Lunatic.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—Jacob Fay Guthrie, known as "the educated burglar," who is charged with having stolen $250,000 worth of valuables from the homes of society people, was arraigned for trial yesterday, but when he confronted the judge he threw a cuspidor at a deputy sheriff. Then he began to snarl and show his teeth so menacingly that spectators fled from the court room. His case was continued. It was said he would be sent to an asylum.

Bulgaria Now Warlike.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 24.—An investigation of conditions in Bulgaria discloses unanimity of sentiment that that country is on the eve of a long-cherished war against Turkey. Unless the conferences which the Russian Foreign Minister, M. Sazanoff, will have in London with British statesmen are fruitful for Macedonia, the war party is likely to gain the upper hand. The army is already taking papers which have been issued enumerating recent concessions made to the Albanians and the extension of similar reforms to other provinces make the unusual admission that these reforms are the result of advice tendered by the ambassadors here, and of conversations between the Ottoman ambassadors abroad and the Foreign Ministers of the respective countries, notably Russia.

Careful of McManigal.

Los Angles, Cal., Sept. 24.—Ortie McManigal, who is to be the chief witness for the prosecution in the dynamiting case to be tried in Indianapolis, is on his way to the Indiana capital, where he is due to arrive to-day.

It became known yesterday that McManigal left the county jail Saturday with three detectives. It was planned to leave the train a short distance from Indianapolis, to take McManigal to the county jail in an automobile.

Laurier's Ontario Tour.

Ottawa, Sept. 24.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, back from his tour of Northern Ontario, will spend this week in Ottawa, starting out again next week on a tour of the older parts of the province, beginning at Cornwall on Monday.

FORECASTS BLOCKADE.

Grain Growers' Organ Says U. S. Route Must Be Used.

Winnipeg, Sept. 24.—Under the caption of "A Grain Block Unavoidable," The Grain Growers' Guide will say to-day:

"All signs point to a congestion in the movement of grain this fall far worse than that of last fall and winter—bad as it was. The exceptional rainfall during the harvest has delayed cutting as well as threshing. The weather last fall was unfavorable and the crop movement was greatly delayed. But the grain at this time last year was moving in treble the volume it is at the present time, and this season's crop is considerably in excess of the 1911 crop.

During the two weeks ended September 21 there were only 1,298 cars of western spring wheat passed inspection, as against 4,492 for the same weeks last year. The continued rain of last week which visited all three provinces delayed threshing still more and the crop movement will probably be from ten days to two weeks later than last year.

"With these facts in hand it is imperative that every effort be put forth to meet these most exceptional conditions. The railways will not be able to handle the grain that is offered them. There is not enough elevator capacity to accommodate the immense quantity of grain that cannot reach the lake front before the close of navigation.

"Since the doors to the southern market are closed and locked the best remedy in sight is to have through railway rates to the south. These through rates to the south were in force for a time last winter and afforded a great deal of relief. But they were not put into effect soon enough. It is the plain duty of the Dominion Government and the three transcontinental railways to make arrangements at once with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington by which the southern route may be thrown open early."

Upset Murder Motive

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Burton W. Gibson, defending himself against the charge of strangling the Countess Szabo of Greenwood Lake on July 16, to-day, through his counsel, insisted that he gave $7,100 of the money derived from the estate of the Viennese woman to her mother.

This is regarded as one of the defence's best cards. It is largely upon the disposition of this estate that hangs the charge of murder. The assumed motive is that Gibson killed the Countess to get for himself the dollars she left in four savings banks. If he can establish the fact that he paid the money to another, who had all of the essential proofs of her title to it, he destroys the murder motive theory.

Gibson announced he would bring into court the woman to whom he paid the money, with three witnesses to prove that the Countess herself had introduced this woman as her mother. Against this contention, the consulate of Austria-Hungary will present Franz Menschik, who says he is a brother to the Countess, and who swears that their mother died two years before the making of the alleged will by which Gibson came into control of the estate as executor.

The mother-in-law usually has a good deal to say, but about all the poor old father-in-law has to do is to pay the freight and say nothing.

A good way for a man to discover that he doesn't know a woman is to marry her.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—After being a man without a country for some time, Frederick Starkey, of Bristol has proved his right to remain in England, but he will stay here under restraint.

Last December, Starkey was arrested and convicted on a charge of theft. On telling the court that he was an American, he was ordered deported. On reaching the United States the man was refused admission on the ground that he was an undesirable alien. The American government sent him back to England and the Bristol authorities immediately shipped him to France.

Starkey was imprisoned there on the charge of being without a passport and after serving his sentence he stowed away and again arrived at Bristol. His record was then examined and it was found he is a British subject.

Mother Had Presentment

Having a premonition that something would happen to her son, and that she would not see him alive again, Mrs. Crowthers, of 383 Woodville Ave., Toronto, begged her son Fred not to go on his proposed trip to Hamilton recently.

Crowthers, however, who was a C. P. R. brakeman, laughed at his mother's fears, and told her not to worry, and that he would be alright. He left on a train as a passenger.

When near the junction switch Crowthers tried to jump from the moving train, but his heel caught in the step and he was thrown under the moving wheels. Both legs wer cut off, one at the knee. Taken to the hospital, he was attended to right away, but he died at four o'clock this morning.

Crowthers was only 19 years of age and lived with his mothers and sisters in West Toronto. The family lived in Hamilton before coming to the city.

Testing Chicago Air

A laboratory on wheels began yesterday the work of testing Chicago atmosphere for impurities on behalf of the electrification committee of the Association of Commerce. The motor waggon in which the testing apparatus is mounted took up its station in South Clark street, just north of Twelfth street. Smoking railway engines ran up and down near by.

H. F. Main, who has charge of the laboratory for Mariner & Haskins, chemists, explained his apparatus. Air is drawn through a series of flasks from a filter in the top of the waggon by means of an electrically driven fan. The amount of air which passes through the flasks is measured by a gas meter of tested accuracy. When a test is completed the amount of dust and gases in the air can be determined.

The automobile laboratory is to be taken all over Chicago. It is believed the tests will show the disadvantage Chicago is under in permitting smoking engines and serve as as argument for electrification.

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

"I like you, Captain 'Addon; you are a purpose-like fellow, if one may so speak of a gentleman. You look like one as has had his fingers dipped in the tar bucket, and knows how to serve a rope without being ashamed of it."

For many days and nights our voyage was pleasant and prosperous and the weather fair and fine, with nothing to vary the intense monotony of those days and starry nights—the sameness of the scene, where the blue sky met the blue sea around us—save the petrel tripping along, the occasional appearance of a gliding shark, or a whale upheaving its vast brown bulk, to remind us of Sindbad's floating isle, painting the ship or bending new canvas on her, a passing sail, to often hull down—i.e., before the horizon—or a piece of driftwood floating past, suggesting

But still the good ship Wanderer sped on, until one day, after a run of seventeen hundred miles or so, we were becalmed within some thirty leagues of the island of Ascension. The wind had completely failed us, and the Wanderer lay upon the waveless sea like a log in a dead calm. Not a sail was in sight, and all around the eye could scarcely tell where sky and ocean met. Both were of the same pale and almost colourless hue, the result of fierce heat and white haze, for the sun was blazing hot overhead and the pitch was oozing out of the planks even beneath the awning of canvas which Walmer for our comfort aft had rigged over the quarter-deck.

In vain we whistled for the lagging wind, and cast little bits of charred wood overboard to discover which way the stream went, for it simply rose upward and melted away. Aloft the dogvane hung pendant and motionless, while blocks and cordage and brailed up canvas flapped heavily, and at times with a sound like thunder, on the stilly air, as the great ship rolled to and fro on the long, slow, and huge upheavals of the glassy sea.

On each of these occasion the loose rigging would form bends and the canvas be puffed out as if a coming breeze had caught them, and flap, as I have said, with a terrible thud on the spars again.

Dreamily, and lost in thought, I was leaning over the starboard quarter, gazing listlessly at each successive heave that rolled glittering past the counter, and wondering by what mysterious agency the water rose and fell thus without wind, and where the distant storm had been of which this submarine commotion was the result, when suddenly I heard the voice of Walmer shouting:

"Lower the port quarter-deck, Mr. Hawsewood. Clear the fall-tackle and out with fenders—handsomely, now—and shove off, for these rollers are heavy enough to swamp her under the counter."

"Ay, ay, sir; all right. I'll soon overhaul it for you," replied Hawsewood.

"To pass it would never do. Their turn to-day may be ours to-morrow."

"What is the matter?" I asked.

"Not much; only a message from the sea."

"In what form?"

"A pleasant enough form when one sees it on the table, full of fine old crusted port, or pale, dry dinner sherry."

"I don't understand," said I, a little pettishly.

"Do you see what is floating yonder?"

"Where?"

"To starboard."

"Yes".

And there, about forty yards from the ship, a common black quart bottle was visible, floating steadily on the glassy sea, and not bobbing up and down as a corked bottle usually does when the waves are in motion.

Very little will rouse curiosity and cause excitement on board of a ship during the monotony of a long tropical voyage.

The sailmaker, who was busy with needle and thread on a new set of studding sails; black Jumbo, who was half melted in his galley while preparing the day's junk and pea-soup; the watch below, who lay dozing on their bunks; the cabin boy, who was laying the table, and all hands came tumbling up to line the vessel's side, while Bill Hawsewood, with one seaman, pulled off in one of the quarter-boats, and soon brought the bottle on board.

It proved to be a common quart bottle, evidently of English make, and it formally taken down to the cabin by Captain Walmer. It was found to be firmly corked, and to have a little piece of paper, evidently damp, lying at the bottom of it.

"Bad news of some poor craft upon the sea, or perhaps under it by this time," said Walmer, as the cabin boy brought a cork-screw, and Hawsewood, Joe Rudyard, the second mate, Mullins, the boatswain, and I drew near, and we could see the brown faces of several of the crew, full of expectation and curiosity, bent over the open skylight.

The piece of damp paper was extracted, carefully smoothed out, and was read thus:—

"Ship Eugenie, from Cape Town to Jamaica, foundered in south latitude 7 deg. 55 min. 56 sec., west longitude 14 deg. 23 min. 50 sec. Every boat destroyed, and all the crew and passengers lost, save one woman and ten men who are now on a raft, and hourly expecting it to go to pieces. God help us!"

"The Eugenie from Cape Town!" I exclaimed, in a voice so full of grief and terror as to be quite unlike my own.

"Heavens—good heavens!" cried honest Jack Walmer, as he rushed to the locker, and gave me a glass of brandy.

"She must have gone down somewhere hereabouts," added Hawsewood, quite calmly.

Again and again, with dim eyes, and a heart wrung by the most terrible emotions, I read that little scrap of damp paper, so hastily pencilled under circumstances so appalling, till every word of it seemed to be burned into my brain in letters of fire.

The handwriting seemed somehow to be familiar to me; but whose it was I could not determine. However, it was not that of Clarice.

"Come, come, my good friend," said Walmer, clapping me kindly on the back, "take heart of grace. They might have been picked up by some passing craft."

"They—who?" I asked vacantly.

"Those survivors on the raft."

"It was hourly expected to go to pieces."

"But it may not have gone to pieces after all."

"The latitude and west longitude given on that ere slip o' paper are nearly the bearings of the island of Ascension," said Hawsewood, who, after running his eye over a chart, was recording the message word for word, carefully and methodically, in his log-book.

"You are quite right, Bill", said Walmer aprovingly, "and at Ascension we may hear something about them."

"Do you think so, Walmer?" I asked, looking at him helplessly and hopelessly, while my tongue became parched, and I felt that my face was white and pallid.

"There is always a chance."

The woman on the raft—who was she? Was she my own Clarice or her sister Fanny, a servant or another lady passenger? And was Douglas one of the ten unfortunate men?

These surmises flashed like lightning on my mind.

After glancing at the chart—

She must have gone down just near where we are now," said Mullins, "some eighty miles or so off Ascension; and a tough gale she must have encountered, sir, for she was one of the best craft as ever was slipped off the dog-shores at Blackwall, was that ere Eugenie."

"Eighty miles—and on a raft," said Hawsewood thoughtfully. "The Lord only knows what those poor folks may have endured."

"And how they may have fared," added Mullins; eating one another without salt, mayhap."

"I've known of such things," said Bill Hawsewood.

"Stop, Bill," said Walmer peremptorily.

But Bill was too full of his morbid subject, and would not be stopped.

"I have known o' such things being done in my time," said he, pushing his straw hat back to enable him to scratch his brown, curly poll with great facility. "When I was a bit of a cabin boy on board the Jackal, of Yarmouth, and when within three days of Porto Piu, in the island of Fayal, we fell in with a water-logged ship in a heavy gale of wind, when there was such a sea running as no boat could live in, so we never thought of lowering one. We laid the main course a trifle to the mast, though it was close reefed, and passed her slowly. She was evidently timber laden, half dismasted, and could never sink. A living woman, half dead to all appearance, was lashed aloft in the minzentop, to keep her out of the waves that were surging like mad over the deck, which was flush with the sea; and in the main shrouds there was the body of a dead man, lashed by the wrists, and on him, so help me bob, the survivors had been supporting what the doctor called 'exhausted nateure.' We could assist them in no way, even at the risk of the ship and of our lives, so we wer obliged to fill the yard again, and bear away into the mist and the coming night; but the wailing cry of despair as them poor souls gave over the sea when they saw us leave them went straight to the heart of every man on board the Jackal."

DRIVING HIM TO THE GRAVE

"Fruit-a-tives Saved my Life"

NIAGARA FALLS, ONT., JULY 26th, 1911.

"For thirteen years, I was a terrible sufferer from the tortures of Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation and Vomiting. I could not retain much food, and this, together with the pain, and headaches, was driving me to the grave.

Then I used "Fruit-a-tives" and almost at once I got relief.

"Fruit-a-tives" stopped the vomiting, relieved the Constipation, toned up the stomach, and gave me the first relief in years. I feel that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives" and for the sake of other victims of Indigestion and Headaches, I will allow this statement to be published."

HARRY DICKINSON.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c, or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Pure Food Laws

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—The greatest activity in the prosecution of violators of the food and drugs act has been displayed during the administration of President Taft.

More than one thousand cases have been successfully prosecuted since March 4, 1909. Since that date fines aggregating $30,000 have been assessed against defendants in criminal cases, with costs equal or greater amount, and decrees of condemnation and forfeiture have been taken against more than five hundred shipments of food and drugs.

Reports received by the department of agriculture from its labratories in different sections of the country show that the successful prosecutions of violators of the food and drugs act have produced a marked improvement in the sanitary conditions of factories and in the quality of food and drugs which are shipped in interstate commerce in this country.

It is reported, for example, that the use of harmful preservatives in food has been largely discontinued that the number of shipments of flour bleached with nitrogen peroxide has been considerably reduced; that mixtures of flour are propery labelled as such; that coffee is no longer adulterated with peas, chicory cereals and other foreign material; that chocolate and cocoa no longer contain flour and shells; that spices are generally free from inert materials having no condimental value; that flavoring extracts are sold for what they are; that mixtures of cane syrup flavored with maple are no longer maple syrup; that cottonseed oil is not marketed as olive oil; that candy manufacturers are discontinuing shellac coatings; that shipments of cheese are correctly branded as to weight; that evaporated milk is sold as such and not as evaporated cream; that domestic wines are no longer disguised by foreign labels; that foods in general are practically free from decomposed substances; that the habit forming drugs specified in the act are indicated on the labels of medicinal preparations, and the quality of crude drugs is greatly improved.

Defends Wilde Monument

PARIS, Sept. 23.—An embargo has been placed by the authorities on Jacob Epstein's sepulchral monument over the grave of Oscar Wilde in the Pere Lachaise Cemetery.

The Director of the cemetery states that in view of the unveiled character of the sphinxlike figure on the monument he reported the matter to the municipal burial officials. The matter was laid before the Prefect of the Seine, who, in his capacity as Mayor of Paris, gave instructions that the monument should be veiled until the sculptor consented to make certain alterations desired by the authorities.

M. Epstein, in an appeal to the Ministry of Fine Arts against the decison, will be supported by an umber of French artists, including Rodin. The latter told the New York Times correspondent that he had not seen the monument but from a photograph he could see that it was a work of great value and striking novelty, the thought of which was responsible for the unusual step taken by the Paris municipal authorities, who were always against anything new in art. Talking of Epstein, Rodin added:

"He is a talented artist, who will make his mark."

It is rumored that a great demonstration of protest against the decision of the Prefect of the Seine is being arranged, and it is hoped that Rodin will head it. Rodin, when questioned, declined to deny or confirm the report.

It is a remarkable fact that the entire Paris press has utterly ignored the matter, not even a line having been printed concerning the arrival of the monument in Paris.

Can Send Lieut. Becker to the Electric Chair

Schepps Told Arkansans That His Evidence Could do This—Affidavits Being Collected.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Sept. 24.—"My evidence will send Becker to the chair, don't I know it?" Sam Schepps, Rosenthal murder case witness, said to Postmaster Fred E. Johnson last night before Special Commissioner Huff.

Another declaration of Schepps', according to the postmaster, was in substance:

"If Rosenthal had not been such a 'peacher' he would not have got himself in so bad. I don't want you fellows to think we killed a man of some account. Rosenthal deserved to be killed."

Johnson, who arrested Schepps here, said he talked to him almost five hours on August 10. Schepps, he said, first begged not to be deliverd to the New York police; then discussed graft, public officials, the cause leading up to the killing of Rosenthal, and declared: "I am the keynote of the whole situation."

Becker, Johnson testified, was described by Schepps as a "grafter," one never satisfied and always urging an increased donation if a gambler showed prosperity.

C. H. Moshier, another witness, tonight corroborated the testimony of previous witnesses as to Schepps' alleged assertion crediting to Becker a threat to kill Rosenthal if "the gang" did not, and Rosenthal's connection with women and girls.

Just before the hearing was resumed tonight John W. Hart, attorney for Police Lieut. Charles Becker, announced he had found two witnesses who will swear to statements made by Schepps exculpating Becker.

It is understood District Attorney Whitman will interpose no objection to the introduction of the witnesses, Gilbert Hogaboom, a political leader, of Hot Springs, and Michael Berkholtz, of Argenta.

As a preliminary to the calling of the witnesses, Mr. Hart gave the District Attorney copies of affidavits sworn to by Hogaboom sets forth: Schepps said that he (Rosenthal) would turn his best friend and that he ought to have been bumped off long ago and would have if something had not happened. He did not say what his something was. He said the gamblers did not like him (Rosenthal) because he would turn his best friend. Schepps further said one big mistake that was made was to leave the number on the car."

Berkholtz avers in his affidavit:

"I asked him why did they kill that poor fellow Rosenthal and he said, 'Mike, you have no idea of what a dirty dog he turned out to be at the last of it;' that he had a place on Second avenue and had a bunch of gunmen hanging around there and the gang wanted to kill most anyone around there.

Kyoshk is to Marry Flossie Williams

SARNIA, Sept. 24.—Stephen Kyoshk, who on Saturday was acquitted on the charge of murder, announces his intention of marrying Florence Williams, the dusky Indian maiden whose inscrutable smile and taciturn manner has puzzled two judges, two juries and a curious public since the beginning of the case early in January last. Two red Romeos have gone to their deaths, while another is confiend to the county jail here, and all for the love and the magic of Flossie's smile. Never since the fateful New Year's Eve has this girl opened her lips to tell of that grim tragedy enacted on the frozen shores of Walpole Island, a tragedy which reeked of blood and primal emotions, and which carries one back to the days when might was right and he of the strongest arm ruled.

As soon as the Minister of Justice has removed the bars which at present retain the young Indian he will journey to the home of Rev. Walter Rigsby on the Sarnia Reserve, where he will meet his bride and where he will be married by Mr. Rigsby, who has done so much for him in getting the new trial.

Lives For Charity

LONDON, Sept 24.—The Hon. Albinia Brodrick, daughter of the late Viscount Midleton and sister of the present holder of the title, is living in a little cotetage in Ireland on $1.25 a week, and devoting her efforts to the relief and the distress of the Irish poor. She appeals in a letter to the Lord Mayor of London for money to assist her in her plans.

Miss Brodrick says that for the sake of the poor in the district where she works she has become certificated as a medical and surgical midwife, and sanitary inspector. She sold her beautiful old furniture, china, knickknacks, and jewellery. but still has not sufficient money, so is obliged to beg.

Parliament may Meet on Nov. 14

OTTAWA, Sept. 24.—It is probable that the date of the opening of the next session of Parliament will be Nov. 14, when the Speech from the Throne will be read by His Royal Highness the Governor General. While this is considered the most likely date among ministerial circles here, there is a possibility of its being put back some weeks later if the information concerning the recent naval conference be not received in final form. The announcement by the premier in his Montreal speech on Saturday night surprised even those most intimate with events in Government circles. Though the opening of the session is fixed for early in November yet so delicate is the navy question and so eager is the Government to deal with it thoroughly and leave nothing to chance that if the premised details from the British Admiralty be not complete, then the Prime Minister will not call Parliament until a later date than November 14.

The cabinet has carefully considered all the reports made to them by Premier Borden and his colleagues and it is not secret that when the final secret is presented to the House in November that it will prove a pleasant surprise for the friends of the Government and somewhat disconcerting to the opposition. A spirit of honest jubilation is abroad amongst Conservatives following current political events closely in the capital.

The naval question will first be dealt with and the most important piece of legislation to follow will be the bill revising the Bank Act. The Hon. W. T. White, finance minister, has his measure on the file ready to present to Parliament. He has worked hard upon it since the close of last session and it is understood nothing revolutionary will characterize the changes proposed. Though many members of the cabinet were absent during the summer, those who remained in Canada were busy and with cabinet councils daily until the House meets there will be a corp of legislation to be considered.

The Redistribution Bill will not, as at present anticipated, receive the early consideration of the House. The Hon. George E. Foster will present his reciprocity treaty with the West Indies.

Killed by Auto Truck

WINNIPEG, Sept. 24.—Samuel McDowell, the aged father of Sergeant James McDowell of the city police, was run over, sustaining fatal injuries, by an automobile truck driven by his son, Samuel McDowell. He was riding beside his son on the truck, when the machine skidded, throwing him violently to the ground. Before he could rise the left-hand wheel of the vehicle had passed over his body. He was alive, but unconscious when picked up.

Stork Visited Mr. and Mrs. Stork

PRINCE RUPERT, Sept. 24.—His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and party arrived here this morning and were accorded a rousing reception. The Earl Grey Rifles furnished the guard of honor, Capt. Stork in command. During the ceremonies the captain received word that the stork had visited his home, and now there is another Patricia in the land.

Wins Manitoba Prize

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 24.—F. W. Simon, of Liverpool, England, is the architect whose plans for the new provincial legislative buildings have been selected by the Government. The announcement was made this morning following a meeting of the committee appointed at the last session of the legislature to pass finally on the different plans submitted. Mr. Simon is at present in Banff, but will arrive in the city shortly to confer with the Government.

Of the five sets of plans for final consideration Mr. Simons's was the one recommended by Leonard H. Stokes, president of the British Institute of Architects and endorsed by the committee this morning.

The other competitors were: Brown and Vallance, Toronto; Syapre and Brown, Toronto; Clemesha and Portall, Regina; E. and W. S. Maxwell, Montreal.

It is estimated that the number of buildings will cost in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 and that the excavation work will be completed this fall as it is the intention of the Government to call tenders for this work immediately.

Mr. Simon wins first prize of $10,000 besides commissions which ultimately will amount to $100,000. The remaining four competitors get $2,000 each.

Runaway Engine Crashed Into a Special Train

Sixteen Persons Injured, Three of Them Fatally—Day Coach and Pullman Badly Wrecked.

WHEELING, W. Va., Sept. 24.—Sixteen persons were injured, three of them fatally, at 6.30 a.m. to-day, when a runaway engine on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad at Benwood crashed into a day coach and Pullman car to Benwood, to make connections with No. 7, the New York and Chicago express.

The express does not come to Wheeling, but puts off the Wheeling and Pittsburg passengers at Benwood, running a special from there to this city. The express changes engines at the same point and the engine that had just been released ran away on a steep incline leading to the bridge over the Ohio river. crashing into the Wheeling train. The two cars were badly wrecked, and all of the injured were in them. Mrs. Charles Johnson, of Martins Ferry, O., who was bringing the dead body of her husband home from Alabama, was among the injured. Five of the more seriously injured were taken to the North Wheeling hospital.

May Electrify G. T. R. Branch

Deputation Urges that Galt and Elmira Branches be so Treated Favorably Received.

BERLIN, Ont., Sept. 24.—Much interest attached to the reception today at Waterloo in the private car of Superintendent U. E. Gillen of the Grand Trunk of a deputation, headed by Charles J. Mueller, president of the Board of Trade, E. W. B. Snyder, St. Jacob's, and others, who waited upon the official for the purpose of bringing to his attention the wishes of the several municipalities along the Galt and Elmira branches that this portion of the road be electrified.

Mr. Gillen stated that he was very favorably impressed with with the expressions of opinion, and that he would take up the matter with the management at an early date. He fully realized the importance of the situation, and the growing need of better railway facilities, as he had observed the tremendous industrial growth of the district, especially in Waterloo and Berlin. He believed the time would come when Waterloo and Berlin would amalgamate, and he suggested that the new city be named Berloo.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—One of the largest individual land sales ever effected in this country has just been completed here. The purchaser, the C. A. P. is informed, is no less a person than Lord Joicey, the famous coal mine owner and one of the wealthiest Liberal peers in Great Britain. His lordship has purchased nearly 24,000 acres of mixed farm and dairy farming land in the vicinity of Fort George, British Columbia, for which he paid $450,000.

Captain Hulton who, it will be remembered, was responsible for the Duke of Sutherland and Lord Desborough transactions, is negotiating for the sale to a Dutch merchant of 50,000 acres in Saskatchewan.

Lord Joicey is chairman and managing director of James Joicey & Co., Ltd., and the Lambton Collieries, Ltd., the two largest colliery companies in the County of Durham

The people of Holloway Street Church are now beginning to look forward to their re-opening, which it is expected, will take place November 17-24. The contractor, Mr. William Afford, is pushing the work as rapidly as possible, and the new leaded windows, which have been shipped, will be put into place immediately upon their arrival.

Mr. Cornelius, who has the contract for papering and re-decorating, is thus far fully up to his standard as a master of the art, and it is expected that his artistic merit will be realized to the delight of all.

She is a graduate of the Toronto College of Music, and fully qualified for efficient work. Rev. Dr. Williamson and Rev. B. Greatrix are scheduled for Nov. 17, and Rev. Dr. Carman will be present on the 24th.

Hunt Mystery Woman In Gibson Case

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Detectives representing the authorities of Orange county today were scouting New York trying to ascertain the identity of a mysterious woman who was said to be aiding the defense of Burton W. Gibson, the lawyer held at Goshen for the murder of Mrs. Menschik Szabo.

Mrs Albert Stern, the state's witness, on whose testimony the body of Mrs. Szabo was exhumed, told how the mysterious woman had come to her ostensibly to ask about a black dress belonging to the dead woman, and then proceeded adroitly to question her about the case. The stranger refused to give her name.

Robert H. Elder, former district attorney of King's county, counsel for Gibson, who in a conference lasting half a day, told the attorney what he said was the true story of his entire acquaintance with Mrs. Szabo.

LEADER'S TRIBUTE TO SIR RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

OTTAWA, Sept. 24.—Premier Borden said:—

"The death of Sir Richard Cartwright comes as a shock to those who have been his colleagues in Parliament whether on one or the other side of the House. He has been a great figure in public life for more than 40 years, and no one can forget his strong personality, his wonderful power of debate, or the wonderful contrast between the extreme kindliness of his disposition in private life, and his great command of attack and invective in debate, whether upon the hustings or in Parliament. He was in every sense a great Parliamentarian, thoroughly versed in constitutional procedure, and entirely familiar with the development of Parliamentary government in Canada.

"I recall one instance which illustrates the kindliness of his nature and his innate courtesy. A few years after I had become leader of the Opposition in the House, Sir Charles Tupper, not then a member of Parliament, come by the invitation of the Speaker and took a seat on the floor of the House. These two great had been redoubtable protagonists on opposite sides of the House for many years, and had engaged in attack upon each other with a vigor which is seldom witnessed in these latter days. As soon as Sir Richard saw Sir Charles he made his way slowly (for he walked with great difficulty by the aid of a cane) through the passage back of the Speaker's chair in order to greet his old antagonist. To Lady Cartwright and the members of his family the sympathy of all Canadian citizens will be extended in the fullest measure."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:—

"I have lost in Sir Richard one of my oldest personal friends. I was associated with him for more than thirty years.

"As a leader of the party, my relations with him at all times were most cordial. If there arose between us differences of opinion, it was never difficult to adjust them satisfactorily. Sir Richard was a very strong man, but those only who were intimately associated with him knew his chivalrous nature. He was a patriot, a thorough gentleman, and a charming man."

Manufacturers Resent Attack On Y. M. C. A.

Committee Report Charging Organization Encouraged Buying Material from U. S. Causes a Heated Discussion.

OTTAWA, Sept. 24.—A discussion, which at times promised to become rather heated, began just before the Canadian Manufacturers' Convention adjourned for lunch, when John Firstbrook of Toronto, a director of the Young Men's Christian Association, took objection to a clause in the report of the commercial intelligence committee, alleging that secretaries and physical directors of the Y.M.C.A. in Canada, encouraged the board of directors of their associations to buy materials for new buildings for Y.M.C.A.'s in the U. S.

The report of the committee advocated supporting home industries, and then specified the Y.M.C.A. boards as examples of bodies who seemed inclined to discourage home industry.

After a dozen or more of the delegates had aired their views for and against the clauses, the chairman of the committee, C. S. J. Phillips, finally consented to withdraw them, after explaining that neither he nor his colleagues had thought of singling out the Y.M.C.A. for criticism. The matter, he said, had been brought to the attention of the committee by a member of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and therefore it had been dealt with and the result of their dealings embodied in the report.

"Why confine the criticism to the Y.M.C.A."? asked W. H. Rowley of Ottawa, "banks, trusts companies and other concerns are equally as guilty." Another delegate got after the school boards in Toronto and Winnipeg, saying that they bought desks and other materials galore from firms in the United States.

This brought R. D. Fairbairn of Toronto, an ex-member of the Toronto school board, to his feet in defence.

There were cries to withdraw the clauses, and other cries to leave them in, coming from al parts of the room. C. R. McCullough of Hamilton, managed to make himself heard in defence of the business ability of the association, who would go where they choose to buy their goods the best and cheapest. It was bad, however, he maintained, to single out the Y. M. C. A.

Norwick Man Admits Arson

WOODSTOCK, Sept. 24.—Twenty-one months in the Central Prison was the sentence meted out to Wm. Huggins of Norwich, who was found guilty at the fall assizes, now in session here before Chief Justice Mullock, of setting fire to the valuable barns of Chauncery Turner of Norwich, in July last.

The chief witness for the prosecution was Provincial Detective Miller, who produced a signed confession by the accused

W. S. Brewster, K. C. of Brantford, who defended Huggins, attempted to offset this evidence by producing witnesses, who swore that the accused was mentally weak and not capable of understanding what he was signing. However, the jury found him guilty, but in doing so presented a strong plea for mercy. This was taken into consideration by the judge in passing sentence.

British Banker Views on Price of C. P. R. Issue

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The representatives of a London banking house with Montreal and western Canada connections, and more or less in touch with Canadian Pacific financing plans, states that there is no doubt but that the issue price of proposed $60,000,000 stock issue to be voted on Oct. 2, will be higher than the price at which last issue of $18,000,000 was sold.

Impressions in London banking circles prevails that issuance price will be between 165 and 170, while in other quarters, both in London and Montreal, the belief is that price will be 175.

By reason of postponement of reconvening of parliament from November to January action by the Government on Canadian Pacific application to increase its capitalization will be delayed but there is no doubt, according to this banker, that the application will be readily granted.

Too High Wages Paid Singers

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—The Kaiser is the latest to lift a complaining voice against the high wages paid on the American stage. It has been a long-standing grievance of European managers to see their best artists lured away by the longer American purses, and the Kaiser, as the owner of the Royal Theatre, is in the same boat with the more humble impressarios.

The Lokal Anzeiger says that the Kaiser, in talking this matter over with the manager of the Municipal Theatre at Berne during his recent visit to Switzerland, said: "These are bad times for the theatres. I simply cannot pay the salaries demanded. American managers hire everything away from me. They pay an Imperial Chancellor's salary three times over to an actor or an actress. I simply cannot keep up with them."

Surviving Father of Confederation on Sir Richard

VANCOUVER, Sept. 24.—Sir Charles Tupper, former Premier of Canada, issued the following statement to The Globe correspondent to-night, with regard to the death of Sir Richard Cartwright at Kingston to-day:

"Sir Richard Cartwright was, in my judgment, with the exception of the Hon. Edward Blake, the ablest man on the Liberal side of the House subsequently to the time of his joining that party. Both in and out of the House he was a forcible advocate of the views that he entertained. He was a speaker of great eloquence. When not engaged in politics, in the House or on the platform, he was as agreeable a man as one could wish to meet anywhere. Latterly he labored under a disadvantage caused by gout and rheumatism, which seriously impaired his movements and made physical exertions very painful.

"When at his best, Sir Richard Cartwright was more effective as a public speaker than any other man in his party, in my estimation. Latterly he had taken very little part in public duties and his work has been confined to the leadership of the party in the Senate. He was a most highly educated and accomplished speaker. His death will mean a great loss to Canada, for he was one of Canada's ablest men."

Will Soon be Taking Food From the Air

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—Dr. Paul Walden, of Riga, Russia, predicted here last night that the next great feat of chemistry would be the making of eggs from air. Dr. Walden, who is president-elect of the ninth international congress of applied chemistry to be held in St. Petersburg, in 1915, further predicted that a variety of nitrogenous foods will be made from the air some day.

"I consider it practically certain that at no distant day we will be drawing food supplies from the air," he said. "Prof. Berthsen, of Germany, has already succeeded in making the simple compound nitrogen and hydrogen. This shows that it will be able to make more complex compounds. An egg is a complex compound of nitrogen, oxygen, sulphur and hydrogen. The chemical process of the hen will be imitated in the labratory in the undertaking. Formerly we were able to do very little with the uncombined nitrogen in the atmosphere. Now that we are able to harness it, the possibilities are wonderful."

YOU SHOULD MAKE A WILL

It is deplorable that the majority of people have not been educated to the importance of making a will. This should be considerd by everyone to be a sacred duty of life.

No matter how poor you are or how little you have to leave, a will should be made, because it is astonishing from what least-expected causes disputes, trouble, and expense may arise after one's decease.

By the publication of a new will form it has been made extremely easy for you to make your will. You need not fear expensive lawyer's fees, for this will cost but 35 cents. You can secure the utmost privacy because this will can be made by yourself, in your own home, without a lawyer. This will is called the Bax Legal Will Form. It is so simple that any person can execute it correctly and make it absolutely legal and impossible to be broken in any court. The form has been tested by the best legal talents in the land.

Don't Neglect making your will. Send for a Bax Will Form to-day. There is no telling in what condition your health may be a week from to-day, nor how keenly you may regret not sending for this will form. You can obtain the Bax Legal Will Form, with full directions and sample will from C. B. Scantlebury & G. L. Sills, or by sending 35 cents to the Bax Will Form Co., Room 280 College Street, Toronto.

Backward Spain

MADRID, Sept. 24.—As the result of an investigation ordered by King Alfonso, the Minister of the Interior reports that sixty percent. of the land in Spain is uncultivated, and 38 per cent. is utterly without irrigation. The report shows that 4,500 villages are without roads or railroads, 30,000 towns and villages have no schools, and 12,0000,000 of Spain's 17,000,000 inhabitants can neither read nor write.

EVER HAVE "THE BLUES"

Most persons will immediately respond "Yes," to this question, but few of them probably could give you any satisfactory idea as to the cause or reason for this despondent, low-spirited condition.

Physiologists have discovered that this condition is brought about by the seeming inability of the Liver to separate poisonous secretions from the blood, and, as a consequence, these are taken back into the system.

In the treatment of such cases, we strongly recommend Rexall Liver Salts because of the success so many people have experienced in using this preparation.

Rexall Liver Salts are manufactured in two sizes, 25c. and 50c., and we have the exclusive agency. McKeown's Drug Store. The Rexall Store.

Would Assist Toward Peace

VIENNA, Sept. 24.—The Emperor Francis Joseph, showed his keen interest in the efforts to bring about peace between Turkey and Italy this morning, when adressing the members of the Australian and Hungarian delegations who had called at the palace. He said:—

"With sincere sympathy, we are following the efforts of the Italian and Turkish statesmen by means of a direct but non-committal exchange of views to find a basis for peace which shall be honorable to both."

Referring to the Balkan situation, His Majesty suggested an exchange of views between all the powers, which had expressed the unanimous wish to see the status quo maintained.

Maid of the Mist Tried to Get Body

NIAGARA FALLS Ont., Sept. 24.—"That the steamer Maid of the Mist ran on the rocks below the cataract near the Ontario Power plant on Saturday is absolutely without foundation," stated Captain Richard Carter this morning, who is in charge of the boat.

The captain stated that he and his crew saw a body in the water, and they swung into an eddy and lowered a small boat to rescue it. They could not distinguish whether it was the body of a male or a female. The body got away, and the fact that the craft stepped in mid-stream and that she went out of her course led the people on the shore and upper bridge to believe that she had struck the rocks, which also gave the passengers an idea that something serious had happened.

"But there was no panic of any kind," stated the captain, "and no damage whatever done to the craft."

LIFE TALK

When you take out a life insurance policy you make the biggest bank deposit you ever made in your life at one time. Did you ever put one thousand—five thousand—dollars through the receiving teller's wicket and say: "Put that to the credit of my account"? No? Well, the minute you sign the application for such an amount and pay the first instalment on your new bank account you have actually provided that whole sum—ready—waiting for service against the one big call that is coming to you some time—the one on which you will never get any extension of time. That's banking in a new sense and banking with common sense and foresight.

WEDDING BELLS.

HALL—KEIRL.

At the Tabernacle Church at 11 o'clock this morning a wedding took place, at which the pastor, Rev. W. G. Clarke, officiated. The groom was Mr. Harry Hall of this city, and the bride was Miss Ethel Keirl of Thurlow township. The bride was attired in a traveling suit of navy cloth and wore a hat to match. She was attended by Miss Keitha Vivian, while Mr. Charles Keirl, a brother of the bride, did honors for the groom. The couple left at noon for the west, and upon returning to the city will reside on Murney Street.

CRAWFORD—MAIR.

A very pleasing wedding ceremony took place at high noon to-day at the home of Mrs. William W. Mair, of Pine Street, when her daughter, Miss Grace Elizabeth, was united in marriage to Dr. Jennings Crawford, son of Dr. George and Mrs. Crawford, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Rev. J. R. Wilson of Napanee, a former pastor of Bridge Street, officiated. The drawing room was tastily decorated with asters and ferns, but owing to the recent bereavement in the family, but a limited number of guests were present. The bride, who was given away by her mother, was attired in a traveling suit of navy blue broadcloth, and wore a hat of green velour, with feathers to match. She was attended by her sister, Miss Annie Mair, while the groom was unattended. Little Miss Helen Jean Betts of Buffalo N.Y., acted as flower girl, and Miss Edna Wallace of this city rendered Mendelssohn's Wedding March. The bride's mother wore a dress of black messaline over satin and trimmed with black lace. Mrs. Crawford, mother of the groom, was attired in a gown of mauve satin veiled in black. Following luncheon at 1.40, the bride and groom left for their future home at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The guests were Dr. and Mrs. Crawford, Miss Mair of Hamilton and Mrs. Morse Betts and daughter, Helen Jean, of Buffalo, N.Y. The wedding gifts were numerous, costly and beautiful.

HUNT—FORIN.

(Edmonton Daily Bulletin, Sept. 19)

At five o'clock yesterday afternoon, First Presbyterian Church was the scene of a very impressive event when Florence Jennie, eldest daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Alex. Forin, was united in marriage to William Henry Hunt, son of the late Col. Hunt and Mrs. Hunt, Preston, Lancashire, England.

To the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march the bride walked up the aisle leaning on her father's arm. She was a beautiful picture, in a robe of white satin mesaline, cut on the Grecian lines, the long square train finished with a deep border of wide knife plaiting, glistening with pearls. The draperies of conventional design, were edged with seed pearls. Draping the corsage was a fischu of exquisite Chantilly silk lace caught with pearl ornaments and strung with pearls. A long white tulle veil, caught with orange blossoms, was worn; the bride carrying a shower bouquet of bridal roses and lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Bessie Forin, the bride's sister, was a striking figure, in a yellow satin gown, veiled in mauve ninon with touches of black velvet and garnitures of silver shadow lace. A large black Gainsborough hat, butter cups clouded in yellow tulle wreathing the crown—a soft yellow mount finishing it. A sheaf of yellow mums was carried.

Two dear little flower girls, who preceded the bride, were Miss Elizabeth Fair, a niece of the bride, and Miss Betty Fetter, who were wearing sweet little frocks of white hand embruidered marquisette inset with real Irish crochet. Little peasant caps finished with lace ribbon and Maltese lace were worn.

The groomsman was Mr. Hickey; the ushers, Messrs, Bert Miller and Geo. Hawkins.

Officiating was the bride's uncle, Rev. Dr. Campbell, for many years pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Victoria, who married her father and mother, and who baptised the bride.

A reception was afterwards held at the home of the bride's parents on Fourth Street. Mrs. Forin, mother of the bride, was very handsome in a mauve satin gown with mauve ninon overdress—and lace garnitures in the mauve tones. A black hat trimmed with brown roses and a white osprey finished her toilette.

Mrs. Campbell, Victoria, the bride's aunt, wore an elaborate blue silk with Oriental trimmings and black picture hat.

Mrs. Fair, Calgary, also an aunt of the bride, was wearing a dainty frock of shell pink charmeuse, with an overdress of Brussels lace bordered with old rose velvet—a long panel back of Persian embroideries. A white picture hat with ostrich band and mount was also worn. A white ermine stole was a finishing touch.

The tall bridal cake was a bower of floral beauty—white roses interspersed with lilies of the valley and ropes of asparagus ferns from the electrolier streamed to each corner. Here Mrs. Williamson Taylor and Mrs. Parsons poured out the tea and coffee; Mrs. Hislop cutting the ices, and Mrs. Byers serving the punch. Assisting were Misses G. Mercer, Alice Cameron, Jessie Belcher, Jeane Dawson, Aloysia McKenney.

The drawing room where the bridal party received was fragrant with a subtle odor of American beauty roses, sweet peas and asters.

In a few well chosen words Mr. Hickey, the groomsman proposed the toaset to the bride's health, to which Dr. Campbell responded in a chivalrous speech, referring in glowing terms to the beauty of the bride, and commenting appreciatively on the handsome groom. Then a warm tribute was paid to the fairness of the ladies present, as well as to the fine, stalwart men.

The proverbial luck attached to the bit of wedding cake will certainly attend the guests at the Hunt-Forin nuptials, as the household, particularly Master Jack Forin, the bride's brother, left nothing undone on that score.

It is rarely the lot of any happy bride to be so favored—the number of gifts made a truly lovely array. From Dr. and Mrs. Forin, from her grandmother, Mrs. Forin in Belleville, and from her uncle, Judge Forin, came handsome cheques, while her brother-in-law, Mr. George Hunt, gave her a saddle horse. One of her husband's gifts was a lovely beaver coat and muff. The engineering staff sent a cabinet of sterling silver, Crown Derby, Sheffield Silver, Dresden China, Bohemian glass and cut glass, a brass fender top and shovel set were among the gifts.

From Dr. Peter Forin came a lovely pearl necklace, while Mr. and Mrs. Fell, an aunt and uncle in Victoria, sent ornaments inset with pearls and peridots.

The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a necklace and earrings of pearls and peridots—to the groomsman a diamond pin; to the ushers pearl and peridot stick pins.

Mr. and Mrs. Hunt left on the C. N.R. last night on their wedding trip—the bride wearing a smartly tailored heather mixture suit, in the brown and green tones, the bodice of green and brown shot silk.

A jaunty felt hat shot with green and brown, and faced in black, was caught at the side with a Bird of Paradise mount in the golden brown tones. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, will spend a few days in Belleville, Ottawa, Montreal; sailing in October 10th on the Victorian for England, where they will visit the groom's mother, Mrs. Hunt, in Preston, later going to London, Paris, and other continental points. They will also take the Mediterranean trip. Bon voyage.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

One of the largest and most gorgeous musical comedies that has visited Belleville in recent years is John C. Fisher's production of "The Red Rose", which comes to Griffins Oprea House Friday, Oct. 4th., arriving by special train over the Grand Trunk Railway at one P. M The organization numbers 75 people and it requires two seventy foot baggage cars to transport the scenic production.

TO-NIGHT

The Light Eternal

Lofty ideas and sentiments that ring as true today as in the fourth century from the keynote of "The Light Eternal," the big specular religious drama to be offered at Griffins Opera House tonight and tomorrow night. All the glamour that wealth of color, splendor of costumes and scenic settings can lend has been untilzed in making this production worthy of the ideas embodied. History has been consulted for the theme, and the horrible tortures of the early martyrs make the climax for a story of love and religious devotion. Throughout the four acts the earnest zeal of the excellent cast engaged in the portrayal of the play fans the religious sentiment of the audience into a living flame, and a furor of enthusiasm invariably greets the close of the third act—where the Christian sign appears above the shattered altar of the pagan god of gods, Jupiter. The name of Louise Dunbar appearing in the principal feminine role, lends to the offering an added eclat gained by her fine training and artistic achievement. A certain strength and fire characterize her portrayal of the role of Artemia that suggests the imperious beauty of the Roman court, while her gentler moments have the tenderness of a loving woman. Howevr, Miss Dunbar's regal personality and marked dramatic skill cast but slight shadow over the excellent work of John Milton, her immediate support. The cast of "The Light Eternal" is unusually large for a dramatic offering even in these days of big things theatric.

Premier Borden's Reception

It is gratifying to note the spirit of friendliness and complete absence of partizan feeling that permeated the vast gathering which congregated in Toronto's new arena under the auspices of the Board of Trade of that city, Monday evening, to do honor to Premier Borden, whose each succeeding appearance at such functions stamps him in a higher degree as a fully qualified leader of a progressive people. The demonstration was of a strictly non-partizan nature, and right royally did the seven thousand attendants, Conservatives and Liberals alike, manifest their admiration for the sterling qualities of the man whom the people of this country have honored with its highest political office. Nor were they disappointed in the Premier's sane and sound expressions of faith toward the mother country. Cheer after cheer rang through the vast structure when Mr. Borden proclaimed the adherent attitude of Canada toward Imperial Union, his convincing words going home to every heart as he declared:

> "No man is more firmly convinced than I that if the day of peril or distress comes the old Motherland and the Dominions beyond the seas will take their place before the nations of the world in the defence of the unity of the Empire and the preservation of its power and influence. And the people of Canada as one man will rally to the defence of that Empire, that all the nations of the world may know that although the Dominions of this Empire may be sundered far by oceans and continents, for the preservation of its unity, for the preservation of its power and influence, for the maintenance of its work in the future, the Mother Country and the Dominions—east, west, north and south—are one and indivisible."

Even the leading Opposition organ of that city, in editorial comment, was extremely gentle in dealing with the expressions of its rugged opponent; an occasional "if" being the only point upon which it could hinge its criticism. Truly, worth is the lodestone which is attracting the increased thousands to our Government's chief—and we say it circumspectly—his popularity and usefulness are yet in their infancy?

Increasing Human Efficiency

It is refreshing to hear utterances such as those made by Dr. Bryce, of Ottawa, and Dr. George D. Porter, at the Canadian Public Health Association Convention at Toronto. "How long," asked Dr. Bryce, "can a country, essentially a product of raw material by virtue of geographical location and territorial extent largely undeveloped, continue to develop normally and prosper when it has shown a displacement of rural population during the last ten years to an extent never witnessed before in the history of any people, and an urban population rapid beyond even the palmiest days of the United States immigration?"

"Can we as intelligent Canadians view without alarm a situation when a population, largely without capital, mostly of casual laborers, often of foreign tongue, has crowded into our urban centres, living necessarily from day to day upon the ever-changing demands for day labor, forgetting that 1890 and 1907 may come again?"

That disaster was in sight because speculation had taken the place of production was an assertion of Dr. Bryce, in whose warning there is much food for thought. The upbuilding of a new country, rich in natural resources, with a comparatively small population, tends to individualize prosperity. Where, in an old country, the possession of lands may not give even a livelihood, in a new country it often yields a fortune, due to rapid development. Speculation is greatest in populous centres. There are usually made the quickest fortunes and the most failures. The countryman crowds to the town, because the latter is more attractive. The farm has magnetism for the few, and it is easier to convert the farmer into a city man than later to change the city man to an agriculturist. The best type, physically, is found in the country. Congested centres do not assist human efficiency. To make the farm more attractive and to prevent partially the drift of population to urban centres, the gap between the producer and consumer of farm products must be lessened. Dr. Bryce thinks that one solution of the problem is to reduce cost of production on the farm and to carefully prepare and conserve farm products till sold. Another is to pay the producers the highest possible price, and to supply them the cheapest and most direct transportation for their products to the market.

In Toronto they talk of stopping the Italian barel organ's music, the crying of babies, and the crowing of hens. This will leave only the noise of the discussion as to whether Toronto or Montreal is Canada's financial centre.

Mrs. Samuel Schwartz, of New York, out for a walk, met her husband, whom for three years she had believed dead. In a panic he fled. She out-ran him, however, and turned him over to the police, charging him with desertion.

Japanese police are said to be kept busy preventing attempts at suicide in emulation of the example of the late Gen. Nogi. That reminds one of the predilection of a Parisian mob for rioting if they were not prevented by the strong arm of the law.

One could hardly imagine that France would respond enthusiastically to Russia's invitation to celebrate the battle of Borodino, during Napoleon's disastrous march on Moscow, a hundred years ago. But "there ain't no tellin'." These entente cordiales seem to have the same exhilarating effect on nations, as the more familiar creme de menthe or benedictine on the individual.

Mr. Roosevelt usually refers to the Democratic candidate for the Presidency as "Doctor" Wilson. His object, of course, is to present the erstwhile college professor before the people as a doctrinaire. This is clever campaigning, and might be quite effective but for the fact that Wilson's record as governor of New Jersey shows him to be very much more than a mere dreamer.

Hosiery clerks of Washington and New York are moved to wonder at the increase in size of the feet and limbs of their customers. Looks as if the dainty compliment of referring to them as little twin mice peeping out from beneath their skirts must needs be relegated to the attic. Chicago has not yet been heard from, but the abnormal size prevalent there has always been taken as an accepted fact.

The new furs are so light and supple that the wearer might imagine herself in a coat of feathers.

Collars and fichus go on increasing in size, though it is not always to the advantage of the face that a large expanse of white or cream color should almost cover the bodice of the gown.

Finding the small mirror in the vanity case inadequate, a new opera bag has been made, the top fitted with bevelled mirror of fair size, showing a good deal of the features, and the mirror part is folded inside the bag, giving it a flat effect.

Rev. Canon Henson Against Woman Suffragettes

WINNIPEG, Sept. 24.—Canon Hensley Henson, Rector of St Margaret's and a Canon of Westminster Abbey, delivered an able address on "Some Aspects of the Woman Question," before the Woman's Canadian club here on Saturday.

He said the logic of the militant suffragist in Great Britain was perfect, and as ruthless as perfect, and a distressing tendency was evident among them toward anarchism, both in politics and religion. They over-estimated the values of the franchise. The right to vote was not a natural right, but a question of political expediency, and the interest of the community the determining factor.

The whole question had been placed in a false light by the militant suffragists. He did not thing right that women voters should have the overwhelming majority they would have were the franchise granted them.

Canadian Architect Dies in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Sept. 24.—Mr. Thomas Stent, aged 90 years, who was architect for the Canadian Parliament building, later Government architect in Canada for the Astor estate building and who has lived in Los Angeles for the last fifteen years died Sunday at 5515 Montevista street.

Mr. Stent has only one rule which he followed for long living and that was being regular and methodical in all that he did. He lived with his daughter Mrs. J. D. Simpson, 725 South Union street, until a short time ago. His son Ernest J. Stent, lives in San Fransisco.

The funeral will be at Bresse, Bros chapel, to-morrow morning, at ten o'clock. Burial will be private.

Tenor Now Owns An Opera House

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—Signor Constantino, the Spanish tenor, who has been stopping at the Hotel Victoria, sailed recently on the steamer Tennyson of the Lamport Line for Buenos Ayres for the purpose, he says, of opening there an opera house of his own. Buenos Ayres, it should be noted, already has two singing theatres of the first class.

"The Teatro Constantino is a modern opera house in every particular," said Signor Constantino recently. "The building is a cement structure, with one of the most beautiful parks of Buenos Ayres as its threshold. It cost $255,000, subscribed by a syndicate of leading citizens of that city. It contains an auditorium seating 2,000, with seventy boxes. I shall open the house with Rigoletto. The season will cover twenty-five performances of French and Italian operas to be given in one month.

After his engagement in Buenos Ayres Signor Constantino will sing eight performances in Mexico, and will then go to San Fransisco. From there he will go to Boston to sing two months, and will be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York during January.

Every Woman Was a Success

LONDON, Sept. 24.—Henry W. Savage's production of Walter Browne's modern morality play "Everywoman" was received with the greatest enthusiasm by a huge audience at the Drury Lane Theatre to-night.

The Daily Telegraph says "Everywoman" is a triumph. The Daily Mail says it positively takes one's breath away, a piece which everybody certainly should see. The Daily Express says it is certain to be a tremendous popular success. It is the summary of the popular drama. The Daily Chronicle says it appeals to the sense is as varied as the heart could wish, a morality for the million. The Morning Post says it is a superb spectacle that almost beggars description. The Pall Mall Gazette says it is something higher than mere sensationalism and spectacle, while the Westminster Gazette says "Everywoman" will interest,

Three Air Men Meet Terrible Death

FRIEBURG, Saxony, Sept. 23.—Two German military officers were killed while flying near here yesterday. This makes the third double fatality in which members of army flying corps were the victims, to occur in Europe within the present month.

The machine which was of the monoplane type, was being piloted by Lieut. Berger, who was carrying Lieut. Junghans as a passenger in a flight from Chemnitz to Berlin.

When passing over this city the machine suddenly plunged from a high elevation to the ground. The airmen were instantly killed and the monoplane was smashed to bits.

The cause of the accident is not explained.

Italy's Refusal To Negotiate

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The Constantinople correspondent of The London Times reports that he hears on good authority that the Port's refusal to open offical negotiations with Italy on a basis of pecuniary indemnity for the loss of sovereign rights over Tripoli and Cyraenaica, has been followed by a fresh propositon from the Italian delegates, involving the maintenance of the sovereignty of the Sultan, who would be represented by a Turkish official entrusted with the administration of the Moslem pious foundations and the Moslem religious courts, leaving the remainder of the administration in the hands of Italians or Arabs.

The Porte would at the same time confer the fullest possible measure of autonomy on Tripoli and Cyraenaica and withdraw his troops, leaving the field clear for the Italians and Arabs to continue fighting or compose their differences. The Porte is now discussing this proposal.

King of Spain's Sister is Dead

MADRID, Sept. 24.—The Princess Maria Teresa, sister of King Alfonso, died suddenly to-day from the effects of an embolism.

The death of the Infanta, who was not quite thirty years of age, having been born here on November 12, 1882, has thrown the whole of the Spanish Court into deep mourning.

She has been married only six years to Prince Ferdinand of Bavaria. The Prince became a naturalized Spaniard seven years ago, and is an officer in the Spanish army. He resides in Madrid.

Three infant children, Prince Luis Alfonso, Prince Jose Eugene, and a baby sister, not yet a year old, are left orphans.

ATHLETICS.

When the Canadian track and field championships are contested Saturday, Sept. 28 at Montreal, Ontario will have a delegation of her best athletes on hand to oppose those from the other provinces.

The selection committee has been chosen and the field events and walk will be held at the Baptist Y. M. U. annual meet on Saturday. Competitors who are not Baptists will not be awarded prizes, as the meet is a closed one, but the performances of the men will be taken into consideration when the Ontario team is being selected.

The track events will be held on Tuesday evening next at the Toronto Stadium when all outside competitors will be welcomed. The 100, 200, 400, 800, mile and three-mile will be run.

Sadler, the Niagara Falls sprinter will go to Montreal on the strength of his victories in the 100 and furlong at Hamilton last Saturday.

FORBESFIELD, Pittsburg, Sept. 23.—Hannes Kolehmainen, the wonderful Finnish athlete, running in the five-mile race for the senior championship of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States here, won the event easily in 25.43 2-5. His nearest competitor was Henry J. Smith, the Metropolitan champion who finished several hundred yards behind in an exhausted condition. Kolehmainen, however seemed fresh at the finish. During the entire race he held a steady gait running easily and constantly waved and grinned to the thousands of spectators who applauded him. As he crossed the line a victor he was given a remarkovation.

While the foreign Olympic here and the five-mile race were the features of the afternoon there was an exceptionally good programme of track and field events. A. R. Kiviat, Irish-American A. C. won the one-mile race in 4.18 3-5, breaking the A. A. U. record, and, according to officials, could have hung up a new world's mark with a little more effort. Kiviat ran easily and seemed to slow up on the back stretch of the last lap. In the running high jump, J. O. Johnstone, Boston A. A., mark. H. P. Drew, of the Springfield and H. I. Grumpelt, New York A. C. both Olympc participants, tied for first place with 6 feet 3 inches, equalling the A. A. U. record. In the jump off Grumpelt was unable to maintain that mark and dropped to second place.

..In the pole vault, H. S. Babcock, New York A. C., Olympic winner and world's champion, was the centre of interest. Babcock won easily with 12 feet, much below even the A. A. U. Mass., High School won the 100-yard dash in 10 seconds flat.

For the fifth time J. J. Eller, Irish-American A. C. won the senior championship in the 220 yeard high hurdles with a mark of 25 1-5 seconds. R. B. Gifford, McCaddin Lyceum, of Brooklyn, won the three-mile walk in 23 minutes 14 seconds. Yesterday Gifford captured the one-mile junior championship. The leading clubs and number of points scored follows: Irish-American A. C. 67; New York A. C. 34; Boston A. C. 20.

GRAND TRUNK SYSTEM NEWS ITEMS

Says a despatch from London, Ont., just received at company head-quarters in Montreal:—"The Grand Trunk Railway System has reason to be proud of its local corps of firemen as they have again demonstrated that they are the fastest fire-fighters that the company has in Canada. Annual competitions are held by the company among 50 different corps belonging to their different works and this morning it was the London men's turn to do duty in front of the official superintendent and timekeeper, Mr. J. W. Jackson of Montreal. They performed so creditably that Mr. Jackson had no hesitation in saying that they were better than any other brigade belonging to the company in Canada. The honor of being the remained with London for the past eleven years during which period they have come out on top ten times. This year they clipped several seconds off the record made by the brigades in Toronto, Stratford and other places. The local contests were held in Queen's Parkwhen three corps, two from the carshops and one from the round house mustered themselves with reels and competed against each other; Company No. 1 from the carshops winning the championship of the entire system. The prize of $25 for the "dry" race, when no water is used, fell to No. 1 with the splendid time for the course of 48 2-5 seconds; while No. 2 won $10 in the "wet" race completing the course in 60 seconds.

Reports from the west state that steel on the Tofield-Calgary branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific has now been laid as far south from the main line as Irricana and that the grade is now ready for entry into the latter plane. A bridge at the Bow River about four miles out of Calgary is likely to delay track-layng a little. This bridge is of steel construction and is to erected by the Canadian Bridge Co. It is expected that it will be completed and the steel laid right into Calgary by the first of November.

That in north British Columbia in the territory to be opened up by the Edmonton, Dunvegan & British Columbia Railway and the Pacific Great Eastern Railway there is a land rich in mineral wealth which is destined to provide a great future for the mining industry is the opinion of Mr. I. E. Haight, a well known western mining engineer and prospector. The country to the west of Pine Pass which will be traversed by thes roads, he points out, is established as a great gold quartz area. The great mineral areas extend north from the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific in British Columbia a country rich in gold silver and copper while the greatest mica deposits in the world are between the Canyon and the junction of the G. T. P. and the Pacific Great Eastern. Within the next 18 months or two years silver bearing ores will be available in plenty. The formation carries very little silver bearing lead. A high percentage of gold is carried running from $10 to $20 a ton and copper is also a high percent ore. It is a smelting and not a milling proposition with such ore as this according to Mr. Haight.

The chief attraction in the immense Land Show building at the Michigan State Fair—always one of the best in the United States—just concluded in Detroit is the Canadian Exhibit arranged by Mr. M. V. Macinnes, general agent of the Dominion Government, in the United States. This fine display occupies 65 feet of space and its tastful decorations are of the highest standard; a conspicuous feature being the fine picture supplied for the exhibit by the Grand Trunk Railway System and Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

The following official circular has just been issued by Mr. W. E. Davis, Passenger Traffic Manager of the Grand Trunk System, with the approval of the president, Mr. E. J. Chamberlin, under date Sept. 21st:—Mr. F. W. Bergman is hereby appointed Manager of Hotels of the Grand Trunk Railway System and Grand Trunk Pacific Railway with headquarters for the present at Ottawa, Ont. Appointment effective October 1st.

In order to hasten the development of Northern Ontario through which the National Transcontinental Railway will run, the Ontario Government has leased the Abitibi pulp limit to Messrs. Shirley Ogilvie and F. H. Anson of Montreal, who will start immediately upon the construction of a pulp mill to cost $500,000 with a daily output of not less than 100 tons. This will not only mean a great deal to settlers in a convenient market for their pulpwood but will open up two more townships, one in Cochrane agency and the other in the Matheson district. The promoters of the undertaking have agreed to co-operate with the Provincial authorities in encouraging colonization as also to spend $50,000 in clearing the bush, erecting buildings and otherwise preparing the way for settlement in the neighborhood of Iroquois Falls; the work to be done on such lands as may be selected by the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, which will remain the property of the Crown.

Besides erecting a pulp mill the lessees are to construct and operate at such times as the Goverment directs, a paper mill with a capacity of at least 100 tons of paper a day; 75 tons to be turned out daily. A stock company with a subscribed capital of $1,500,000 is to be formed to develop limit.

The McGill track team will probably go into regular training quarters on October 1st, according to an announcement made yesterday. The progress of the squad has been very satisfactory, except in the spirits, where there is remarkable little material in evidence. Freshmen will be depended upon to fill up the shorter distances with able runners.

Athletics at McGill this year are being more thoroughly organized than ever before. This is so on the track in particular. It is planned to secure accommodation similar to that of the football squad and have all track men in strict training during October.

THE TURF.

LONDON, Sept. 22.—With the object of raising light harness racing to the high standing prevailing in America the London Trotting Club has been organized. The club has adopted many of the latest rules in light racing and will insist on their observance. The system of penalties and suspensions which prevailed under the old trotting union of Great Britain, will be revived and enforced.

The style of starting has been remodelled and all horses will be required to be sent off from behind tapes. The track will be closed to horses that are late in answering the starter's bell, thereby obviating the delays which have made the sport unpopular with spectators. A new body of stewards has been appointed and it wil operate under a fresh start of racing rules. The first meeting of the new club will be held at Imber Court Park. Thames Ditton, at the end of this month.

Ty and His Mother

"There are two ways for boys to become successful men—the first by being dutiful and loving sons, and the second by succeeding in some profession or any branch of manly sport or calling."

This is the philosophy of Mrs. W. H. Cobb, mother of "Ty" Cobb, the world's most famous baseball player. The little Southern woman's children seem to have taken naturally to baseball, for another son, Paul Cobb, is just now making good in the Western league with the Lincoln team.

Mrs. Cobb is not too enthusiastic about baseball, but she recognizes it as the means through which her boys are making their names in the world. Also she knows that they are making higher salaries than they could by any other legitimate occupation.

"I am not so proud of (Ty) for the name he has made for himself as I am that he grew up, left home and met hundreds of new friends and always remembered me," said Mrs. Cobb. "Every opportunity that he gets he sends me some little greeting and he likes to run home whenever he gets a vacation."

Recruiting Crisis In French Navy

PARIS, Sept. 24.—At the very time when the French fleet is concentrated in the Mediterranean and an early increase in naval armaments is thought necessary, the public has realized with alarm the crisis that has come about in the recruiting of the navy.

According to facts just made known by the Ministry of Marine, the career of a naval officer is now regarded with dislike by young Frenchmen entering life.

Twenty years ago on an average of ten candidates offered themselves for every post vacant. The number had dropped in 1900 to between four and five, and is to-day less than two. The number of junior officers is far short of the total required, and the naval colleges and training ships are nearly empty.

It is pointed out that this famine of cadets has come about in the nature of things from the new circumstances in which the navy finds itself. Some years ago students of the subjects remarked that youths were attracted to the navy in large numbers not by the uniform, but by the passion for travel which the life of a naval officer is promised to gratify. The novels of Capt. Viand (Pierre Loti) and his memories of picturesque expeditions to Japan, Tonking, Dahomey and Madagascar were still vivid, and, at the time in question there were still sailing cruisers which went around the world, as well as the Far Eastern squadron and the division in the Pacific and Atlantic.

To-day, however, say these critics, the illusion is dispelled. Squadrons no longer make long voyages. For a warship to go from Toulon to Brest is a step requiring Cabinet deliberations. For reasons of economy in coal consumption vessels are not allowed to move from the yard more than is absolutely necessary, and only manoeuvre with in the narrowest possible zone. The glamor of foreign travel and adventure thus no longer tempts the French youth, who sees in modern battleships only floating garrisons in which officers are compelled to live day and night.

These conditions, which are common to all fleets, have, it is thought, been further aggravated in France by the long series of accidents and disasters which have devasted the navy in recent years and enormously lowered its prestige among Frenchmen.

Still another cause of the crisis in recruiting is believed to be that the value of the navy to the country is underestimated or questioned by the bulk of the population, whose enthusiasm and patriotism go in all instances to the army. The purposes of the navy are, it is said, too abstract and remote to make any vital appeal to the French public.

In view of the present alarming prospects, the Minister of Marine, M. Delcasse, has appointed a commission to recognize the service, study the steps necessary to make the following of a naval career more atractive, and remove the pessimism which is now rife throughout the service.

The commission has already reported that no means exist for gaining these ends without increased expenditure. It is believed that the only way to make the navy more attractive and assure a sufficient supply of officers is a considerable increase of pay and pensions.

"Kid" McCoy Sues Belgi n Government

BRUSSELS, Sept. 24.—"Kid" McCoy filed a claim with the Belgian government to-day for $200,000 damages. McCoy was arrested in London July 26, at the request of the Ostend police, who accused him of complicity in a theft of jewels from the Princess of Thurn and Taxis at a hotel there a few days before. He was detained, part of the time in jail and part of the time out under bond, until Aug. 22, when it was admitted that no ground existed for accusing him.

English Aviators to Found National League

LONDOS, Sept., 24.—The death of H. J. D. Astley by the fall of his aeroplane at Belfast has given imptus to the movement to found a national aviator's league. Astley was the 20th British airman to lose his life. A similar league has already been founded in the United States. Astley, whose aeroplane met with disaster while executing too sharp a turn, was the heir of a millionaire and a descendant of Cromwell.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

CARTWRIGHT IS DEAD

Sir Richard Passes Away Suddenly After Operation.

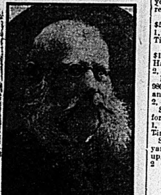
Liberal Statesman Who Has Had so Great a Share In the Shaping of Canada's Destinies Dies In His Seventy-Seventh Year—He Had Been Half a Century In Politics—His Demise Was Quite Unexpected.

Kingston, Sept. 25.—Sir Richard Cartwright died suddenly at 11.25 yesterday morning. He was a patient at the General Hospital here.

Following an operation for hernia last week, Sir Richard had rallied, giving his medical attendants every hope for his recovery, notwithstanding his advanced years. At 10 o'clock yesterday it was suddenly discovered that the venerable statesman had lapsed into unconsciousness, death subsequently being caused by heart failure, due to shock from the operation. The end came peacefully, and he was surrounded by his family, including Lady Cartwright.

It is the wish of the relatives that the funeral be a private one at St. Mark's Church, Barriefield, on Thursday morning, and that Rev. O. G. Dobbs, cousin of Sir Richard, should officiate.

Born Dec. 4, 1835, Sir Richard had not completed his 77th year. He was the son of the late Rev. R. D. Cartwright, chaplain to the forces at Kingston, and was the grandson of the Hon. Richard Cartwright, a prominent United Empire Loyalist of his day, formerly a judge in the court of common pleas in Upper Canada.



SIR RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

The ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce under the Laurier administration, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and after his return to Canada, became president of the Commercial Bank of Canada, an institution now defunct. He entered public life as a member of Parliament for Lennox and Addington in 1863, and continued to sit for that constituency until Confederation in 1867. Under the British North America Act, Lennox and Addington was divided into two constituencies, and from 1867 to 1878 Mr. Cartwright sat for Lennox County. Being defeated at the elections in the latter year, he was subsequently returned for Centre Bruce, which he represented up to the close of the Parliament. He was then elected for South Huron, and since the general election of 1887, he has sat for South Oxford. He belonged to one of the old Tory families of Upper Canada, and in the early days of his public career gave an independent support to Sir John A. Macdonald.

Since the period of the "Pacific Scandal" he has acted with and been a member of the Reform party, and on the resignation of the Macdonald administration, in November, 1873, he became Finance Minister in the Cabinet, then formed by Mr. Mackenzie, and continued in that office up to the defeat of the Government, September, 1878. Subsequently, while in opposition, he became chief spokesman for his party on all fiscal subjects, and developed in debate powers of oratory superior to other public men of his time, save only the Hon. William Macdougall. His speech in seconding the vote of thanks to the volunteers who had served in the Northwest Rebellion, 1885, is regarded as one of the masterpieces of Canadian Parliamentary eloquence.

On Sir Wilfrid's accession to power, in July, 1893, the late Sir Richard Cartwright—he had been created a K.C.M.G. in 1879—became Minister of Trade and Commerce in the newly-formed Government, and as such was engaged for some months in framing a new fiscal policy for the Dominion. In February, 1897, he undertook, with Sir L. H. Davies, a trade mission to Washington.

Just before the general election of 1904 he was called to the Senate, and from 1909 till the defeat of the Laurier administration was leader of the Government in that body.

He was a large property owner in Kingston and its environs and had given largely to charitable and deserving undertakings. He was elected president of the Women's Medical College, Kingston, 1887; vice-president of the Trusts Corporation of Ontario, was one of the three trustees in Canada for the Equitable Life Insurance Co., president of the Frontenac Loan & Investment Co. during its existence. Sir Richard was president of the Ontario Reform Club, Toronto, and of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association.

During Sir Wilfrid's absence from Canada in 1897, he discharged the duties of acting Premier. He was made a K.C.M.G. on the completion of the 60th year of the late Queen Victoria's reign. He was a member of the Church of England, and in 1859 married Francis, the elder daughter of Col. Alexander Lawe, H.E.I.C.S., of Cork, Ireland.

NATURE'S ESSENCE.---Extracted From Forest Plants.

Nature's laws are perfect, but disease follows if these laws are not obeyed. Go straight to nature for the cure, to the forest; there are mysteries here that we can fathom for you. Take the bark of the wild-cherry tree, the root of mandrake, stone, Oregon grape root, queen's root, bloodroot and golden seal, make a scientific, non-alcoholic extract of them with just the right proportions and you have Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It took Dr. Pierce, with the assistance of two learned chemists, eight years of hard work experimenting to make this pure glyceric extract and alterative of the greatest efficiency and without the use of a particle of alcohol.

Just the sort of remedy you need to make rich, red blood, and cure that lassitude and feeling of nerve exhaustion. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery bears the stamp of PUBLIC APPROVAL and has sold more largely in the past forty years than any other blood purifier and stomach tonic.

"Some time ago I got out of health—my stomach seemed to be the seat of the trouble," writes MR. EZRA WILLIAMS, of Belleville, Kans. "I commenced to doctor with all the doctors at home as well as with other specialists on stomach and digestive organs. None seemed to do any good—in fact, most of the medicines did me harm. Finally, I wrote to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., who replied, stating that I had liver complaint with indigestion and constipation, and advised Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.'

"The 'Discovery' and 'Pellets,' have 'put me on my feet again'—seemed to be just what I needed. I could not have recovered without them."

E. WILLIAMS, ESQ.

Belgrade, Servia, Sept. 25.—No benefit could be obtaind by the Balkan nations through a war with Turkey, according to a declaration said to have been made by the diplomatic representatives of Great Britain, France and Russia during a call at the Servia Foreign Office yesterday. The Stampa is the authority for the report of the foreign diplomats' action, and it adds that the three powers at the same time expressed their intention of inducing Turkey to introduce early reforms in Macedonia.

In spite of official denials that there is any prospect of hostilities, the Servian War Office continues to purchase large quantities of food supplies.

LEADERS' TRIBUTE.

Political Chieftains Express Affection For Cartwright.

Ottawa, Sept. 25.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier said: "I have lost in Sir Richard one of my oldest personal friends. I was associated with him for more than thirty years.

"As leader of the party, my relations with him were at all times most cordial. If there arose between us differences of opinion, it was never difficult to adjust them satisfactorily. Sir Richard was a very strong man, but those only who were intimately associated with him knew his chivalrous nature.

"He was a patriot, a thorough gentleman, and a charming man."

Premier Borden said: "The death of Sir Richard Cartwright comes as a shock to those who have been his colleagues in Parliament whether on one or the other side of the House. He has been a great figure in public life for more than 40 years, and no one can forget his strong personality, his wonderful power of debate, or the wonderful contrast between the extreme kindliness of his disposition in private life and his great command of attack and invective in debate, whether upon the hustings or in Parliament."

Regret at Ottawa.

Ottawa, Sept. 25.—The news of the passing of Sir Richard Cartwright was received in official and political circles here with a feeling of profound regret. The venerable Liberal knight was much admired and respected by the men of both political creeds and on all sides are heard generous tributes to his memory.

Although it is understood that his funeral will be private, one or more members of the Cabinet will be present to represent the Government.

AMBASSADOR DIES.

Von Bieberstein Had Been Envoy to Britain Since Last May.

Badenweiler, Baden, Germany, Sept 25.—Germany's most powerful and brilliant diplomat, Baron Adolf Marschall von Bieberstein, died here yesterday after a short illness.

The baron, who had occupied the position of German ambassador in London only since May this year, had come here to take a course of alkaline water treatment and was in comparatively good health until a week ago. Then be suddenly fell ill. The baron had suffered from an attack of influenza earlier in the year, and his death is attributed to the after-effects of that malady and to his strenuous work in London since his appointment to the embassy there.

The baron, who was a native of Baden, often visited his old home. He was nearly 70 years of age, having been born at Neuershausen on Oct. 12, 1842.

His appointment to London at a critical time was generally supposed to be fraught with great significance.

Baron Marschall von Bieberstein was regarded as one of the most accomplished diplomats throughout the world. Since the death of Bismarck he had been considered as Germany's "strong man." In fact, he stepped into the shoes of Bismarck when he left office in 1890, becoming on April 1, of that year secretary of state for foreign affairs. In 1894 he became Prussian minister of state, and three years later the Emperor, recognizing his abilities as a statesman, appointed him ambassador to Turkey. He remained at Constantinople over fourteen years.

Toronto Police Inquiry.

Toronto, Sept 25.—All the witnesses that the police commissioners intend calling to give evidence in the investigation into Inspector Duncan's conduct in handling the Farmers' Bank papers have been heard. The next session will be held Friday, Oct. 4, when M. K. Cowan, for the defence, may call witnesses and produce certain letters relating to the detective department.

The commissioners think that they now have enough data on which to reach a decision. The point which they have to decide is whether Inspector Duncans' statements could be relied upon—a question of veracity.

Fear Competition From Women.

Cardiff, Wales, Sept. 25.—The law society of Cardiff is opposed to women practicing law. A resolution in favor of the admission of women to the bar was defeated at the annual meeting of the society yesterday. The resolution also urged the council of the society to support a bill that is to be introduced in Parliament enabling women to practice. The chief ground for this opposition, it was said, was that competition by women would be injurious to men who practice law.

Waterloo Crops Ruined.

Galt, Sept. 25.—Continued wet weather has practically ruined the root crops, potatoes, carrots, onions and celery in various sections of the Waterloo district, where a specialty is made of such. A vegetable famine is looked for. Oats, barley and hay are also extensively damaged.

Ulster Approves Covenant.

New York, Sept. 24.—A Belfast cable yesterday afternoon says:

The Ulster Unionist Council met here to-day (Monday) and approved the text of the anti-home rule covenant drawn up by its executive committee on Sept. 19. Orangemen throughout Ireland will subscribe to it next Saturday, at what promises to be the most momentous political gathering since the days of the Scotch Covenanters.

Former Solicitor-General of Ireland Sir Edward Carson was chairman. Other notables present were the Marquis of Londonderry, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, ex-Attorney-General for Ireland James H. Campbell and several members of Parliament of the King's Privy Council.

The covenant pledges Orangemen not to recognize the Irish Parliament, to disregard its laws and to refuse payment of taxes to the Dublin treasury. The utmost loyalty to King George is expressed.

It is understood that the council will also plan a provisional government, to assume control in Ulster the day home rule becomes effective.

The covenant says resistance to home rule will be passive "as long as possible."

WINNIPEG, Sept. 24.—Trading was dull and quiet in futures, altho prices were stronger on the generally unfavorable weather in the three provinces for threshing operations. The opening figures were ¼c to ⅝c higher, following which the market was steady and fluctuations were narrow, and closed ⅜c to ½c higher.

Cash demand was good for all grades, while offerings continue light, despite the heavy receipts, and premiums were higher on spot. Export enquiry was very quiet and no new business was reported.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Sept. 24.—The foreign demand for both Manitoba and Duluth wheat was poor and the prices bid were out of line. A very strong feeling prevails in the market for oats, and prices have scored a further advance of 1½c to 2c per bushel for regular grades, owing to the increasing scarcity, and sales of heated oats were made freely at 45c. The demand from European sources for new crop spring wheat flour was fairly good, and sales of 15,000 sacks were made for October, November and December shipment. The local demand for old flour is steadily increasing, and the market is active at steady prices. Millfeed is firm under a good demand. Butter is more active and firm. Nobleman Buys Land.

London, Sept. 25.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—One of the largest individual land sales ever effected in this country has just been completed here. The purchaser, the C.A.P. is informed, is no less a person than Lord Joicey, the famous coal mine owner and one of the wealthiest Liberal peers in Great Britain. His lordship has purchased nearly 24,000 acres of mixed farm and dairy farming land in the vicinity of Fort George, B.C., for which he paid $450,000.

Expects Election at Once.

London, Sept. 25.—(C.A.P.)—The Yorkshire Post affirms confidently that there will be a general election almost immediately. It states that the only real difference is whether it will be before or after Christmas.

"It is not impossible," The Post says, "that we are on the eve of a Liberal split regarding the home rule which may not equal that of 1886, but still may be very serious."

Defining a Fathom.

"A fathom," explained a schoolteacher to her class in mathematics, "is a nautical word used in defining distance. It means six feet. Now, I want some little girl to give me a sentence using the word 'fathom.'" Instantly a hand shot up. "Well, Mary, you may give your sentence." Mary stood up proudly. "The reason flies can walk on the ceiling," said the observant child, "is because they have a fathom!"

ANAEMIA IS FATAL
IF NOT CHECKED

One of the most common troubles of girls and women—A THIN, WATERY CONDITION OF THE BLOOD.—This trouble (Anaemia) is seen almost every day. The appearance is striking—pale, sallow complexion, circles about the eyes, shortness of breath on slight exertion, and such a one suffers from palpitation of the heart, headache, indigestion, swelling of hands or feet, constipation, etc. All these symptoms may not be present in your case, depending on the duration and the stage of the disease.

If not remedied the blood becomes more thin and watery, subsequently causing swelling and dropsy.—Do not allow this trouble to advance.—Check it now.—You can not only check it, but you can bring about a complete cure by using RESTORATONE TABLETS and following the mode of living described on the circular accompanying each box of Tablets. The advice is free and the Restoratone Tablets will create pure, healthy blood.

THE SECRET OF YOUR RECOVERY. 4

Restoratone Tablets are unexcelled as an efficient restorer of the blood and a tonic to the entire system—promoting the activity of special organs at fault. They are a reliable cure for anæmia, indigestion, nervousness, insomnia, palpitation of the heart, and pains and irregularities of girls and women. This has been proven by tests without number. Give them a trial. A worthless remedy is never substituted. See that you accept no substitute for Restoratone Tablets. For sale at your druggist's for 50 cents a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50, or cheerfully sent to you on receipt of price by addressing The Restoratone Co., Limited, Toronto, Canada.

Australia and United States

NEW YORK, Sept, 24.—Australia's feeling of cordial friendship for the U. S. was testified to recently by Sir George H. Reid, formed premier and now high commissioner of Australia, who was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by the merchant's association here. Although 75 per cent. of Australia's imports were from the British Empire, the High Commissioner noted in his address. he expressed gratification that the trade of his continent with the U. S. was a large one and that the feel- of the Australian people for the people of the U. S. were those of the moset genuine affection.

"We had only one opportunity of really showing how we felt in reference to your people," added Sir George "and that was two or three years ago, when a magnificent fleet visited Australia. There never was, I think, a wilder demonstration of enthusiasm in Australia than when we had the opportunity of taking our American cousins by the hand and offering them the best of our hospitality.

'The loyalty of the people of Australia for the Motherland was never so intense as it is to-day but we never had reservation in our feeling for the people of the U. S. A."

China and Mongolia

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The Chinese Foreign Minister has settled with President Yuan Shi Kai on the lines of an energetic policy in Mongolia, says a Peking despatch to the Daily Telegraph. He will send a strong protest against the clandestine entry of Russian troops into Mongolia and a proposal to repay to Russia the loans advanced to the Mongols. He will further greatly strengthen the frontied garrisons in Manchuria and confiscate all arms and munitions found in Manchuria, Mongolia and Turkestan.

With regard to Thibet, the Chinese Government intends vigorously to protest against the British occupation of the disputed frontier and to instruct the Chinese commissioner at Lhassa to enforce strictly the Chinese customs and regulations on the Thibetan frontier.

Small Advance In Insurance

OTTAWA, Sept. 24.—The 41st annual convention of the Canadian Manufactures' Association, which opened here this morning, with an attendance of about 400 delegates, spent a very busy day, while in the evening the delegates were the guests of a brilliant reception given by the Ottawa Valley branch of the association at the Chateau Laurier. The guests were received by Senator and Mrs. Edwards, and included a number of the cabinet ministers and well known men in business and political life.

A good deal of interesting discussion centred around the report of the insurance committee at the afternoon session. The report said that Canada is becoming a more attractive field for insurance companies throughout the world. There are now 79 companies with interests in Canada. Of these, 29 are Canadian, 23 British and 27 United States and foreign. Though the number of insurance companies has increased abnormally in Canada during the last few years, yet the volume of business of these companies has not increased proportionately. As a matter of fact the increase of business has been little more than the increase in 1905.

The Government reports for 1911 shows a slight increase in the amount of insurance reported in unlicensed companies from $189,515,229 to $191,038,071, but the percentage of the whole shows a reduction of from 10 1-2 per cent. to 9 3-4 per cent.

The prevailing theme of the discussion was in favor of the members of the association supporting the insurance companies maintained by the C. M. A. and not being entirely at the mercy of the Canadian Fire Under-

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Fearing the rehearsal of some more such anecdotes, I went on deck; and Walmer, who was a kind and good-natured fellow, clambered aloft with his most powerful glass. He scanned the smooth and oily expanse of ocean in every direction, but no trace of plank or raft, or of any floating thing, could anywhere be seen.

I pictured to myself alternately Clarice and Fanny—in the selfishness of love I must admit that it was chiefly of the former I thought—enduring all the horrors of a protracted death upon n open raft, half submerged in the sea, the unsheltered glare of the fierce torpical sun by day, the gloom and chill and greater terrors of the night—hunger, thirst, despair, and madness—all that I had ever read of in romance and reality came floating fast upon my memory now.

They might have had some food—some water, too. If so, how long would they last?

Would they be kind to her, or would brutal, sordid selfishness prevail. Doubtless they would do all that Christians might do to alleviate her terrible sufferings. She was a woman, and ever gentle and soft in her nature. Oh, too tender for a fate so terrible.

And that ubiquitous and mysterious Mynheer S. van Neukerque—was he too, on the craft, one of the ten? He who, for all I knew, might be similar in nature to that terrible being, in whose strange nature poor Bruine Kastell had almost taught me to believe, and who, I knew, had abstracted the dead body of Gertrude van Bommel.—

The whole episode of the bottle was like a hideous dream, which I could not have realized but for the presence and tangible existence of the piece of pencilled paper—that terrible and solemn message of the dying from the sea.

Every day we read of such messages in the newspapers. They are picked up in a bay and creek, on the high seas, as this one was, or by the loiterers among the shingles and the shell-gatherers by the shore; but to how few hearts do they come so terribly home as this one came to me.

As I looked upon the ocean with grief and loathing it seemed to me but as a grave—a vast grave now to me—the grave of all my hopes and desires.

"'Oh, treacherous sea!'" thought I, quoting the words of another, "'you can smile and smile, and break into ten thousand smiles, and make such dainty music on the pebbly shore, who can believe how cruel your wrath can be that has not seen you tear man's floating house to fragments, and whelm him with his dear ones in your gaping depths?'"

And thus by the treacherous sea had the floating home of Clarice been torn, and my poor heart too.

Yet, as the drowning man will cling to straws, I remembered the words of Walmer and hoping against hope, believed that at Ascension, where he meant to touch, we might hear some tidings of the lost ship, or of the raft, with the survivors of her passengers and crew.

CHAPTER XLIII.

Next morning I was roused from my sleepless couch by the cheerful voice of Walmer hailing me down the companion way.

"Come on deck, Captain Haddon, Ascension is now in sight, and bears about twelve miles north on the lee bow!"

"A litle time and I may know all—the best or the worst—. Death itself is better than the bitterness and horror of such suspense as this," thought I, as I sprang from the pillow on which I had not closed an eye during the long, long, weary night that had at last passed away.

The sky was calm, the sea smooth, the morning beautiful, and we were running before a fine breeze under a heavy press of canvas.

Not a sail was in sight; but the long, smoky pennant of some great ocean steamer, as yet unseen, though the sound of her engines could be heard for miles across the sea, rose at the horrizon far, far away.

And there upon our lee bow towered Ascension, the island of present hopes and fears.

After a long voyage, any land is a source of deep interest, whether it be one's native shore, or one on which our eyes have never rested; but this solitary island in the South Atlantic inspired a deep and terrible concern in me.

"Patience—patience!" I kept repeating "A little time, and I may know all."

"Few lives, even the most prosaic, are without some romance," said Walmer, who overheard me; "and this is a bit of yours."

'True," replied I; "but sorrowful—too sorrowful to be endured with patience. What a strange coincidence that our ship should pick up the message that mentioned the loss of hers."

"Yes; but stranger things than that happen in the course of a seafaring life.'

Fast rose the volcanic isle from the sea as the Wandered flew on under a cloud of sail. With many a balsatic peak, all portions, however, of one black and bleak conical mountain—the same on whose summit the pious and adventurous Portuguese, Juan de Novo, erected a stone cross when he discovered the island an Ascension Day in 1501—the sterile place is so bare that only the vegetable productions, one of which is grass, exist in all its sixty miles, of rock and sand. It is now the rendezvous of our African squadron; but in times long past the early voyagers were wont to desposit their letters in a crevice of the rocks, still known as the sailor's post-office.

There, in a well-corked bottle, the crews left their tender messages to sweethearts and friends, and they were taken to their destination by the crew of the next ship that passed in a contrary direction, and of many a brave heart and many a stout ship that never have been heard of more was the last news found in that primitive letter-box in the then lonely Isle of Ascension.

In that bleak place a little British settlement has sprung up, and our flag was flying in the pigmy fort that was built when the great Emperor was pining a captive on that other lonely islet of the Southern Sea—the rock of St. Helena.

We ran along the coast of the island, which is about ten miles long. The wind changed a little as we got under its lee; but Walmer worked his ship into the Bay of Ascension, and then, shortening sail, hove to, and ordered a boat to be lowered instantly.

I was the second man who sprang into her, and with six hands Walmer and I were pulled ashore. Of the harbour master—if the old man in charge of the little port and pier may be so named—we made inquiry as to whether any one had heard aught of the wreck of the Eugenie, or of her raft.

But he and all who gathered round us shook their heads. Some months before a ship so named touched at Ascension on her way to the Leeward Isle of Jamaica, none knew exactly which; but all had prospered well with her and her crew to that time.

If she had foundered it must have been soon after leaving Ascension, as heavy gales of wind had occurred about that time, and in one of them Her Majesty's ship Hairyadney"—for so he named it—"had all her masts swept by the board like baccy pipes."

With this meagre and rather alarming information I was forced to be contented, and Walmer, after getting five fine turtles, a goat, and some spirits for our use in the cabin, shoved off for the ship. We soon after bore up, making all possible sail, and in six hours Ascension was as many leagues astern.

On arriving in Jamaica now rested the last visage of hope in my aching heart. I could but visit the merchants or brokers to whom she was consigned, and hear from them a final corroboration of that terrible message from the sea.

"If the underwriters have paid up", said Walmer, 'we may be certain that it is dickey with the poor Eugenie, and Davy Jones alone could tell her story!"

Oh, how dear seems that which we have lost, or are about to lose forever! Can it be that true love only becomes lasting after separation or death? The wind was favourable and for weeks our voyage was most prosperous. In due time, in our north-western course, we sighted Cape San Roque, a headland of Brazil, and ran along the coast of South America, when a terrible catasrophe overtook us on the sea.

The night was beautiful. The ship was lying her course under easy sail, and I was walking on the weather side of the quarter-deck alone, and occupied only with my own thoughts and the fag end of a cheroot before going below to seek my restless couch. There was something sadly soothing in the calm aspect of the midnight sea, and in the rippling sound of its waters as the ship glided through them, in the solemn hum of the wind through the rigging aloft, and in the appearance of and whiteness of her vast cloud of canvas, for though there was no moon the sail seemed white as snow against the deep blue of the starlit sky.

Yet the skies of those southern climes are less studded with stars than those of our own northern hemisphere. For south of the equator are great spaces without a single twinkler, and these dark and unlighted portions of blue vacuity give a wonderful brightness to such constellations as the Southern Cross—one so wonderful in its beauty, and so impressive in its aspect, that more than once I saw a devout Spanish seaman on board the Wanderer, a Catholic, on his knees in a dark corner of the ship, lest his English messmates should mock him, at his prayers, with his black and shining eyes fixed earnestly upon it, as the emblem of his faith glitering in its glory amid the blue dome of heaven.

Suddenly I was roused from my own thoughts by that cry which everywhere fills the heart with alarm; but nowhere is so fatal in its significance as at sea.

"Fire!—fire in the forehold! Fire! fire!"

DON'T HIDE THEM WITH A VEIL; REMOVE THEM WITH THE NEW DRUG.

An eminent skin specialist recently discovered a new drug, othine—double strength, which is so uniformly successful in removing freckles and giving a clear, beautiful complexion that it is sold by J. S. McKeown under an absolute guarantee to refund the money it it fails.

Don't hide your freckles under a veil; get an ounce of othine and remove them. Even the first night's use will show a wonderful improvement, some of the lighter freckles vanishing entirely. It is absolutely harmless, and cannot injure the most tender skin.

Be sure to ask J. S. McKeown for the double strength othine; it is this that is sold on the money back guarantee.

Future of Persia

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Sergius Sazohoff, the Russian Foreign Minister, has arrived here for a series of conferences with Sir Edward Grey, the British secretary of state for foreign affairs, in London and at Balmoral Castle, where the Russian statesman will be the guest of King George all next week. All phases of the policy affecting England and Russia will be discussed, but the chief topic, it is understood, will be the future of Persia.

The Anglo-Russian agreement of 1907 has not worked altogether satisfactorily and it is hoped that the conferences of the coming week will so revise it as to make the task of mutual co-operation, particularly in Persia, the Balkans, Thibet and Mongolia easier.

Persia, naturally, will receive the greatest attention. It is suggested that the two powers must assume a more direct responsibility in the administration of their respective spheres of influence in Persia.

But Three Victims of Fraser.

Vancouver, Sept. 24.—Reports were sent from Edmonton two weeks ago that 25 persons had been drowned in Grand Canyon of the Fraser River. Official investigation shows that only three persons have lost their lives since June 1.

CRIPPLED NEWSBOY GIVES LEG TO SAVE LIFE OF BURNED GIRL

"I'll Take a Chance," the Little Hero Cries When Told the Skin Grafting Operation Might Kill Him.

GARY, Ind., Sept. 25.—Miss Ethel Smith, a young woman who was seriously burned when a spark from the motorcycle she was riding ignited her colthing, today accepted the offer of William Rugh, a crippled newsboy, to give her his useless leg, the skin of which is to be grafted on her body.

"It is wonderful, heroic," said the girl at the hospital today, tears streaming down her cheeks. "I want to live, but he mustn't do it if there is the slightest danger. My life is not worth such a sacrifice."

The boy read the story of the accident in the papers he was selling. When he learned that more skin was needed, he decided to make the sacrifice for the girl he had never seen. The doctors told him that to remove the skin from his leg might mean his death.

"Then take the leg," said the lad "I don't need it. It will only mean that I must have two crutches instead of one. My leg has been useless since I was three years old, anyway."

"I'll take a chance," said the lad. "That's better than standing around and letting the girl die, isn' it?"

Col. Astor's Cousin Dies on His Little Farm

POUGHKEEPIE, Sept. 25.—Henry Beekman Armstrong, who died in the town of Red Hook several days ago, left a quarter of a million dollars to charities, and provided that the clergyman officiating at his funeral should receive $25 for his services. Armstrong ,who lived as a recluse for many years, was a cousin of Colonel John Jacob Astor. A blasted romance in early youth caused Armstrong to retire to his little farm, where he lived alone.

What Canada is Most in Need of President Curry Says Not Wider Markets But Better Transportation Facilities.

OTTAWA, Sept. 25.—President Curry of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in his annual address yesterday, declared that what was the greatest need of Canada was not wider markets, but adequate transportation facilities to enable them to supply the home market. He declared in favor of immediate action on the navy question and against reciprocity. He also deprecated the connection of the Canadian Labor Unions with those of the United States, and suggested that a little more discernment in the treatment of men would go far towards relieving the shortage of labor which prevented manufacturers from doing the business they should.

Dentist Found Patient Dead

SHARON, Pa., Sept. 25.—Mrs. Charles McNally, 34 years old, died in a dentist's chair in Hubbard, near here, today, while under an anesthetic to have fifteen teeth drawn.

She was examined by a physician and chloroform was administered. After the teeth had been removed she was revived, rested for a time, and was again chloroformed.

When the other five teeth had been removed, it was discovered that the woman was dead.

BARONESS DIES IN TORONTO AT AGED WOMEN'S HOME

There died at the Aged Woman's Home in Belmont Street, Toronto, yesterday, Olga, Baroness von Heimrod, who lived for many years on a little farm at Humber Bay. The Baron died about two years ago and it was understood that the Baroness had come into considerable annuity, conditional upon her returning to Europe. Her health, however, would not permit her to undertake this voyage and she has been looked after at the Aged Woman's Home by some of the prominent Geramn families resident in Toronto.

The Baron von Heimrod came from a distinguished noble Prussion family and when he came to Toronto many years ago he had considerable money, which, however he lost in unfortunate speculations. The old couple for many years eked out an existence by selling what they raised at their little farm at Humber Bay. To see them driving chickens, eggs, vegetables, etc., which down town to market in their quaint old-fashioned rig was an exceedingly interesting sight.

Old Schooner Sinks Crews Narrow Escape

WINDSOR, Sept. 25.—Five men, comprising the crew of the schooner Newell Hubbard of Detroit, narrowly escaped drowning when their boat sprang a leak two miles south of Bois Blanc Island in Lake Erie, and plunged to the bottom to-day. All the men are Detroiters. They are: Capt. John Denstead, Robert Ralph, Louis F. Reteau, Frank Dempsey and William Horey.

The boat was bound from Pelee Island to Detroit with a cargo of gravel, and went down suddenly in twenty-five feet of water. So quickly did the old vessel sink that there was no time to launch the lifeboat. Reteau and Dempsey were unable to swim, and but for the timely arrival of the tug Aldrich, in command of Captain Hackett, they would probably drowned. The others were about exhausted when picked up by the tug. The shipwrecked crew were taken to Amherstburg and later left for Detroit.

Traffic Resumed

MONTREAL, Sept. 25—Traffic was partially resumed this morning through the Lachine canal, the vessels in which had been tied up by the destruction of the lock gates yesterday. As it is, ten steamers are held here, including the Glenaliah and Strathcona, bound for Fort William; the Dundurn, bound for Hamilton, and the Rock Ferry, bound for Toronto.

It is hoped by the Canal Department of the Government to fix up the locks so that traffic can be completely resumed this evening.

Escape of the Bank Robbers

CHICAGO, Sept. 25.—Mayor Carter H. Harrison returned to Chicago last night after a hunting trip of several days in Canadian woods. The mayor said he would take up immediately the scandal concerning the escape of the Canadian bank robbers, in which members of the police force are involved.

"I mean to get at the bottom of the matter at once," said Mr. Harrison, "and the first thing I do when I arrive at my office will be to consult with Assistant Chief of Police Schuettler. The reports I have seen of the affair in the Canadian papers have been only meagre, and I am sure I am not fully informed concerning the trouble."

The mayor verified the report that he had shot a big bull moose, and said he meant to have the antlers mounted.

Good Use for It

CHICAGO, Sept 25.—Emperor William, of Germany, the tires of which are made from a substance extracted from whiskey, according to Dr. H. A. Bernson, head of the chemistry department of Heidelburg University, who with 300 other scientists is in Chicago to attend the eighth annual International Congress of Applied Chemistry.

He declares that rubber has been made from whiskey for several years at several experimental laboratories in Germany and that recently a set of automobile tires were presented to Emperor William. According to Mr. Bernson the process of manufacture is intricate. By special processes of fermentation the scientists increase the amount of fusil oil in whiskey, then extract the oil and use it in place of the raw gum that is tapped from rubber trees.

NEW YORK REPUBLICANS PROGRESSING SLOWLY

SARATOGA, N. Y., Sept. 26.—Only two of the questions to be determined by the Republican state convention that at noon yesterday seemed settled this morning, and these were the names of the temporary and permanent chairmen.

Candidates and the platform remained to be discussed, and it may not be until Friday, the very day when the nominations are expected to be made, that the ticket is determined. When the convention met about noon the leaders expected to effect a temporary organization, name committees and then adjourn, to let the committee on resolutions prepare the platform.

WILSON'S SWEEPING VICTORY

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 25.—That Governor Wilson won a sweeping victory in the New Jersey primaries yesterday was evident from the returns which sifted into Democratic Leadquarters here during the early hours of the day. In his fight to prevent the nomination for United States Senator of former Senator James Smith, jr., Governor Wilson carried the state by a plurality of nearly, if not quite, 20,000, winning in every county except one—that one being Essex, the stronghold of the Smith forces.

"The vote is an absolute expression of the people in New Jersey in favor fo the policies of Governor Wilson. On this basis, I submitted my candidacy to the people, and they supported me admirably. The victory of Mr. Wilson seems now to be assured at the November elections."

Jumping Into Whirlpool Woman Carried to Death

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Sept. 25.—Jumping from the platform at the foot of the inclined railway, an unknown woman was carried to her death in the waters of the Whirlpool Rapids shortly after 2 o'clock this afternoon. The affair was observed by three men who were on the tower bridge at the time, and who at once gave the alarm. The body was lost to sight almost instantly. The woman, whose identity had not been established up until late to-night, was alone, and it was reported that she deliberately threw herself from the platform. The officals stationed at the bridges have no recollection of her crossing the bridges.

Pultizer School of Journalism Opens

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—The opening of the school of journalism at Columbia University to-day found an enrollment which, according to Dr. Talcott Williams, its director, exceeded all expectations. No figures as to the number of students were given out to-day, as it was declared that the registration would not be completed until the latter part of the week. The student body of the new school is representative of every section of the country, indicating the wide spread interest aroused by the late Joseph Pulitzer's gift.

Nearly half of the men in the first year class are newspaer reporters of from one to four year's experience. The registration in the upper classes is made up of men who have received university degrees and who desired technical newspaper training to fit themselves for journalism.

Student Shot Wounds Serious

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 25.—Patrick Manley, aged 17, son of Edward Manley, a Thorold, Ont., merchant, is in a local hospital, in a serious condition tonight with a bullet from Thomas Connolly's revolver in his abdomen. Both are students at Niagara University, three miles north of this city.

No information regarding the shooting can be obtained at the university, the priests refusing to be interviewed.

Young Manley made a statement to Coroner Walter A. Scott tonight, in which he declared he was wounded when Connolly's revolver exploded while the two boys were examining their weapons in the trunk room of the college. He was emphatic in declaring Connolly blameless.

Physicans will endeavor to locate the bullet with the X-rays, but say the patient is in a very serious condition. No statement could be obtained from Connolly.

Funeral of Dead Statesman to be of Public Nature

Lady Cartwright Receives Condolence from Premier--Pallbearers' Names.

KINGSTON, Sept. 26.—The arrangements have been made for the funeral of the late Right Hon. Sir Richard A. Cartwright. The remains will leave the family residence, "The Maples," Cartwright's Point, at 1.30 on this afternoon, and be conveyed to St. George's Cathedral on King street, where a burial service will be conducted by the Dean of Ontario, assisted by Rev. Ogilvie Dobbs, Brockville, cousin of the dead statesman.

The funeral will be of a public nature from the cathedral at 2.30 o'clock to Cararaqui Cemetery.

This morning, through W. F. Nickle, M. P., the family was informed that Senator J. A. Lougheed would represent the Dominion Government at the funeral.

"My colleagues and I desire to tender our deepest and respectful sympathy to you and to all the members of your family. (Signed) R. L. Borden.

The pall-bearers will be: Col. H. R. Smith, Sergeant-at-arms in the House of Commons; Col. S. C. McGill, and Messrs J. B. Walker, K. C., Francis Dobbs, and F. C. T. O'Hara, for years private secretary to Sir Richard.

Sons of the deceased who have arrived for the funeral are: Dr. R. C. Cartwright of Napanee; Mr. A. D., Ottawa, Capt. Frank, of Winnipeg, and Henry of Toronto. The two sons in British Columbia will not be here.

Dominion Operation Of H. B. Route

WINNIPEG, Sept. 25.—"I am of the opinion that the Hudson Bay Railway undertaking is of so risky a nature and its ultimate success so problematical that it should be operated by the Dominion Government until its real value has been demonstrated," said Sir Donald Mann here to-day.

"I know," he added, "when the Canadian Northern started we had the choice of going north to the Bay or east and west, and I think the result has justified our judgment. But you can never tell, and the result is uncertain. Undoubtedly there will be a large fish trade from the north and valuable mineral deposits will be found along the right of way, as happened in the case of the Ontario Government road, making the line of incalculable worth. Add to this that there is bound to be considerable through traffic, freight and passenger, the element of risk is materially reduced. But I think that the right course is being pursued."

Sir Donald belittled the suggestion that so long a line could be electrified profitably when traffic would be so scanty.

Gypsy Throws Count Through a Window

VIENNA, Sept. 25.—The leveling influence of the nude has had a serious and at the same time comic result in the Hungarian Baths at Budapest.

Count Karl Esterhazy, returning from a dip, was entering his dressing cabin, when he collided with Ladislas Racz, the thirty-sixth son of the socalled Gypsy King. Both of the men being undressed there was nothing to differentiate their social position. The Count, being angry with Racz for bumping him slapped his face. The gypsy thereupon seized the Count and hurled him through a glass door, the nobleman, being so severely cut that he was taken to the hospital.

Racz was horrified when he learned of his victim's identity and Count Esterhazy in turn was furious on hearing that his assailant was a gypsy, the Count's rank making it impossible to fight a duel with his bathing opponent.

Madoc Man in Serious Runaway

Mr. John Ash a livery keeper of Madoc village, was the victim of a runaway at an early hour this morning. When driving toward the village his horses became frightened by the thunder storm and broke away, throwing Mr. Ash from the vehicle, breaking a limb and bruising him about the body.

Six Sets of Brains Each Year

What the average human brain does not know about itself would fill a big cavity in the place where most persons store their "grey matter." In fact, the most learned scientists admit that they have made only a beginning in the study of the most important part of the human body.

Perhaps the most interesting fact regarding the brains of men and animals is that weight does not indicate a high state of mentality. Repeated tests have proved that the average male brain weighs about 49 ounces, and that the average female brain weighs about 44 ounces. However, the relative weight of the male and female brains to that of the body is about the same in both sexes.

The taller the individual, the greater is his brain weight, but tests have shown that short persons have proportionately heavier brains than tall people. At birth the weight of the average male infant's brain is 11.65 ounces; of female infants 10 ounces. After the age of fifty the brain loses an ounce in weight in every ten years.

According to some scientists, every human being gets a complete new outfit of brains about every two months. They estimate that he durative of a nerve's life is approximately sixty days, and that every brain cell is destroyed and renewed that often. In other words, we all have six brand new sets of brains each year.

The following figures, showing the comparative weight of persons of different nationalities are interesting. According to Bastia and other brain experts, the average Scottish brain weighs 50 ounces; German brain, 49.6 ounces; English brain 49.5 ounces; French brain, 47.9 ounces; Zulu brain, 47.2 ounces; Pawnee brain, 47.1 ounces; Italian brain, 46.9 ounces; Hindoo brain, 45.1 ounces; Gipsy brain, 44.8 ounces; Bushman's brain, 44.6 ounces; Eskimo's brain, 43.9 ounces.

While the weight of the individual brain of animals in each particular species as compared with that of the entire system, may be said to have some bearing on the intelligence of the individual, there is no fixed proprotion between the weight of the brain and the total weight of the body, as between one species and another, as is sown by the following table.

	Aver. ounces.	Proportion	Per cent.
Elephant	164.4	1-439	0.53
Whale	87.8	1-25000	0.01
Man	49.4	1-42	2.38
Horse	17.6	1-534	0.19
Gorilla	15.0	1-213	0.47

Sheep	4.7	1-337	0.21

GLEANED FROM OUR EXCHANGES

Large quantities of woolen rags are shipped annually from this country to England, and the trade with the shoddy manufacturers is now firmly established. Last year the rags sent from Canada to the United Kingdom were valued at $238,740, whereas six years ago they amounted to only $35,633.—Kingston Whig.

A lot of mothers who under ordinary circumstances would blush to tell a lie have been known to stretch the truth when it came to buying railway tickets for their children "under twelve." They are to be saved this embarrassment if Canadian railroads carry out the suggestion brought over from Europe of charging full fare for children more than three feet, eight inches tall. Short, pudgy offspring should immediately become all the rage.—Kingston Whig.

The Dominion Government is making a wise move in encouraging the immigration to this country from Great Britain of reservists of the special army reserve. They should make useful citizens in time of peace, while in time of trouble—which let us hope is a long time off—their usefulness would be augmented. In any event they would be desirable citizens of Canada and the Empire and would be heartily welcomed.—Kingston Standard.

—Senator Cullom of Ilinois was asked by a correspondent what good it was for the Committee on Foreign Realtions to enjoy secrecy on the text of the new treaty with Great Britain, when the text of the treaty was printed next day in all the papers. "Just so, just so," said the Senator; "that's the reason the injunction of secrecy was placed upon the treaty. We knew that if we made it public at once not a paper in the country would print its full text."—N. Y. Sun.

Peace Apostles In Fiery Anger

GENEVA, Switzerland, Sept. 25.—Great tumult and a display of much temper marked to-day's session of the International Peace Congress. The proceedings became at one moment so decidedly stormy that one of the speakers was compelled to leave the platform.

Questions connected with Morocco and Tripoli occupied the attention of the congress and the criticism by Dr. Gobat, president of the international Peace Bureau, of Germany's attitude in Morocco brought the German delegates to their feet in heated protest.

Dr. Gobat was obliged to make a semi-apology and to assure them that he did not intend to infer that either the German government or the German nation was responsible for bringing war so close. The prevailing Chauvinism of Europe was, he said, responsible for that crisis.

Representatives of the French Society of Peace said they thought some of the blame for the crisis might be attached to France for intervening in Morocco.

This caused another uproar and the factions were unable to reconcile their differences, so the subject was referred to a committee which is to try to produce a formula which will not offend either side.

IT GROWS HAIR

Mrs. J. Harris, Wappella, Sask., writes, "I have found PARISIAN Sage to be the best scalp and hair tonic I have ever known. After using two bottles the itching and dandruff disappeared and my hair ceased to fall out."

PARISIAN Sage does not contain sugar of Lead; a poison that often causes blood poison and sometimes death. Ask your dealer if he can guarantee some other hair preparation not to contain Lead or Nitrate of Silver.

PARISIAN Sage is not a dye. Most dyes are dangerous. It is a hair nourisher, grower and beautifier and quickly banishes dandruff, stops itch. Large bottle 50 cents at J. V. Doyle's and dealers everywhere.

Pope Crushing Out Modernism

LONDON, Sept. 25.—A Telegram to the Daily Chronicle from Milan says the pope is pressing his campaign against modernism in the church with renewed vigor, his latest move being the summary banishment from Italy of the famous scholar, Peter Giovanni Semeria of Genoa, who enjoys the reputation of being the most cultured orator in the country. He is a great favorite in court circles and has been a frequent guest of Queen Margherite.

He is the author of numerous works relating to the early history of the Christian church, which were originally published with the special sanction of the Vatican during the pontificate of Leo XIII. Some months ago the archbishopric of Genoa fell vacant and Mgr. Caron, the new archbishop-elect, a man of extreme conservative sentiments, solicited as a condition of his acceptance of the office the banishment of Padre Semeria, who for many years has presided over Barnabite college there for youths of the upper classes.

This attitude led a deputation of influntial Genoese citizens to protest to the pope and to petition the Italian government to withhold from the appointment of Mgr. Caron the royal approval, which, indeed, has so far been refused, but Padre Semeria, by the pope's express order, was sent away to Brussels yesterday.

Wisconsin for Wilson

CHICAGO, Sept. 25.—William Lafollette, of Madison, Wis., a brother of Senator Robert M. Lafollette, and a life-long Democrat, predicts that the Badger State would land in the Wilson-Marshall column by a safe majority.

"There is a large independent Republican, call it progressive Republican vote, if you will, which will go to Wilson,' said Mr. Lafollette. 'This sentiment is stronger among Progressive Republicans here than in any other state in the North-west.

'Roosevelt sentiment among them is very light, and will continue so, if he places a full ticket in the field as he plans to do, it will not get more than 8,000 votes.'

Serious Dearth Of Labor Now

MOOSE JAW Sask., Sept. 25.—The labor situation in Saskatchewan is more acute at the present time than it has been at any other time during the present season. The big demand for men which it was expected would develop with great urgency when threshing time arrived, has come with a rush, and the supply is painfully inadequate.

Inquiries for laborers at this point have been coming in form north, south, east and west, but men are not to be had. The stationmaster here says that he has been working shorthanded for weeks owing to the demand of the crops.

One farmer arrived here on the morning train from the north in search of help, and said that threshing operations were being seriously delayed because men were not availble for the work of completing the harvest.

The patent stock loaders which have come into prominence this year as a labor-saving device are being demanded at a premium. One agent of these machines who passed through this city yesterday said that he was unable to find enough mahcines to serve the public demand. 'One farmer,' he said, 'stopped me at the station and offered me $500 cash for an immediate delivery of a stock loader to his farm, but I could not find a machine for him.'

Wheat is entirely ready for the thresher in all parts of the province, but one sees still a great deal of uncut flax. One grain man who is in touch with conditions throughout Saskatchewan said yesterday that no more than 25 percent of the flax in the province has been harvested as yet. A large quantity of oats, too has been cut for green feed.

The week opened very favorably as far as the weather is concerned, and promises to give the farmer a change to make up for the rainy days last week—if he can only get the men to help him.

Bill Passed But Has Not Become Law

OTTAWA, Sept. 25.—How a bill was passed and yet was not passed was described during the morning session of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association convention in Ottawa to-day.

The Parliamentary Committee reported that steps had been taken in Montreal to secure a vote for incorporated companies in municipal affairs. Toronto members said that they wished incorporated companies had a vote in Toronto municipal elections. This brought W. K. McNaught, M.P.P. to his feet. "I introduced a bill several years ago into the Ontario Legislature providing that corporations could vote on municpal matters," he said, "and it was carried."

"With due respect to Mr. McNaught," said Mr. J. W. Wegenast, legal secretary of the C. M. A., "the bill was not carried. It was given given two readings and referred to a committee. It is rather interesting to notice that the chief argument used to secure municipal franchise for corporations was that Ontario cities had it, and they haven't."

"My bill passed," declared Mr. McNaught, who had been listening to the previous speaker with considerable interest.

Mr. G. M. Murray, general secretary of the association, explained the discrepancy.

"Mr. McNaught's bill will become effective," he said, "when the Ontario statutes are revised. They have not been revised yet."

A member: "Then they're both right."

SHOULD BE RESPECTED

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—President Taft, in a prepared interview issued here last night, declared that his recent claims of respect were entitled to respect. He repeated that he believed he would be elected, and gave his reasons for denying that he had been oversanguine. He analyzed the poltical situation as he saw it, maintaining that the regular Republicans would carry the solid east, and hold enough of the central and western states to win.

TAFT MAKES SOME PROMISES

In a campaign interview given out here to-day, President Taft promised a revision of the tariff downward, should he be re-elected, and hinted at an extra session to bring about that revision, should the Republicans control the next congress.

He declared that the third party trust plan, with an unscrupulous man as president, might lead to a dictatorship that only revolution could remove.

He denied Governor Wilson's assertion that the protective has put American industries in a straight-jacket; declared that American workingmen already are more prosperous than those in Europe and asserted that the Democratic wool and cotton bills would have driven Americaon manufacturers to England and Germany.

The Successful Hostess

You may have a dinner with the best appointment and cuisine, and if your guests are badly chosen the dinner will be a social failure.

Certain elements will not coalesce, and the woman who tries to force the process is courting an explosion. Choose guests as you would shoes—because they fit.

You may be catholic in your tastes and enjoy the butterfly without a brain and the woman who is all brain without social grace, the artist or musician, the snob who distrusts all the clever coterie, the man who loves a gay story and the woman who is easily shocked.

But gather those friends around a common board and you may count on their boredom.

Never seat your guests according to social position. The practice makes neither the dinner nor the hostess popular. If you put the socially unimportant together your entertaining will never be a success.

Do not have dinners so large as to prevent general conversation. Not all who go out to dinners are blessed with manners, and the hostess should have it in her power to go to the rescue of the guest who is neglected by her neighbors.

Nor should your dinners be long or heavy. The day of dozens of courses is past. The most brilliant diner out finds it hard to shine when eating through an over-elaborate menu.

Learn the art of switching the conversation. Many a dinner is wrecked because the hostess does not know how to stop an argument that is verging on controversy and has not the social sense to scent dangerous topics or sidetrack the bore.

Encourage brilliancy and gayety, but keep a sharp watch for wit that stings and jokes that tend to license.

CHINA'S NEW WOMEN

Adopting the Occidental Methods of Dressing the Hair

Since the men of China have come generally to accept the new order of things in the celestial kingdom by removing the traditional queue and arranging their hair in a fashion as near the European style of parting as its coarseness will permit, it is natural that the women should follow. Shanghai advices tell of a general tendency on the part of Chinese belles of the present day, the "new woman," to appear not only in the garb of fashionable Europe, but to adopt the Western mode of dressing their hair. The old manner of pasting the hair close to the head is rapidly giving way to the modern European method of parting and arranging it in fluffy style. Having dispensed with that sticky substance known as "bowfull," which is necessary when they dress the hair in the old Chinese style in order to form the rather hard lines, the hair of these Oriental women is found to be surprisingly soft and wavy.

WEDDING BELLS.

PEARSALL—CROTHERS

A pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. W. O. Crothers, Northport on Sept. 11th, when his sister, Addie Matilda and Percy Elden Pearsall, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall, Fish Lake, were united in wedlock, by Rev. E. B. Cooke and Rev. W. J. Weatherill. Mendelssohn's wedding march was gracefully rendered by Miss Ella Nobes, and promptly at 12 o'clock the groom took his place under an arch of emerald foliage inserted with pink and white asters. Following came the little flower girls and only attendants, Misses May and Mabel Gardner of Campbellford, twins and cousins of the bride, dressed alike in a white swiss embroidered fabric with bandings of pink satin and carrying tiny baskets generously filled with delicate pink asters. Next came the bride leaning on the arm of her brother looking girlishly sweet in a dress of white silk gloria, and carrying a sheaf of large white asters carelessly thrown over her arm. After the many hearty congratulations adjournment was made to the dining room where an excellent breakfast was skillfully and gracefully served by six of the bride's girl friends, Misses A. Chipman, I. Putman, Ruth Walbridge, J. Peck, E. Anderson and R. Barker. Time passed all too rapidly and Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall were compelled to leave amid showers of good wishes for Steamer Varuna which crafted them over the placid waters of the Quinte toward the west. The bride's travelling suit was navy serge with large black beaver hat with black ospreys. The high esteem of the bride was evidenced by the many artistic and useful presents received.

WALLACE—EATON

The home of Mr. and Mrs. James Eaton of Melrose, Tyendinaga township, was made pleasant last evening by the marriage of their daughter, Lulu B., to Claude F. Wallace, son of Mrs. James Wallace of this city, the ceremony being performed at 8 o'clock by Rev. Mr. Joblin. The occasion was a quiet one, the immediate relatives of the contracting parties alone being present. The young couple were unattended. The bride was apropriately attired in a gown of silk over Copenhagen blue, and carried a bouquet of asters. At the conclusion of the ceremony the party was scruptuously entertained by the bride's parents. The popularity of the bride was evidenced by the many beautiful gifts received, and the groom, who is one of Belleville's enterprising business young men, is receiving the congratulations of very many friends. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace will reside on Charles Street. The best wishes of the Intelligencer are extended to the worthy young couple.

KNOX—JONES

The marriage took place in St. Mathias Church, Westmount, Tuesday afternoon of Miss Mary L. Jones, daughter of Mr. James Foster Jones, of Belleville Ont., to Mr. Frank J. Knox, only son of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Knox, Dorchester Street, Montreal. The ceremony was performed by the rector Rev. E. Bushell. The bride who was given away by her brother-in-law, Mr. George C. Goodfellow, wore a gown of Duchess satin trimmed with Venetian and rose point lace. Her veil was arranged with a bandeau of pearls caught with orange blossoms, and carried an ivory-bound prayer book. Her sister, Mrs. George C. Goodfellow, was matron of honor, wearing a gown of violet brocade satin trimmed with gold lace and American Beauty satin. Her hat was of black velvet with bird of Paradise, and she carried American beauty roses tied with mauve tulle. The bride's cousin, Miss Laurel Foster, was bridesmaid, wearing a yellow satin gown with panniers of violet flowered ninon, with shadow lace below. Her hat of purple plush was trimmed with uncurled ostrich feathers and yellow rosebuds, and she carried yellow roses. The best man was Mr. Nelson McKim, and the ushers were the Rev. R. N. Jones, of Russel. Ont cousin of the bride, and her brother Mr. Charles Jones, of Belleville. Mrs. Knox, mother of the bridegroom, wore a gown of violet satin veiled with black chiffon with silver trimming. Her hat was of black velvet, and she carried a bouquet of orchids and lillies of the valley. The bridegroom gave the bride a diamond ring; the matron of honor an engraved silver card case; the bridesmaid an enamel and pear pin, the best man cuff links, the ushers tie pins. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's sister, 699 Victoria avenue. In the evening Mr. Knox and his bride left for New York and Lake Placid, the bride travelling in a navy blue tailor-made suit with amethyst plush toque and ostrich feather ruff.

DEATH ROLL.

Robert Knox, an aged and highly respected resident of this city died at his home on Commercial Street at an early hour this morning. A few weeks ago the deceased received painful injuries from a fall, which undoubtedly hastened his death. He was born in Athal township, Prince Edward County, 71 years ago, where he had resided until within six years, when he took up his residence in this city. Mr. Knox was a staunch member of the Methodist church, and a gentlemen admired for his stirling qualities by all who knew him. A widow, but no family survives him. The body will be taken to his former home for burial.

Mona Lisa Found Again

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 25.—Leonardo Da Vinci's stolen masterpiece, Mona Lisa, is hanging on the walls of a private gallery in St. Petersburg, according to a report published in a Russian paper and transmitted to-day in a news agency here. The mysterious disappearance of the priceless picture, popularly known as "La Joconde," from the Louvre museum in Paris, caused a worldwide sensation in August last year. Search has been since made, but without success.

A star by any other name would probably want to be the whole show.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

EVERYBODY WAS GOOD

The local police had nothing to do last night, as everyone was on there good behavouir.

CLEARING THE DEBRIS

Men are busy carting away the ruins of the late Buck & Wills fire on Pinnacle Street, and it is quite possible a new and more substantial building will be shortly erected.

WORTHY OF IMITATION

The management of the Madoc Agricultural Society, instead of ticketing animals and live stock with prize tickets of paste board have made artistic rosettes of ribbon in three colors, namely, red for 1st prize, blue for 2nd and orange for 3rd. These are much appreciated by the successful competitors and are worthy of imitation by the Belleville Fair Society.

BREAD GETTING STALE

A telephone message was sent to the police this afternoon, that a horse attached to a bread delivery waggon, had been standing near Dundas Street for some hours. An oficer went to the place designated, but the vehicle was gone.

SHOULD BE CLEANED

Ladies are experiencing more than less difficulty using the street crossings without becoming besmeared with the copious mud and water on every hand. Cannot some one in authority get busy and look after the crossings? We are sure it would be appreciated.

UNDESIRABLE VISITOR NABBED

A rather tough looking specimen of humanity who is evidently a tramp, was arrested here at noon to-day for being considerably under the influence of liquor. As near as could be ascertained his name is John McConnelly.

MADE ROME HOWL

A company of amusement loving young people, in the vicinity of Charles Street made the welkin ring at a late hour last night, the penetrating notes of horns, bells and other instruments of torture predominating. We are informed it was but a friendly welcome to a newly wedded couple who had donned the double harness at a neighboring village. But, just the same, if not a few of our more staid residents of that section, who were awakened from peaceful slumber, could have fastened their grip on the revellers, "something would have been doing."

AN ARBITRATION ARGUMENT

Argument was heard this morning in the arbitration case of Messrs Harry and James Ketcheson of Sidney, and the Canadian Northern Railway Company. The latter in building their line through Sidney, expropriated farm land the property of the plaintiffs and the settlement of price was left to arbitration. Mr. E. G. Porter, K. C. M. P. addressed the board on behalf of the Messrs Ketchesons and Mr. W. C. Mikel, K. C. on behalf of the railway. Judgment was reserved.

Notes from the 34th Battery Camp

That marked progress is already being made by the newly organized 34th Battery Canadian Field Artillery, now in camp at the Fair Grounds, was clearly demonstrated this morning.

In spite of the almost incessant rain since the 34th, encamped four days ago, gun drills have been practised and various instructions given with noticeable improvement. And interest on the part of the men is constantly increasing.

The first really clear day for a thorough course came this morning and the results proved conclusively that the high standard of military efficiency in the matter of a Belleville field battery is soon to be realized.

In the mounted parade both the horses' and drivers' work showed marked improvement overt he previous day. The horses now have become accustomed to the harness, and general situation and good formation was easily maintained.

In the field work a battery was called into action on the front, rear, right and left.

The officers in command regarded this work as well performed, considering the handicap of rain and mud in previous starts.

Following the 5.30 Revielle this morning officers and non-commissioned officers formed in parade. Then the camp life—new to many of the young members—began in earnest. The gunners, now aroused, rolled their blankets and tent walls. At 6 o'clock the trumpet call to the stables sounded and the horsemen started for their respective places there. Gunners and drivers were seen to fall in. The gunners filed on to the gun park for inspection and drill.

After breakfast at 7 o'clock, all again fell in line in a squad parade, and at 8.30 o'clock the mounted parade began.

To all appearances, nothing but unfavorable weather is retarding progress in the work of the 34th, which will eventually land on an equality with military bodies of a similar nature. The boys are all cheerful and no accidents have occurred. Major Riordan, commanding, speaks encouragingly of their conduct and intelligence.

There will be lecture to N. C. O.'s on military work by Sergt.-Major Instrictor Brown this evening.

Bread 140 Years Old

The ancient custom of giving away penny loaves of bread on the morning of a funeral is recalled by the presentation to the County Museum at Lincoln of a loaf, dated 1772.

The loaf was given away at the funeral of Mr. Corry Wood, who was governor of the castle, Lincoln, and died on Feb. 17, 1772. With the bread which was given to the museum by Mr. B. Sheather, of Hastings, Sussex, is an old silk handkerchief, on which is printed a map of Paris dated 1768.

Famous Fireplaces Recovered

With the assistance of a number of generous lovers of antiquity in the county of Lincoln and elsewhere, Lord Curzon of Kedleston has recovered the famous carved stone fireplaces, dating from the fifteenth century, which were taken out of Tattershall Castle last year.

The work of restoring the castle and its surroundings, so far as can legitimately be done, to their former condition has already been commenced by Lord Curzon, and as soon as this is sufficiently advanced the fireplaces will be restored to their original position in the castle walls.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

The perusal of historic Rome with all its persecutions of the Christians, never fails to bring a shudder and feeling of sympathy for the cause to the heart of the reader. But to witness its reprodutcion in the flesh with all the vivid horrors, especially by such superb actors as appeared upon the stage at Griffins Opera House last evening revives the memories of the experiences of Christianity in its infancy, when the underground hiding places were filled with the hunted heroes and heroines of the Cross of Christ. "The Light Eternal" presented to a fairly good house, proved to be one of the most intensely interesting portrayals of those days that has ever been given to the public—and its equal, we may safely say, has never before appeared in Belleville.

In John Milton as "Marco Valerius" the martyr's son, the foremost, rugged supporter of Christianity, found its master, while in Louise Dunbar as the "Princess Artemia", daughter of Caesar, so vividly depicting the attitude of the pagan, the house was taken by storm. Earle O. Rexford as "Sebastian, A Captain of the Guard", Aaron W Honey as "Cornivus Tharagus the Perfect Son." Leona Soul, in the character of "Luciana, Mother of Marco", and Bessie Bennet "Nela, Sister of Marco", were most apt in their characterization of their parts. James Nelson, as "Diocletion" Emperor of Rome was in excellent form, true to the characterof old, with all his hatred for the Converts of the Cross. The love scene between the Princess and Marco, the betrayal by Cornivus, the banish by her Royal Highness; her appeal to Caesar in his behalf before the throne, the sending for and appearance of Marco, his heroic proclamation in behalf of his cause, the avowal of Artemias's love for him, her final repentance and acceptance of Christianity, the supplanting of the Roman God by the Cross, the final casting into the lion's den of Marco and the Princes, will never be forgotten by those who witnessed the scene. Too much cannot be said in favor of the two principal characters, the closing scene, where Artemia, attired in pure white, her beautiful countenance reflecting a full submission to the cause of her lover, as together they stood before the lions, his hand holding high the flaming cross, was a lesson to all which should be taken well to heart. And while the days of such experiences are past, play as a whole was most profitable. It is to be hoped that the seating capacity will this evening be taxed to its limit.

200 Civic Workers Go Out on Strike

EDMONTON, Alta., Sept. 25.—Demanding an increase of wages of five cents an hour, some 200 laborers employed by the city went on strike yesterday morning. The city engineer's and telephone department are affected by the strike. In the city engineer's department, about 150 men have quit work. These were employed in digging sewer trenches, and others in general manual labor. Twenty-five men employed by the telephone department in outdoor work on wire and cable stations also have gone on strike.

Frost in the West

WINNIPEG, Sept. 25.—Snow fell at Kenora all Tuesday and at night three to four inches lay on the sidewalks. Frost is reported again last night from many point in the west and continued cool weather is prophesied. In spite of frost and rain, little damage has apparently been done to crops still standing in Manitoba, especially in the north.

The Western Crop

Although estimates of the size of this year's western wheat crop still vary considerably, the country is now assured of a large harvest. Just as important is the fact that the quality of the grain so far inspected has been very high while there is no reason to suppose that the same satisfactory results will be shown right through.

This means a great deal to Canada. Large exports of wheat bring a large amount of money into the country. After harvesting and selling a good crop the farmer has money to spend. In this way the effect upon industries is direct. Last year, of course, there was much anxiety and disappointment because of the congestion of grain at the head of the great lakes, and at elevators throughout the West. The movement of the large crop still lies before us, but it is believed that there will be no such difficulty in the matter of transportation as was experienced a year ago.

Because of the large crop and the high quality of the grain the West can look forward to another year of prosperity. Perhaps prosperity brings with it certain dangers, such as over expansion, but there is no reason why the West should disregard good advice and become reckless. The important thing is that nearly two hundred million bushels of more than average quality grain has been produced. For this the whole country should be thankful.

Canada's Industrial Growth

While Canada is rapidly gaining in population and importance, both East and West have before them grave problems, as well as great possibilities for the future. For years Canada's progress was comparatively slow, but what was done was done well, thereby laying a firm foundation for the future marvelous growth which the country is now experiencing. Carefulness in the foundation building of the vast area of our country means its stalwart standing in years to come. In the East industries are thickly scattered and the natural resources, especially abundant water power, make possible a practically limitless industrial growth. Year by year the manufactures of the country have become more and more important and the expansion during recent years has been wonderfully rapid. To-day the industries of the country occupy a position of importance probably unforseen by even the most optimistic of a generation ago. In the past ten years especially, industries have sprung up, and production has increased in a truly astonishing manner.

Estimated value of production of Canadian Industries in 1912 was $1,164,775,582, an increase of 142 per cent. in ten years. Other facts contained in a Government report recently issued show other changes just as impressive. The number of working establishments in 1900 was 14,650; in 1910 there were 19,209. In the decade the increase in number of factories was 4,559, or 31 per cent. The number of persons employed in 1910 was 514,287 as compared with 399,173 ten years previous, an increase of 51 per cent.; while in the same period wages paid increased 112 per cent., the annual pay roll in 1910 being $240,523,651. The largest percentage increase of all is in the amount of capital involved in industrial enterprises, which is estimated at $1,245,745,496, an increase of 178 per cent. in the ten years.

These figures provide a basis from which many interesting conclusions can be drawn. To begin with, the number of factories has not shown in the proportionate increase. This is because the tendency of the age is toward concentration, and as a result larger establishments are built and output more economically manufactured than would be possible if operations were carried on on a less extensive scale. Unquestionably this is an era of big business, big in plant as well as in heavily capitalized combinations.

London Truth very properly lectures the Unionists for decrying the old country. It is their policy to declare that Britain is going to the dogs and that tariff reform is the only way in which the canines can be cheated. But it is not very patriotic. They have evidently taken a leaf out of the Candian Tory hand book which is tissue of misrepresentation of national conditions. No matter what brand of Toryism is considered at election times, deceit and falsehood predominate.

Clergyman Willed Bibles to His Sons

"I give unto my eldest son, George Henry Reynell, my Bible, which was given to me by my father in March, 1850, in which all my sermon texts are marked, also the Book of Common Prayer given to me by my grandmother in 1843."

"I give unto my son, Frederick William, my Bible, revised version, with my sermon texts all marked."

"I give unto my daughter Alexina (Mrs. Fisher), a Sunday school reward book named 'Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego,' given to me in 1843, and 'Park's Travels in Africa,' given to me as a reward of merit in 1845."

The foregoing are clauses from the will of the late Rev. Dr. Geo. Henry Cornish, statistician of the Methodist General Conference, who died at his home 28 Beatrice St. Toronto August 24, leaving an estate of $7,905, largely composed of real estate. During her lifetime, his widow receives the income from the estate. After her death the following legacies are to be paid:

Missionary Society of the Methodist Church, $600; Women's Missionary Society, $300; Superannuation Fund, $250; Deaconesses' Home, $100; Aged Women's Home, Belmont street $100; Hospital for sick children $100.

Two houses at 14 and 16 Sarah stereet, valued at $2,076, a mortgage and house hold effects amounting to $1,825, a total of $3,918, was the estate left by Mary Gearon, wife of a Toronto police constable, of 14 Sarah streete, who died on August 10. Edward Gearon, the husband, is the sole beneficiary under the will which was probated to-day.

Queen Manages Balmoral Castle

LONDON, Sept. 24.—Balmoral Castle is just now crowded to its capacity. Instead of the 250 persons from whom daily provision had to be made during the first week or two of the residence of King George and Queen Mary, this number has now increased to 300 hundred.

The Queen superintends the domestic details of the castle, even to giving personal orders to the Clerk of the Kitchen, and inspecting all the apartments for the visitors.

In addition she is finding time to visit the houses of many of the tenants. She was not quite satisfied with the construction and arrangement of some the houses last year, and orders have been given for alterations, which she is anxious to see carried out.

Catering for so large a party as the castle now contains is a great undertaking, especially as Balmoral is so far from a town, but the Queen is conversant with all the intricacies and knows just how it is all done and the cost. Many of the Ballater tradesmen find in the royal residence a decided boom, for the carts are seen delivering goods at the castle twice daily, while various farms in the neighborhood send in all their stock of milk and eggs.

The King and Queen prefer to deal locally, whenever possible. Large consignments come from London, of course and boxes and hampers labelled "His Majesty the King" are brought from Ballater station every day by a motor van locally known as "the Black Maria."

Princess Mary is often out, driving her cream ponies through the grounds or forests. Sometimes the entire party go up to the shooting lodge, where Prince John and his nurses are quartered, or the little Prince be driven down to Balmoral; for never a day is allowed to pass without the parents and youngest child meeting.

When the King is deerstalking or shooting, his two elder sons are among the "guns" while the two next in age are allowed to be present and watch the proceedings.

The King much enjoys a game of billiards in the evening and in this he is often joined by the Prince of Wales, while an evening carpet dance is a great delight to the younger members of the family, and the Queen and ladies of the household enter into the amusement with evident enjoyment. All the children are excellent dancers, and at a recent ball danced everything on the programme until midnight.

It may also be said that, while the King prefers billiards to dancing, the Queen took part in every dance except the Irish jig.

Tainted Money.

Pat and Mike were discussing the affairs of a limited company, and the latter exclaimed:

"Do you think old Screwem's money is tainted?"

"Yes," replied Pat. "It has two taints on it—'tain't yours and 'tain't mine."—London Tit-Bits.

LULL BEFORE TEMPEST

Ulster Breathlessly Awaits the Signing of Covenant.

Leaders Are Resting Preparatory to an Exciting Day on Saturday, But Their Aides Are Sending Out Tons of Copies of the Covenants—Great Ceremonial Is to Attend the Signing.

Belfast, Sept. 25.—From an oratorical viewpoint, yesterday was comparatively quiet in the Ulster campaign, Sir Edward Carson and Frederick E. Smith, the chief leaders, both resting and reserving themselves for the strenuous events in the coming few days.

Baron Willoughby de Broke, who was a strong supporter of the "no surrender policy" during the debate on the veto bill in the House of Lords, was the moving spirit of the demonstraton at Dromore, whch had all the features of prevous campaign meetings — a guard of honor for the principal speakers, a torchlight procession and similar attractions.

Meanwhile unceasing activity is displayed in the preparations for the great day Sept 28, when, it is expected, some half million persons will sign the covenant to oppose home rule to the end. The organizers resemble a military general staff. There is a council to give directions and many staff and subordinate officers to execute them. There are generals of division and brigade commanders in the different districts.

The signing of the covenant on Saturday will be an elaborate ceremony. After a solemn service in Ulster Hall, Sir Edward Carson with his colleagues, the Belfast Corporation, the harbor commissioners and city magnates, will march to the City Hall, escorted by guards of honor from the Orange lodges. Additional guards numbering 2,500 men will be provided by the Unionist clubs in five shifts of 500 each, to keep the precincts of the City Hall during the period of receiving signatures. All the guards of honor will wear dark colors, red, white and blue armlets and carry five-foot staves, surmounted by a small Union Jack.

After the ceremony the same guard will escort Sir Edward Carson to the steamship sailing for Liverpool, in which city a similar demonstration on Monday is projected. As the steamer proceeds down Belfast Lough, huge bonfires will be lighted on the hills. A regular army of signalers will be employed Saturday to transmit the news of the day's doings to every corner of the province by heliograph and lamp signals from church spires and mountain top.

Will Not Fight Says Chronicle.

London, Sept. 25.—The Daily Chronicle's special correspondent, who is accompanying the Unionist leaders in their anti-home rule campaign in Ulster, thus refers to the "performance of the Unionist circus."

"The performances, of course, are not meant for the benefit of the Irish people. They are organized for the purpose of intimidating the Government and misleading the British electorate. Not a single vote in Ulster has been turned or would be turned if the performances went on until Christmas.

"There will be no fighting. Khaki uniforms and dummy rifles have frightened nobody. These God-fearing royalists never fight unless they are at least five to one and the enemy are unarmed. All these threats about resistance, all this talk about 'dying in the last ditch in defence of our liberties,' are the sheerest bunkum.

"The astute lawyers who are running this movement have no more intention of injuring their finger-ends by picking oakum in His Majesty's jails than they have of exposing their bodies to the bayonets of His Majesty's soldiers."

Templeton's Defi.

Dromore, Ireland, Sept. 25.—Lord Templeton, representative peer for Ireland, and founder of the Unionist clubs in Ireland, declared last night: "Once for all, under no circumstances will the loyal people of Ireland consent to be governed by a priest-ridden parliament."

Lord Templeton spoke at a big demonstration of Ulster day campaigners, and, in proposing an anti-home rule resolution, said that the movement was a spontaneous uprising.

Police of Three Countries Seek Men

CHICAGO, Sept. 25.—The United States authorities, the English government and the police department of Greece are co-operating to-day in the effort to run down the missing members of the band of safe robbers who looted the Bank of Montreal, New Westminster, B. C., of $272,000, and after making their way to Chicago flooded the underworld of the city with Canadian bills.

The Greek government was brought into search by the disappearance of Louis Coloves, who is said to have known secrets concerning the robbers' escape.

Police efforts to-day were devoted largely to tracing clues in connection with the large quantities of Canadian bills of large demonstration which have been offered for exchange in Chicago since the robbery.

A $20,000 note of the New Westminster bank was offered at one bank by two Greeks the day before Burns was overpowered in Sidas' saloon. Sidas was questioned yesterday by the police about $10,000 of Canadian money which recently came into his possession.

Says Panama Canal Will Never Be Used

NIAGARA FALLS, Sept. 25.—Henry Lovering, a mining engineer of Cape Gracias, Nicaragua, who is visiting United States Consul Edward Trimmer, says that the Panama Canal, in spite of all the disputes with foreign powers, will never be used.

'I don't believe that any vessel will ever pass through the canal," said Lovering.

"Why not?" he continued. "Well, the engineers have not been able to find bottom in the Culebra cut, and they have gone down 200 feet. You remember what happened about two weeks ago—that fall of millions of cubic yards of earth. That bears me out. I believe Stevens and Shonts knew that a canal at Panama was impossible, that's why they quit.

There is no better engineer in the country than Colonel Goethals. He was sent to Panama to dig the canal, and he is doing great work against tremendous odds.

"The engineers who were sent down to make preliminary survey some 20 years ago, reported that the Panama route was not feasible.

Bishop of Japan at Wycliffe College

"The suicide of General Nogi and his wife has been cited by some as an instance of Japan's lapse into barbarism. But we must remember that the General was one who had never left the old idea of expressing his loyalty for his Emperor in this way. He was acting up to the best light he had; having given his sons to the Emperor and the country, the stalwart old soldier thought it his duty to go and serve his Master in the next world."

These were the words of Rev. H. J. Hamilton, M. A., Bishop-elect of Japan, in an adress to the members of Wycliffe College Alumni Association at luncheon recently. He dealt with the attitude of Japan and its Government toward Christianity and outlined the policy of that Government in respect to its relationship with religions in general. Regarding the criticisms of Japan's dealings with Korea, the speaker said that Japan did not take Korea for selfish ends, but had taken up what might be called "The White Man's Burden."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Defiant Speech of An Ulster Peer

DROMORE, Ireland, Sept. 25.—Lord Templetown, representative Peer for Ireland, and founder of the Unionist Clubs of Ireland, declared last night: "Once for all, under no circumstances will the loyal people of Ireland consent to be governed by a priest-ridden Parliament."

Lord Templetown spoke at a big demonstration of Ulster Day campaigners, and in proposing an anti-home rule resolution, said that the movement was a spontaneous uprising.

New York, Sept. 25.—A special cable from London this morning says:

"The Daily Chronicle's special correspondent, who is accompanying the Unionist leaders in their anti-home rule campaign in Ulster, thus refers to the performance of the Unionist circus:"

"The performances, of course, are not meant for the benefit of the Irish people. They are organized for the purpose of intimidating the movement and misleading the British electorate. Not a single vote in Ulster has been turned, or would be turned if the performances went on until Christmas."

Minister Doubts Ethics in Pulpit

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Sept. 25.—"A man can't be honest in the ministry and hold his job," declared the Rev. B. Frank White, preceding his farewell sermon before the First United Presbyterian church. "I've had a pretty warm time of it, but I've got the clearest conscience of any man in the world."

Mr. White's resignation follows a factional fight resulting from an alleged attempt at one-man rule. Many sided with the preacher in his refusal to permit wealth to dictate his church policy and the character of his sermons.

Mr. White will go to Princeton to take a post-graduate course. He will remain in the ministry, but will not return to this presbytery.

Deposed Governor Will Fight.

London, Sept. 25.—The Chinese town of Foo Chow has been declared in a state of siege by the governor, who has received notification from the Pekin Government that he has been superseded, according to a news agency despatch from Tien Tsin yesterday.

Many of the inhabitants are hurriedly leaving the city in fear of bloodshed.

BASEBALL.

TORONTO, Sept. 25.—President J. P. Fitzgerald, has issued a call for a meeting of the Canadian League magnates to be held in Hamilton on Wednesday, October 2. It is for the purpose of winding up the business of the league just ended, although it is possible that plans for next seasons will also be discussed.

Minneapolis Won Pennant.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—The American Association to-day closed its regular playing season with a game between Minneapolis and Milwaukee. Minneapolis champions for the last two seasons, clinched the year's pennant several days ago.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 24.—The draft put in by the Brooklyn National club for catcher William Fischer of the Toronto club, did not look just right to the National Commission and it has been under investigation. Fisher was turned over by Toronto to the Binghampton League early in the season. Yesterday, however, the commission announced the result of its inquiries, and with credit to the Toronto club. The high court of baseball holds the draft to be valid.

The supplementary list of players drafted by major league clubs from minor league clubs will be announced in a few days. Several Toronto players were sought by the majors.

New York, Sept. 24.—After several weeks spent in observing the work of young players in the minor leagues throughout the country, Arthur Irwin, the veteran scout of the New York Americans, has come to the conclusion that the left-handed pitcher is dying out.

I've combed the bushes this year as never before,' said Irwin on his return to New York, 'and never did I see such a scarcity of southpaws. They are not to be had. My experience is the same as that of other scouts with whom I have talked. I cannot account for it, except on the theory that left-handed pesrons are getting rare in all walks of life.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—President Chas. W. Murphy, of the Chicago National League Baseball team, expressed the opinion last night that in a short time all managers of big league clubs will be compelled to enforce strictly the clause in the contract prohibiting players from drinking and smoking during the ball season.

'I believe the drinking and smoking clauses can be enforced. If I find otherwise I will switch my team around until I secure the men who will do as I demand,' said Mr Murphy. 'I will enforce the new rules if I lose all my stars and if it puts the team in last place.'

Mr. Murphy says, if necessary, he will hire detectives to watch suspected players.

Montreal has gained four earnest workers by the dissolution of the Montreal Baseball team.

Four gentlemen, who have occupied 'seats of the mighty' in that organization, have elected to remain in this city, and enter their own particular spheres of work. It is, therefore, learned that Charlie Hanford will manage the 'Starland' Theatre, a local moving picture house. Dick Caroll will sell real estate, while Ray Demitt, who is a draughtsman, hopes to get a position with one of the railway companies.

Manager Bransfield is remaining in town for a few days to discuss with the owners of the club the plans for next summer.

McTigue has rejoined the Boston Nationals, and will be heard from before the season closes. Conolly also expects to get a trial with Washington in the remaining games of the season.

CRICKET

One of the most enthusiastic meetings ever held in Canada in the interest of Checkers took place in the Toronto Checker Club Quarters, Saturday, September 21, when the amount for prize money for the Tourney, December 26th, was guaranteed. The prizes will be $150. for first, $75. for second, $50. for third and $25. for fourth.

Secretary Woolcott, of Hamilton, read a number of letters from players in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and other places and reported that the coming Tourney would be one of the best ever held on the continent. As to whether the Tourney will be conducted on the knock-out or all-round system has not been decided, pending expression of opinion from possible contestants. Any suggestion on this point from the players will be greatly appreciated by the executive; the committee will then decide finally which system will be adopted. This event will be held at the Toronto Checker Club quarters and will carry with it the Dominion Championship. Kindly address all communication to Secretary Wolcott, Hamilton.

CRICKET.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—Captain Gregory, of the Australian cricket team, which is on its way to this country, has written to the New York managers of the coming international cricket matches, declaring that his team is also proficient in baseball, and proposing a game with a picked team from the New York and Brooklyn big league players. 'My team' he says, is the greatest baseball aggregation in Australia. We play baseball for practice in running and fielding, and are confident of being able to give a good account of ourselves against the best nine that you can produce.

The novelty in his suggestion, however, lies in Captain Gregory's idea that both teams shall use cricket bats, playing the whole game of baseball under national rules, with the exception that the baseball players shall be allowed to use their gloves, as is usual with them, while the cricketers, as is customary with them, will play with bare hands.

ATHLETICS.

ST. CATHERINES, Sept. 24.—The Athletic Lacrosse club on Monday issued a formal challenge for the Mann Cup emblematic of the amateur lacrosse championship of the world, and which is now held by the Vancouver Lacrosse club. The challenge was sent on to President Jack Kelly, of the C. L. A., who sent it to J. Ross Robertson, of Toronto, one of the trustees of the cup. Many local lovers of the game have volunteered to assist the club financially in making the trip to the west.

FOOTBALL

OTTAWA, Sept. 25.—The Ottawa College team, after all, will play at Hamilton next Saturday. Negotiations for an exhibition game between the Hamilton Tigers, of the Interprovinical Football league, and the Ottawa College, of the Intercolegiate, which were broken off last week were reopened yesterday between the college management and Bobby Kerr, the well-known sprinter, who is looking after the managerial duties of the Tigers, and the garnet and grey footballers will leave on Friday evening for the city by the mountain. Coach Father Stanton at first considered that he would be taking too big a chance of injuring his players and perhaps be without several of them for the opening league match against Queen's at Varsity oval on October 5. However, the players will be instructed to take no chances of being hurt. Eighteen players will go to Hamilton and all will be used during the course of the game. The following are the ones likely to be chosen to make the trip to Hamilton: Cornellier, Sheehy, Chartrand, Killian, Lajoie, McDonald, Kennedy, Mulvihill, Quilty, Harrington, Sullivan, Nagle, Gilligan, Chantel, Grace, Quinn and Kent.

AUSTRALIA IS AROUSED

Report of Canada's Naval Plan Stirs Up Enthusiasm.

R. L. Borden's Speech In Toronto Gives Impetus to Patriotic Movement In the Commonwealth Which Will Follow the Example of the Other Dominions—Defence Council No Use Declares Fisher.

London, Sept. 26.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—A special despatch to The Daily Mail yesterday states that Borden's speech at Toronto and reports that Canada intends to offer three super-dreadnoughts as an emergency contingent to the Imperial navy, have aroused much attention of Australia and Australians realizing they must no longer lean on Great Britain, but must stand on an equal footing and shoulder with the Mother Country and other dominions in the defence of the whole Empire. There is a genuine dread of the growth of Japanese influence in the Pacific, and though little is said on the subject the feeling is strong that Australia should prove her readiness to play her part with New Zealand and the United States in policing the Pacific.

Australians are willing to bear taxation for these purposes. The smoldering embers of patriotism which led Australians to flock to the Boer war have again recently been fanned into a fierce flame.

Premier Fisher, interviewed, said the opinion was undoubtedly consolidating on the question of national defence, for which common Imperial scheme it was essential that Australia must be left to develop her own defence unit.

"I cannot see the advantages of the existence of an Imperial defence council of dominion representatives, who would sooner or later get out of touch with the thought of the peoples represented and become only dead channels through which the policy of governments would imperfectly come from. I believe a better plan would be to hold biennial personal consultations with the British military and naval authorities in the same manner as was done last year. That would keep life in a common scheme of imperial defence.

"New Zealand's interests are irrevocably bound up with Australia. I believe it is now recognized by the best thinkers that New Zealand will eventually join in one Australian unit for defence. I think it marvelous that the cadet scheme for military training of all boys has been established with so little friction. The people now regard it as a national necessity and an individual responsibility which each must shoulder."

TROOPS GO TO ULSTER

Scottish Regiments In Readiness to Quell Riots.

Light Infantry and Borderers Will Be Supplemented by the Young Citizen Volunteers — Demonstration at Portadown Marked by Presence of a Large Number of Armed Men—Ambulance and Cannon Out.

Belfast, Ireland, Sept. 26.—Regiments of Highland Light Infantry and Scottish Borderers will be drafted into Belfast to-day in anticipation of trouble on Ulster Day, Sept. 28, when the covenant in defiance of home rule is to be signed by Ulsterites. The Royal Irish Rifles already stationed here are confined to barracks in readiness for emergencies.

More than a thousand members of "Young Citizen Volunteers of Ireland" were enrolled last night. The new organization is to assist when called upon by the civil authorities in the maintenance of peace.

The demonstration at Portadown yesterday was one of the most remarkable of the campaign owing to the display of armed force and the enormous number of Orangemen and Unionists who assembled to greet Sir Edward Carson and other Unionist leaders. Sir Edward declared that they were performing the obsequies of home rule.

Frederick E. Smith M.P. for Liverpool, expressed the opinion that the battle was already won. He added: "The Government, even if it has the wickedness, wholly lacks the nerve to order the British army to use coercion to Ulster."

The streets of Belfast are being gaily decorated for Saturday. There has been an enormous sale of Union Jacks.

At the Portadown demonstration determination not to submit to home rule was expressed by 20,000 Orangemen and Unionists, residents of the County of Armagh, Ulster.

Rifles were carried by some of the battalions into which the members of the Unionist clubs were formed when they took part in a great procession yesterday afternoon.

Two large cannon were also dragged along on gun carriages, while an ambulance in charge of sisters moved with the procession and carried a large supply of splints and bandages.

Even King Could Do Wrong.

Crumlin, Ireland, Sept. 26.—Lord Templetown, founder of the Unionist clubs of Ireland, at an anti-home rule demonstration here last night, declared that if the King signed the home rule measure to-morrow it would be an unconstitutional act.

Captain Jas. Craig, M.P. for Down, advised the Ulstermen to continue drilling.

$135,000 For Home Rule.

Philadelphia, Sept. 26.—Pledges of contributions, aggregating $135,000 within the next two years to advance the cause of home rule in Ireland were made here yesterday by delegates to the biennial convention of the United Irish League of America.

Michael J. Ryan, city solicitor of Philadelphia, was re-elected president. The other officers are: Vice-president, Hon. Charles Doherty, Minister of Justice, Canada; Maurice T. Malony, Attorney-General, Ottawa, Ill.; John Fitzpatrick, mayor of New Orleans; Hugh McCaffery, Philadelphia, and Michael S. S. Smith, St. Louis, secretary; John O'Callaghan, Boston; treasurer, Thomas B. Fitzpatrick, Boston.

No place was chosen for another convention, as the delegates believe that before another two years the cause for which the league was organized will have been accomplished.

Speeches took up the entire morning session of the biennial convention of the United Irish League of America. Among the speakers was Sir George Croyden Marks, a Liberal member of the British Parliament. He was escorted to the convention hall by a special committee and was given a warm welcome.

He told the delegates that it was the desire of the Liberal party to give to the Irish home rule which, he added, had been withheld from them too long.

Sir Geo. Marks represent Launceston division in Cornwall, and is a consulting engineer and patent expert. He was knighted last year.

Bad Bungle Says Mayor.

Chicago, Sept. 26.—Mayor Carter H. Harrison yesterday characterized the escape of the Canadian bank robbers from the Chicago police as the worst case of bungling that he could imagine.

"Captain J. J. Mahoney and Lieut. B. P. Burns both are to blame," said the mayor. "Captain Mahoney should have given the case his personal attention, and Lieut. Burns never should have attempted to make such an arrest single-handed."

Several women habitues of the James Sidias saloon, where the bank robbers loafed, and where Lieut. Burns was badly beaten, were arrested by the police yesterday. Captain Halpin, who examined the women, said that none of them had told him a straight story of what occurred the night Burns attempted to make the arrests. The women were ordered held for further examination.

Heavy Snow In Western States.

Minneapolis, Sept. 26.—Snow again fell yesterday in the northwest, reports from the Dakotas and Minnesota telling of heavy falls in various districts. In the Twin Cities and Central Minneapolis a rain which had lasted twelve hours was followed by a cold wave, which weather officials thought would send the thermometer lower.

Despatches from Fargo, N.D., said that the snow flattened uncut corn and flax, and that thousands of harvest and threshing hands have left the state, unwilling to believe the weather will improve.

Strange Cause for Suicide.

St. Thomas, Ont., Sept. 26.—Mrs Helen Fletcher, aged 40, wife of A. E. Fletcher, Locust street, took paris green Monday night with suicidal intent because her husband started smoking again after having stopped for a time. She died yesterday. The family came from Brantford in May last. The deceased leaves five daughters and one son by a previous marriage.

Brush Factory to Close.

London, Ont., Sept. 26—The Thomas Bryan, Limited, for the past forty years brush manufacturers in this city, will move to Toronto within a few weeks. For the past ten years this concern has been part of the Boeckh Bros. & Co. of Toronto.

To Honor Sir Isaac Pitman

..The centenary of the birth of Sir Isaac Pitman, the inventor of the accepted system of shorthand now in use throughout the English-speaking world, will be commemorated Jan. 4 next In England the preparations for the celebration of the anniversary are in the hands of a distinguished committee, with Sir Thomas Crosby, Lord Mayor of London, at the head. A committee has also been organized to fittingly observe the occasion in the United States.

The projected programme in this country will include dinners in all the leading cities at which speeches will be made by eminent educators and business men. Arrangements are also being made to have a commemoration medal struck, which will be sold to all those who desire a permanent souvenir of the occasion. The name of the reipient will be engraved on the reverse side of the medal. The estimated cost of these souvenirs is placed at not more than $2 each.

Among the list of distinguished patrons who have promised to lend their finanical support to a fitting celebration of Sir Isaac Pitman's birth appears the name of Andrew Carnagie. The New York committee consists of Charles M. Miller, Director of the Mount Vernon Trust Company and President of the Commercial Schools Association; David J. George, President of the Shorthand Writer's Association of America; H. W. Hammond, member of the Faculty of St. John's College, Brooklyn, and Robert A. Kells, associate editor of Pitman's Journal.

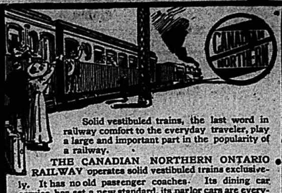
RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION



Solid vestibuled trains, the last word in railway comfort to the everyday traveler, play a large and important part in the popularity of a railway.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY operates solid vestibuled trains exclusively. It has no old passenger coaches. Its dining car service has set a new standard, its parlor cars are everything that the word implies.

When next you contemplate a railway journey, get a CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY FOLDER and study its convenient schedules.

Your station agent, L. W. Buller, or your up-town agent, J. A. Burke, will supply you with tickets and all information.

Frog From an Egg

WASHINGTON, Sept., 25.—The "fatherless frog" is in Washington. He has two bulging green eyes, a big white throat and for all the world looks just the same as millions of his brothers who occupy thrones on lily pads in some muddy creek. However, according to, Professor Jacques Loeb, of the Rockefeller Institute of Research, this particular Mr Frog, on exhibition before the Congress of Hygiene and Demography here, was hatched from the egg of a female by chemical process.

While visitors are greatly interested in this orphan frog, learned professors are busy challenging his chemical percentage.

Professor Loeb stated that his fatherless frog was the culmination of years to effort, and that with but little more study he will be able to produce other forms of life resulting from his study of parthenogenesis.

OUR BIGGEST PROBLEM

Railway Rates More Important Than Tariff, Says Fairbairn.

Delegate to C. M. A. Declares That the Railways Are Only Too Ready to Boost Rates, and It Costs as Much to Send Goods to Saskatoon as to Australia—R. S. Gourlay Is Probable For the Presidency.

Toronto, Sept. 26.—The report of the railroad and transportation committee at the annual convention of the C.M.A. here yesterday dealt with every classification of freight baggage and transportation. Most of the material in the report of the committee has been called to the attention of the Railway Commission, such as freight rates, size of baggage, etc.

R. D. Fairbairn of Toronto, head of the Fairbairn Scale Co., charged the railroads with being over-zealous to boost the rates. "The rates to the west," he said, "are based on one way only. It is a well-known fact that it costs as much to send goods to, say, Saskatoon or any other place in the west, from the east, as it does to Australia. The railroads can carry freight at a good deal less rate than at present. The sole object of railroad companies seems to be to increase their rates all along the line.

"I tell you, gentlemen," declared Mr. Fairbairn, with vehemence, "transportation is a much more important subject to Canada just now than the tariff question. The tariff in many cases is not a factor at all. The Dominion Government should carry the Intercolonial Railway through to the coast. We have had a little experience in municipal and Government ownership, and it has met with a good deal of success.

R. S. GOURLAY,
Who is named for Presidency of the C.M.A.

Mr. Fairbairn's expressions were readily endorsed in many respects by other delegates.

Some of the supreme advantages manufacturers especially can derive from a system of technical education were outlined in an address by Dr. James Robertson, chairman of the technical education commission.

The election of officers takes place to-day, and it was announced last night that R. S. Gourlay of Toronto would be the new president, while C. B. Gordon, president of the Dominion Textile Co., Montreal, will be the new vice-president.

Vigorously condemning the use of any but safety matches for use in the homes, and claiming that to use matches that can be lighted anywhere too often places the lives of children in the home in great danger, Franklin H. Wentworth of Boston, president of the National Fire Protective Association, delivered a forceful address before the delegates at a smoker held in the Parliamentary restaurant last night. He said that the association of which he was the head was doing a splendid work and was doing much to encourage fire prevention, giving many examples.

Jail-Breaker Seen.

Kingston, Sept. 26.—The man identified as Frank Smith of Texas, who escaped from Belleville Jail Tuesday morning, while awaiting removal to the penitentiary, was on a freight train at Outer station yesterday afternoon. The conductor on the train tried to take him in charge, but he escaped. He had no coat, and the conductor pulled his shirt off in the scuffle. The police hurried to the scene, but the man made good his escape.

It was learned that he had secured a coat and shirt from a farmer, telling a hard luck story about being on his way to Montreal to see his brother, who was dying.

Westerners For Protection.

London, Sept. 26.—M. Turner, agent-general for British Columbia, writes The Westminster Gazette denying a previous correspondent's assertion that western men are free traders. "I am quite confident," says Mr. Turner, "there are few, if any, free traders in British Columbia. The workmen are practically all protectionists. I know this well, from many elections I've run there."

Turner incidentally asserts the cost of living in western Canada is little, if any, higher than in England.

A War Tragedy.

Cuernavaca, Mex., Sept. 26.—Ambushed at Ojo de Agua, Capt. Escobedo and seven of his soldiers were killed by rebels Tuesday. On receipt of the news here, Senorita Sofia Moncadia, an actress, and the sweetheart of Escobedo, committed suicide.

Amnesty for Rebels.

Mexico City, Sept 26.—A new movement to obtain peace in Northern Mexico was made yesterday, when President Madero and his Cabinet instructed the Minister of War to offer amnesty to the followers of Pascual Orozco, the rebel leader.

COL. HUGHES BUSY.

Canadian Minister Deluged With Invitations to Functions.

London, Sept. 26.—Hon. Col. Hughes is having an exceptionally busy time during the last week of his stay. When he is at the Savoy Hotel a half dozen callers besiege his rooms, the number of invitations received being overwhelming. The colonel told the C.A.P. yesterday that he had no use for military aeroplanes

"You'll get just as good results by climbing a mountain or a church steeple," he said.

At the army council dinner the other night all the Canadian officers in London attended. Col. Hughes responded to the toast to the overseas forces. Coventry and Newmarket have been visited earlier this week. On Sunday, Col. Hughes visited Paris, and Tuesday met several interested in the university interchange students.

Several of the officers are now in Scotland, but Col. Hodgins is studying the territorial system here. Col. Harston is at Woolwich studying ammunition problems.

Ulster Unionists have approched more than one of the party for expressions of sympathy or encouragement, but those approached deemed it wiser to keep free of such matters.

To-morrow, Col. Hughes dines with Lord Roberts, and for the week-end will be the guest of Lord Selborne in Hampshire.

WANT BRITISH PREFERENCE.

Grain Growers Ask C. M. A. to Help Them Get It.

Winnipeg, Sept. 26.—The Grain Growers' Guide last night sent the following by wire to President Curry of the manufacturers' convention in session at Ottawa:

"The western grain growers are anxious to know if the Manufacturers' Association will join hands with them in an effort to bind Canada closer to the Motherland by urging the Government to reduce the tariff on British imports to one-half that charged American imports, to complete free trade with the Motherland in ten years.

"The grain growers feel that this would be a tangible form of showing their patriotism and would develop a much greater trade with the Motherland and thus strengthen the ties of the Empire and show the world that Canada's loyalty to the Motherland is deep and abiding and not merely words. It would also show the world that Canada stands behind the Motherland to uphold the traditions of the Anglo-Saxon race and keep the Union Jack in the proud position it has held for a thousand years. Such an action would also be undoubted proof that Canada has no desire for political union with the United States. Would you kindly bring the matter before your annual convention now in session at Ottawa and ascertain if the manufacturers present are willing to join hands with the grain growers in this great Imperial scheme?"

Willing to Consider.

Ottawa, Sept. 26.—At a late hour last night President Curry of the C. M. A. said he had not received any message from the Grain Growers' Guide, but if it came before the convention opened in the morning he would bring it before the delegates. He declined to make any personal comment on it when apprised of the text of the message.

Birth Should Be Advertised.

Washington, Sept. 26.—"Popularize the birth registry bureau," was the advice of Dr. Helen MacMurchy at the fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography yesterday. She declared it would reduce infant mortality at once, because it would bring all cases of birth under the eye of the proper health authorities. She said the birth registry bureau should be advertised so extensively that everybody would know of it. She suggested that bright lights be used to illuminate it by night.

It was pointed out that New Zealand which had been the first country to give cash contributions to help expectant mothers, had the lowest infant mortality in the world.

Plenty of Cars for Grain.

Winnipeg, Sept. 26.—Threshing has again been resumed all over the west, with bright, clear weather general. While there has been some frost, the reports generally assert that no damage has been done the crop. Tuesday grain trains to the east again resumed operations, and yesterday the demand for motive power on all the lines in Manitoba was strong.

The elevators are not getting a chance to handle the new grain, as most of it is going direct to the grain cars, and every siding is full of empties. Not in the history of the west has the situation to rush grain to the market been so good as to-day.

Pall-Bearers Chosen.

Kingston, Sept. 26.—The following have been selected as pall-bearers for the funeral of Sir Richard Cartwright: Col. H. R. Smith, Sergeant-at-Arms in the House of Commons, Col. S. C. McGill and Messrs. J. B. Walkem, K.C., Francis Dobbs John Dobbs, all of Kingston, and F. C. T. O'Hara, Ottawa. The latter was for many years private secretary to Sir Richard.

Chinese Troops Mutiny.

Pekin, Sept. 26.—The troops encamped outside the gates of Wuchang, capital of the Province of Hupeh, mutinied Tuesday night and attacked the city. The troops numbered several hundred and were composed for the most part of cavalry. A strong force of Gen. Li Yuen Heng's regiment immediately engaged the rebels, and after several hours of fierce fighting, dispersed them. The casualty list is not known, but two officers were executed for failing to divulge their knowledge of the movement.

It is believed that the attacking party only intended to loot the city, but most of the towns in the interior have no defenders from such outbreaks, in which both the republican and former imperial troops indulge. The republican spirit apparently is not appreciated by the classes from which the soldiers are recruited.

The object of the present loan is ostensibly for the purpose of paying off and discharging this menacing army, which is very large, according to the lists submitted by the generals.

Students "Invade" Town.

Montreal, Sept. 26.—Fifty McGill students from the university survey camp had a conflict Tuesday night with citizens of the town of Cartierville, near here. The students becoming disturbed by the continuous rainfall at their camp, entered the town, and, coming to blows with the townfolk, drove them across the river. There the students rallied and returned. The mayor summoned the chief of police and the town fire brigade. The students divided their forces and by a rear attack drove the firemen before them and captured the two hose wagons. By this time hostilities had continued for two hours and both "armies" agreed to peace terms.

THE MARKETS.

Liverpool Wheat Futures Close Higher, Chicago Lower—Live Stock —Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Sept. 25.—Heavy selling of wheat today by a leading firm started general liquidation and caused a weak market. The close, tho steady, was ⅝c to 1⅜c under last night. Corn finished a shade to 1c higher, oats off ⅛c to ⅜c, and provisions varying from 2½c decline to 7½c advance.

Winnipeg Grain Market.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 25.—The slump in the premiums on cash wheat was the feature of today's market. For some time the premium for spot has been high, owing to the demand to fill lake and ocean tonnage which was contracted ahead. The heavy drop in premiums is due to the fact that any of these charters which were not switched to Duluth have been probably well filled. Options opened 1-8c to 1-4c higher, but weakened later in sympathy with American markets, and closed 7-8c lower for all months. Oats were in fair demand, closing 1-2c to 5-8c lower. Flax was strong for both months, October closing 1c higher and November 4c higher. Receipts 489 cars inspected, 300 in sight for tomorrow.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Sept. 25.—There was a fair demand from foreign buyers for wheat, and, as early prices bid were unchanged from yesterday, sales of a number of loads of Manitoba and Duluth were made, but late cables came weaker at a decline of 3d. Some business was worked in oats for export, and there is a fair demand for old and new crop barley. Locally, oats are very strong, with a good demand, and sales of sample grades were made at [illegible] to 54c, ex-store. A sale of 10,000 No. 3 yellow corn was made at 89c f.o.b., Chicago, for November shipment, and other sales amounting to 40,000 were made for prompt and nearby shipment.

Foreign and local demand for flour good, and the market is active, with some millers away behindhand with orders. Demand for bran fair and shorts good. Butter and cheese rather quiet, but firm. Eggs active. Pork advanced 50c to $1, and pure lard ½c, while dressed hogs declined 25c.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Sept. 25.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Sept. 21 were 1700 cattle, 2750 sheep and lambs, 1775 hogs and 700 calves, while the offerings on the market this morning for sale were 1300 cattle, 700 sheep and lambs, 2050 hogs and 400 calves.

Owing to the increased supplies of common and medium cattle, an easier feeling prevailed in the market for such, and prices ruled lower, but choice steers were scarce. In fact, there were none on the market, while good stock met with a good demand. The attendance of buyers was large, and a fairly active trade was done, with sales of good steers at $6.25 to $6.50; medium at $5.25 to $5.75, and common at $4 to $5 per 100 pounds. There was considerable demand for choice butcher cows, which sold well at $5.25 to $5.50; medium at $4 to $5, and common at from the inside price down to $2.50 per 100 pounds. The quality of the bulls offered was common and brought from $2.50 to $3.50 per 100 pounds. The tone of the market for lambs was steady at the recent decline in prices, owing to the fact that the offerings were much smaller than they have been of late, and the demand good, at $5.50 to $6 per 100 pounds, while sheep were quiet and unchanged at $3.50 to $3.75 per 100 pounds. The trade in calves was active at prices ranging from $2 to $10 each, as to quality. An easier feeling prevailed in the market for hogs, and inside prices were 25c per 100 pounds lower than on Monday, on account of the larger supply, but at the reduction the demand was good and sales of selected lots were made at $8.75 to $9.10 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Sept. 25.—Cattle—Receipts, 18,000; market, steady to 15c lower; beeves, $5.15 to $11; Texas steers, $4.65 to $8.25; western steers, $6 to $9.30; stockers and feeders, $4.30 to $7.70; cows and heifers, $2.90 to $8; calves, $8.50 to $11.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 18,000; market, generally 5c up, but closed weak; light, $8.30 to $8.87½; mixed, $8.15 to $8.90; heavy, $7.95 to $8.80; rough, $7.95 to $8.15; pigs, $5 to $8; bulk of sales, $8.30 to $8.75.

Sheep—Receipts, 44,000; market, steady; native, $3.50 to $4.50; western, $3.50 to $4.50; yearlings, $4.75 to $5.50; lambs, native, $4.75 to $7; western, $5 to $7.25.

ANNUAL FAIR OF MADOC AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION

Madoc district fall fair held in the thriving village of Madoc on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week was conducted under somewhat adverse circumstances, owing to the inclement weather. On Tuesday rain fell for the greater portion of the day, not only causing a lack of attendance, but despoiling to some extent exhibits which were placed in tents on the fair grounds. This was especially the fact where the handiwork of the ladies was displayed. In some cases beautiful fancy work was soaked with the rain. On Wednesday, while rain did not descend, the sky was overcast and the atmosphere was anything but pleasant. In spite of these drawbacks, and the fact that roads leading to the village were in a deplorable condition, there was a good attendance on the second day, and the management were of the opinion that the receipts would equal the expenditure. This fair has for years been recognized as the best held in the northern part of Hastings County and this year was no exception to the rule. The exhibits were numerous in all the classes and the display made was all that could have been desired. In all the classes there were many entries and it would be difficult to surpass in quantity and quality. The display of horses was exceptionally large and some fine animals were to be seen, demonstrating that the yeomen in that section of the country breed good horses. The cattle, sheep and swine were also above the average. In one of the large tents a display was made which attracted considerable interest. In it was shown the handiwork of the ladies, fruit of a superb quality, flowers and dairy products. A second tent was used for the display of roots and grains, while a third contained a large exhibit of cheese, the product of several factories in the vicinity of Madoc. An exhibit much admired was that of poultry. Turkeys, geese, ducks and chickens of various varieties were to be seen.

Owing to continuous rain the track was in no condition for the speeding events, and in consequence some were compelled to be cancelled. Two were held, namely, a three minute trot, and a running race. These furnished amusement for many of the spectators.

The chief attraction which excited intense interest, was the balloon ascension, and a triple parachute drop, executed by Alfonso Stewart of California, who when at a height of about 1800 feet loosened his parachutes and descended gracefully to the ground. After being released of its human freight, the balloon soared away into the clouds and was soon lost to view. It descended at Eldorado, about 7 miles from the starting point.

The chief exhibitors in the various classes were as follows:

SPEEDING EVENTS.

In the three minute trot there were three entries, namely, Joe Hall, owned by Geo. Barnum, Lady Blue, owned by T. Blue and the Radcliffe mare, owned by J. Radcliffe. Three mile heats were run and the horses in each heat finished in the order named.

Three horses were entered in the running race, and were owned by Thos. Holland, Wesley Nickle, and Roy Tumelty. Only one heat was run and the winners were in the order named.

A mysterious race caused much merriment. Alex Robinson, Roy Dale and Geo. West, in most grotesque costumes, drove horses hitched to conveyances which, from apearance, come out of the ark. A lad named Harry Empey of Madoc township, had a one year old steer hitched up to a two-wheeled cart and not only entered in the race, but won 1st prize, to the delight of the spectators.

In these events W. Simmons was starter, and Harry Ketcheson, C. Whytock and A. Nicholson were judges.

A walking contest once around the track was won by a team of horses owned and driven by Mr. W. Martin. Mr. W. J. Cooney secured 2nd prize.

Mr. Thos. Holland won first prize in the quick hitch up competition; Michael Kirby 2nd, and Edward Holland 3rd.

NOTES.

Mr. H. Ketcheson of Sidney was the judge for light horses; Mr. A. Clarke of Brunston, Ont., for heavy draught horses; Thomas Hall of Bradford, Ont., for cattle, sheep and swine; Jas. Baptiste of Springbrook, for poultry; W. C. Reid of Belleville for fruit; Mrs. J. White and Mrs. M. Coulter, ladies' department; W. Kerr of the Agricultural Department, Stirling, and C. W. Thompson, for grain, seeds, potatoes, and other roots, and Mr. G. G. Publow of Kingston, for cheese.

Mr. J. A. Beckwith, cheesemaker at the Madoc factory for the third year in succession won the beautiful cup presented by the association for the best made cheese. The cup is now his personal property and he naturally prizes it very highly.

Mr. Robt. Robinson of Queensboro again won the prize donated for the best drawing team on the grounds. He has won this prize for several years in succession. Mr. John Toben of Madoc township, was the only other competitor.

The Intelligencer representative feels grateful to Mr. W. E. Connor, the genial and obliging secretary of the society, for courtesies extended to him and assistance rendered in securing necessary information.

The officers of the society for this year are as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Dr. W. S. Harper.

In the evening under the auspices of the Society a successful entertainment was given by the Royal English Hand-bell Ringers. A large number attended the performance.

Thunder Storm and Barn Burned at Madoc Village

At about 4 o'clock this morning the village of Madoc and the immediate vicinity was visited by a severe electric storm. The lightning was exceptionally vivid and the thunder deafening. During the storm a barn belonging to Mr. Christopher Henderson, a farmer who lives in Madoc township near the village, was struck and burned to the ground also some outbuildings. The season's crops, with some farming implements, were destroyed. The loss to Mr. Henderson is a serious one.

Mr. John Ash, who conducts a livery business in Madoc village, was at an early hour this morning the victim of a runaway accident. He was driving towards the village, when his horses became frightened at the thunderstorm and ran away. Mr. Ash was thrown out of the vehicle with the result that one of his legs was broken and he was considerably bruised about the body.

Heavy Fall of Snow In So. Alberta

CALGARY, Alta., Sept. 25.—All over the extreme southern portion of Alberta snow fell last night, and today the weather continues cold and the sky remains overcast. Harvesting is at a complete standstill, and much anxiety is felt by the farmers as to the crops, both those cut and those still standing.

From western districts near the mountains reports are coming in that the uncut grain has a heavy layer of snow over it. In Alberta the snow is thin, and the standing grain will probably be very little damaged unless a heavy frost follows.

There is still 75 per cent. of the Alberta spring grain to be cut yet. The apprehension of the farmers, however, is mostly directed towards the fall wheat that is in shock. The snow is extremely wet and is penetrating the shocks right through. The wheat will easily depreciate in value one grade, and should warm weather come after the storm, much wheat will undoubtedly sprout.

Constantinople, Sept. 26.—Apprehension has been aroused in diplomatic circles here in regard to the decision of the Turkish Government to hold extensive army manoeuvres next month in the village of Adrianople.

It is said that 50,000 troops are to be put into the field.

It is thought that at the present juncture this action may furnish Bulgaria with a pretext to proceed with the mobilization of its army or, alternatively, that it may endanger the Bulgarian Cabinet.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier advises the French-Canadians of New Ontario to be Imperialistic, but he failed to tell them that his idea of Imperialism is to have a navy with a string to it—one that would not and could not go to the assistance of the Empire without the consent of his government if he were in power—a consent that might be given too late, if given at all. A strange kind of Imperialism surely.—Kingston Standard.

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Author of "The Romance of War," "Under the Red Dragon," "Fairer than A Fairy," etc.

The whole crew were instantly on deck, and certainly smoke was seen to be issuing from under iron bands, the wooden covering, and the canvas tarpaulin of the fore hatchway.

"Off with the hatch—men, work with a will! Be cool and steady, rig the hose, and stand by with the fire buckets!" cried Walmer.

The latter were instantly brought from their place at the break of the poop, the hatch was taken off, and then that most terrible sight at sea, flames were seen shooting up the fore hatchway. Some caeses of petroleum had broken loose, and the whole forepart of the ship was speedily a mass of irrepressible fire.

The sharp hiss of a few buckets of water, which were almost evaporated in their descent amid the scorching heat, showed how unavailing would be our efforts to save the ship, the whole cargo being of the most inflammable description.

The roaring of the flames, as they ran in circles round the well-greased mast, along the tarry forestay, and set fire to the foresail, forestaysail, and jib, was appalling, and the noise and confusion consequent on so sudden and terrible a catastrophe were so great, that Captain Walmer had to provide himself with his speaking trumpet to make the now bewildered crew obey him.

By the rapidy with which the conflagration spread, the crew were separated into two portions—the greater part were amidships; but seven or eight were compelled to take refuge far ahead, upon the bowsprit, and even the flying jibbom.

"Let her drive before the wind, square the mainyar," cried Walmer, "and so let her go till we have the boats clear and ready for lowering. Bring up the charts, the log-book, and my chronometer. Mr. Hawsewood, put a beaker of water and a bag of biscuits into each boat, and stand with a gang to lower away. Keep quiet, men, for the sake of your lives. We must save them, if we cannot save the ship."

That which added to the seamen was the knowledge that we had gunpowder on board, and we knew not the moment the flames might reach it and send us to eternity. Thus the clamour grew great, and confusion greater, several men all shouting at once.

"Remember the powder—remember the powder!"

"It is aft the mainmast!" cried one.

'Scuttle the water tank," suggested another.

"Stand by, men, to lower the boats," commanded Hawsewood, who with great prompitude had fulfilled the captain's orders, and put into three boats compasses, bread and water—a duty in which I assisted him.

'Where is Mr. Rudyard, the second mate?' asked Walmer, suddenly recollecting him.

"Ill in the forecastle bunks," replied a voice.

'Is he not one of those astride the bowsprit?"

'No, sir, replied Mullins, the boatswain.

"Impossible, sir; fire all about—the flames have cut him completely off."

"Then Heaven help the poor fellow!" exclaimed Walmer.

At that moment we heard a shriek, and the second mate, in his nightdress, was seen to make a dart from the forecastle hatch, and passing almost through the flames, to leap headlong into the sea over the bows, and we never saw him again.

The fall of the foremast with a dreadful crash, when the shrouds and the forestay were scorched through, and the consequent descent of the maintopmast, with all its gear and hamper, yards and sails reduced the vessel in a moment to a complete wreck, and the clouds of loose canvas that enveloped the deck—actually imprisoning some of the crew, as they caught fire fast and furiously—compelled us to lose no time in quitting the ship.

She had four boats, but, unhappily two of these were swamped and filled with water alongside by the unequal and hurried manner in which the fall-tackles were let go, and a third was dashed to pieces by the descent of the maintopsail yard, which disabled or killed outright—we never knew which—four of our men.

Mullins, the boatswain, the black cook—who was shouting all the while, "Jumbo, oh Jumbo!"—the Obeah man of the Negroes—with Walmer and myself, contrived to get the fourth, and now only serviceable boat successfully lowered. She had all her oars secured to the thwarts by a lashing, which we cut.

We then shoved off on the port side to get clear of the ship, and pick up such of the crew as might jump overboard.

The fire had not yet reached the cabin, or store-room; but by the fall of the rigging, and especially of the set sails, all of which were soon in flames, we had no chance of getting provisions for this boat, which was the only one poor Hawsewood had not time to store.

We pulled round under the bows, and picked four men off the bowsprit easily enough, as they slid down the dangling ends of some half-burned ropes.

The scene was now grand and awful. The entire ship was one mass of roaring flame. It shot out at the windows astern, at the ballast ports ahead, and lit up the little circular ports of the cabin berths; and now the danger of exploding powder compelled us to pull some distance, so that we could not, but at at the risk of our lives, return and take off four of the crew—one of these Hawsewood—whom we saw hanging on by the lower irons of the mizen chain plates, and to whom we halloed in vain to drop into the sea and strike out towards us.

Perhaps the poor fellows were not swimmers, or were too paralyzed by fear to understand us, and they would have continued to hold on there, half submerged in the sea, till the chain plate grew too hot for their grasp, or till the showers of falling sparks choked them; but suddenly there was a terrific and roaring crash, as the powder in the hold exploded.

A vast and conical pyramid of red fire and glittering sparks ascended high into the air, to arch oven and then to fall, as if from the zenith, in a hissing shower upon the sea, and then for a time all became comparative darkness; but for a time only, as the flames gathered new strength, fore, aft, and amidships, and then some fifty tons of saltpetre which she had on board continued to burn steadily, casting a blue and ghastly glare for thirty miles or more upon the sea, and pale and most sepulchral looked our blanched and saddened faces in that cold and chilly light, which made everything so luridly horrible, tipping, as if with phosphorus, the summit of every wave that rose, and showing us many strange and mysterious things that seemed to glide in the depths below us.

We were not without hope that this light might be seen from some passing ship, and bring her down to our succour; but when day broke fairly, and the poor Wanderer, after burning to the water's edge, went suddenly down with a sound that passed over the water like a sigh, an exclamation escaped us all, for as the grey daylight stole over the sea with its tropical rapidity, and replaced the ghastly glare on which we had looked so long with haggard eyes, we now swept the far horizon

Not a sail was in sight, and there we were on the wide and open sea, eight of us in all, cramped in a small boat, with a compass to steer by certainly, but without a sail to hoist, a biscuit to eat, or a drop of water to allay the thirst that, after so many hours of keen excitement, of heat and exertion, was already beginning to be sensibly felt by us all.

For myself I may say that a dogged indifference to life and death alike possessed me now.

I might die, and never learn the fate of Clarice Haywood. She might survive, the solitary woman on the raft, and never know of mine till we met in that place where there would be no parting and where there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage.

CHAPTER XLIV.

How often had I said mentally, "Oh, anything—anything to kill the dull, the stupid, and the weary time till we meet again?" and now I had that "anything" with a vengeance.

"By the last observation poor Bill Hawsewood and I made together, we should now be not many miles from the island of Tobago, and the Spanish Main should lie there," said Walmer, pointing to the westward.

"And how should Tobago bear, sir?" asked a seaman.

"Nor'-west," said Walmer, glancing at the compass, which was now lashed by three or four of our neckties to the stern thwart in front of him, for he now held the yoke lines and was steering. "Bend to your oars, my friends," said he, after a pause. 'Thank heaven, we have the prospect of a fine day before us, at all events, when there might be a tough gale, and how owuld we fare then? So pull steadily, quietly, and with a will, for our lives depend upon our fortitude and exertions now."

In all his tropical splendour, the morning sun rose, amid clouds of crimson and amber, from the calm and lovely sea; but the hearts of all in that boat—that mere speck which floated in loneliness upon the vast expanse of water—were oppressed by sad, and perhaps terrible thoughts, save perhaps myself, for with me it seemed as if the light had departed from my existence on the day we found that fatal message from the sea and that nothing in this world could ever illuminate it again.

"How far, sir, do you think Tobago may bear?" asked Mullins, breaking a long silence.

'Some eighty miles or so from where the ship went down," replied Walmer, and again we relapsed into silence that was broken only by the hard breathing of the rowers, the strain of the boat's timbers, and the monotonous wooden clank of the oars beween the trolling pins, as she was urged by four of us at a time on her watery and somewhat uncertain path.

Twice during that day we were tantalized by sounds that came across the water from the ships that were by us unseen.

The sun was verging westward now, and we felt more lonely than ever on the sea, more helpless and abandoned to fate. Our thirst was excessive after a day of heat and toil at the oars, in an atmosphere so saline, and baleful though the night dew might prove, we were not without hope it would moisten our parched lips.

Dublin Book Pirates.

Dublin is rich in literary associations and during the eighteenth century was a busy publishing center. Some of its enterprises, however, were not of a very reputable kind. Ireland was then outside the copyright laws and English books were "pirated" in Dublin as freely as afterward in America. Some Dublin publishers are said to have kept spies in the London printing houses and by this means were able to issue "pirated" editions of important books coincidently with and sometimes even before the appearance of the authentic issue.—London Chronicle.

Two Hundred Men Executed on Spot For Their Mutiny

WU CHANG, China, Sept. 26.—More than 200 mutinous soldiers were captured and instantly executed without court-martial by the loyal troops commanded by General Li Yuuan Heny in consequence of the outbreak which occurred among the soldiers encamped outside the walls of this city on Tuesday.

The remainder of the mutineers fled into the open country after they had attacked the town and been defeated by the loyal garrison.

The mutineers were all cavalrymen and numbered over 2,000. They had arranged with the artillerymen quartered in the barracks inside the walls to join in the movement but the gunners at the critcal moment failed to keep their promise.

General Chi-Men was warned of the mutineers' plot. He permitted the city gates to be opened as had been arranged by the conspirators, and a body of mutineers numbering fifty who were to seiez important points, were admitted and immediately shot down.

The others, on hearing the firing, followed in and a severe fight ensued, resulting in the complete defeat of the mutineers.

Victoria Hotel Rifled Last Night

Some Enterprising But Unknown Crook Entered Through Door—Ten Dollars and Two Bottles of Whiskey Taken

The Victoria Hotel, situated on Front Street, and conducted by Mr. F. Allore, was burgarlized late last night or some time this morning. For the pains taken in effecting an entrance the burglar secured about ten dollars from the till, and two bottles of whiskey. At the rear of the premises is a door which at one time contained two good sized panes of glass. These were broken out, and in their stead two panels of wood had been inserted, one of which was dexterously removed by the ambitious prowler, giving the uninvited guest access to the interior. A door leading to the bar was then forced open, and quick work was made in securing the booty, retreat evidently being made over the same route. As the house is locked up every night about 12 o'clock., no one was on the alert to detect the marauder, who had undoubtedly planned the mode and time of operation.

Every housekeeper can have a nice little milky way of her own from the stable to the pump.

EIGHT WOUNDED CARRIED OUT THEN LECTURER PROCEEDED

The announcement comes from Paris that Prof. Gustave Herve, the Socialist, who has just been released from jail because of the utterances of his paper during the railway strike, would deliver a lecture last night on "Our Country," stirred up the militant Anarchist who regard Herve as a backslider, and they determined to prevent his address. They gathered in large numbers in the hall and started a disturbance before the time for the lecture to begin. Chairs flew and revolvers were fired, and before the professor started to speak, eight wounded men were taken to the hospital. When he took the platform and failed to advise the conscripts to desert, the radical anti-militarist faction and Anarchists, who were present in great strength, raised pandemonium.

In spite of the racket, Prof. Herve proceeded to deliver his address. The noise and turmoil were so great, however, that it was impossible to hear what he said beyond learning that he explained his famous phrase about planting the flag in a manure heap as a reference to an imperial, not a republican flag. He declared that his sole error had been in allowing himself to be dubbed anti-patriotic. He denied that he was an anti-militarist, and said that he believed it was only possible to effect a social revolution with the assistance of the army, and to secure this the schools must be captured first.

Prisoner Set Fire To Bunk in His Cell

GUELPH, Sept. 26.—Constable Gamble of Palmerston turned over a man named John Creweed, who was sentenced on Tuesday by Magstrate Rabb of Palmerston to thirty days in jail on a disorderly conduct charge, to local officials, who accompanied him to Berlin jail. Creweed is said to be a dangerous man when drinking. His home is in Listowel, and he had been put on the Indian list there. As he could get no liquor he drove to Palmerston, where he raised a row. He had been in the cell but a short time when he began to pound on the bars. On going to quiet him the constable found the cell full of smoke, the prisoner having set fire to his bunk. When the constable opened the door Creweed flew at him like a wild man, and he had to knock him down and pinion him before he could induce him to leave the cell. After placing the prisoner in another cell the constable returned and extinguished the fire.

Arrested as Spies

A grave frontier incident occurred Wednesday at Belgrade, when six fully equipped Austrian soldiers under the command of Lieut. Szekerosy were arrested by Servian frontier guards and charged with espionage. The soldiers belonged to the garrison of the Hungarian Town of Pancsova, about ten miles to the northeast of the Servian capital.

Wild Cave Man Captured

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y., Sept. 26.—Half-naked, his face and head covered with hair, armed with a club and barking like a fox when approached, Arthur Britton, 40 years old, who has been missing from his home for more than ten years, was found yesterday living in a cave in the Pawling mountains. This afternoon he was committed to the Hudson River State Hospital, and the physicians there say he is almost a veritable wild man. Britton, because of his wild life, has lost the art of speaking. His mind is shattered, but, although he is thin, he possesses the strength of a giant.

He lived in a hole in the rocks in the side of the mountain and it required four hours' work to induce him to come forth. It was the calling of his brother, Irving Britton, that finally induced him to come forth. Then officers fell upon him and bound him into captivity. To-day Justice Silas L. Davis, of Dover, sent Britton to the asylum.

Britton's mind became affected while serving in the Philippines during the Spanish-American war. Soon after he returned to Pawling after the war he began to wander into the woods and to camp out. Soon he began to stay several days at a time. Finally he made his home in the open and seldom returned home. Ten years ago his family lost all traces of him.

Five years ago the mountaineers began to tell stories of seeing a wild man in the woods and fields. The story circulated over the whole region but no attempt was made to make a capture because the residents were afraid. The man, they said, raced through the underbrush and barked like a fox. Sometimes, they said, he climbed tall trees. Britton's family finally heard the wild man tale and Irving went into the mountain to investigate, believing that the wild man might be his brother. He trailed him to his cave and there identified him. He carried food to the cave dweller, and enlisted the aid of Justice Davis. The Deputy Sheriff made several trips to the mountains to capture the wild man, but day after day he eluded them. They finally found the pass among the rocks through which the man reached his cave. This they followed and discovered his hiding place. Justice Davis sent for Sheriff Townsend and Under Sheriff Hornbeck, and today, accompanied by Dr. Merriman, of the Hudson River State Hospital staff, who is a hypnotist, went to the cave. The door of the cave is only three feet wide, and piled in front of it were boulders. A dugout farther up the mountain side was Britton's winter home.

In his excitement Britton almost continually barks like a fox. He kept up the barking all the way to the asylum, and only stopped when given a drug.

REMAINS OF SIR RICHARD CARTWRIGHT LAID TO REST

KINGSTON, Ont., Sept. 26.—St. George's Cathedral added one more to its historic memories today when it witnessed the pronouncement of the stately funeral rite of the Anglican church over one of Canada's most distinguished men, Sir Richard Cartwright, but the perfect simplicity of the service seemed only to deepen the grave solemnity of the ceremony. To the strains of Chopin's Funeral March the coffin was met at the west door by the Dean of Ontario and Rev. O. G. Dobbs, rector of St. Paul's church, Brockville. Preceded by the choir, the commital sentences at the grave were said by Rev. O. G. Dobbs, and the closing blessing pronounced by the Dean of Ontario.

There were present: Senator Lougheed, representing the Cabinet; Senator Jaffray and the Hon. Charles Murphy. The floral contributions were beautiful and costly.

The procession left "The Maples" at 1.30 and passed around the summit of the Barriefield hill, across the old pile of Cataraqui bridge to St. George's. The body was born by Colonel Henry Smith, Colonel McGill, J. B. Walkem, K.C., Frank Dobbs, John Dobbs and F. C. O'Hara of Ottawa.

Should Periodically Search for Weapons

BANTFORD, Sept. 26.—The Grand Jury at the Assizes here, in their presentment to Mr. Justice Riddell, the presiding Judge, made the following recommendation:

"Owing to the prevalence of crimes of violence amongst the foreign immigrants by reason of their possession of firearms, knives and other dangerous weapons, we believe that for the protection of the community a periodical search for and confiscation of such weapons would be advisable, and we would accordingly strongly recommend the same."

Sir Jas. Grant Would be M. P.

OTTAWA, Sept. 26.—Sir James Grant is actively engaged in canvassing in Carleton County to succeed the late Mr. Edward Kidd. Yesterday he attended the Carleton County Fair at Richmond, and at the invitation of the executive, delivered an address on the "Outlook of Empire."

Prior to entering upon this subject Sir James remarked that he was invited to an interview with the late Mr. Kidd, M.P. of Carleton, who spoke of his hopes of entering the Senate and hoped that he (Sir James) would be his successor, owing to his long experience in the political affairs of Canada.

Sir James came out in favor of reciprocity during the campaign of last year.

Detected Iceberg Three Miles Away

MONTREAL, Sept. 26.—On the steamship Royal Edward, which arrived today from Bristol, was Dr. Meyer Coplans, bacteriologist of public health in the University of Leeds, England. Dr. Coplands made the voyage for the purpose of testing an apparatus he has invented as an aid to navigators in fog and haze and for detecting the presence of icebergs.

In technical language, Dr. Coplans described his instrument as an electrical apparatus, automatic, self-recording, for taking the salinity of water. The result of the voyage, he stated, was that a complete record had been obtained of the salinity of the track of the vessel from Bristol to Montreal. This was of special significance, he claimed, in regard to the effect of icebergs on water.

Experiments were carried out on the Royal Edward, which left Bristol September 18. The vessel encountered gales for three days, causing one day's delay. The apparatus had an automatic ice alarm, which sounded successfully three times in the vicinity of ice.

Dr. Coplans claims that certain definite results have been obtained which are of great scientific, if not of immediate ulitarian value. His instrument "nosed" the presence of an iceberg three miles and a half away. It was not the temperature of the water that gave the signal, but the change in the salinity of the water, which was greatly reduced by the presence of the iceberg.

Lloyd-George And His Land Reform Plans

LONDON, Sept. 26.—British landowners showed anxiety to-day at the news that Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George will be ready either Oct. 7. when Parliament reconvenes, or very soon afterward, definitely to announce details of his programme for 'freeing the land for the benefit of the people."

"Lloyd George is at heart a single taxer," said one of his closest friends—an American—to-day. "He appreciates that it would not do to put England on a single tax basis at once, bute that is the end towards which he is working. He proposes, by ever-increasing taxation of land values, ultimately to break up the land monopoly."

Titanic Law Suits To be Tried in The Near Future

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—A cable from London says: The first batch of claims against the White Star Line arising out of the Titanic disaster will come to trial during the approaching law sittings. They are being brought in behalf of the relatives of fourteen passengers who perished, and the findings in thes cases are expected to govern subsequent claims.

Thomas Scanlan, M. P., who represented the Seamen and Firemen's Union at the Mersey inquity, has been briefed by the plaintiffs. He will put forward the claim chiefly on the grounds that after warning had been received of the proximity of ice there was no deflection of the liner's course, no reduction of speed, nor any increased outlook.

All these points were emphasized in Lord Mersey's report, and it will be interesting to see whether his findings are borne out by the juries which try the cases. Mr. Scanlan also contends that proper steps were not taken after the disaster to transfer more passengers to the lifeboats.

The White Star Company is expecting to rely on the defence that Captain Smith, in all that he did after receiving warning of ice, merely followed he usual practice. In support of this contention it probably will call as witnesses a number of commanders of trans-Atlantic vessels.

The terms of the contract under which tickets are issued oblige all claims to be brought in the English courts, where the Merchant Shipping Acts limit the liability of the shipping company to $75 per ton in case of loss of goods. As the tonnage liability of the Titanic was 43,521 tons gross the liability for loss of life is $3,264,075, and for goods, $1,140,840, making a total of $5,004,915.

TORONTO, Sept. 26.—Afte hearing argument of counsel this morning Judge Denton found Rev. E. B. St. Clair, secretary of the Ontaio Vigilance Committee, guilty of circulating obsence literature and allowed him to go on suspended senence on his agreeing to furnish a boil. Rev. Mr. St. Clair declared that i he was guilty of a crime he wishec to pay the penalty by a term in pison and refused to furnish a bond. He was then given a week to conside and in the meantime is not in custdy.

There was not any contentin as to the contents of the circularbeing a matter of questionable naturand the question fought out in cort was whether the public was serwd in its publication. Uncle Sam's Guns Smash Dollie; Girl Files Damage Claim

The following interesting story of a recent date, comes from Portland Maine:

A seven-year-old girl and her doll versus the War Department of the United States. That was the title of the two weeks' contest which ended when the child's parents withdrew her from the fight here. The girl is happy and Uncle Sam also is officially pleased.

It all started when little Marion Coggeshall's doll was jolted off a coach and was smashed on the floor during target practice with the big guns at Fort William. The girl is the daughter of a New York broker with a cottage near the fort. The child was heartbroken.

"I'm going to write Uncle Sam a letter and tell him he as to stop shooting off his noisy guns old guns around here. He has ruined my baby Jane," she cried.

The sad, tear-stained eyes appealed to Mrs. Coggeshall and she drew the child to her.

"I don't want to be petted," said the little girl. "I just want to write," and she seated herself at her desk.

Her ink-blurred fingers gripped the pen in a mighty grasp, for she was writing to save the lives of her other dollies. At last the letter was finished. Her mother wanted to see what had been written, but the child said:

"It's awfully private, mother."

In the course of time the child's letter reached Washington. It went to the War Department. It was a serious matter, and received due attention.

The machinery of the department was set in motion. An order was issued for a board of officers to pass upon the claim of the ruined doll. The officials at the fort were notified. They called at the cottage with all due ceremony. Little Miss Coggleshall received them with dignity. She showed them Jane.

"I am the one who wrote you the letter," Marion said. The mother was not seen.

So a correspondence lasting more than two weeks was carried on between the fort officials and the War Department.

Snow in Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 26.—Snow fell again today in the Northwest, reports from the Dakotas and Minnesota telling of heavy falls in various districts. In the Twin Cities and Central Minneapolis a rain which had lasted twelve hours, was followed by a cold wave which weather officials thought would send the thermometer lower tonight.

Despatches from Fargo, N.D., said the snow flattened uncut corn and flax, and that thousands of harvest and threshing hands have left the state, unwilling to believe the weather will improve.

Turkish Troops To Manœuvre

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 26.—Apprehension has been aroused in diplomatic circles here in regard to the decision of the Turkish Government to hold extensive army manoeuvres next month in the villayet of Adrianople. It is said that 50,000 troops are to be put into the field.

It is thought that at the present juncture this action may furnish Bulgaria with a pretext to proceed with the mobilization of its army or alternatively that it may endanger the Bulgarian cabinet.

Representatives of the powers in course of conversation with the Turkish foreign minister recently have dwelt on the necessity for the introduction of reform in the European provinces of Turkey. They have pointed out the desirability of Turkey acting spontaneously in the matter.

The Russian representative suggested the employment of foreigners in the provincial administration, while Marquis de Pallavicini, the Austro-Hungarian ambassador, advised the Porte to see that reforms were really carried out. Otherwise, he declared, it would become difficult for the powers to use their influence with the Balkan states in the interest of peace.

According to the view held in official circles, however, the decision to hold the manoeuvres at Adrianople instead of provoking Bulgaria, is rather calculated to strengthen the interests of peace. Turkish officials argue that Bulgarian Chauvinists are urging war on the ground that Turkey is unprepared and disorganised, but when they see the strong and well-equipped army at Adrianople they will realize that Turkey is not an easy nut to crack, and Bulgarian bellicosity will abate. And it is further urged that Turkey has given ample proof that she does not entertain hostile designs.

TRAIN LEAVES TRACK

A Score of Persons Are Hurt in Wreck Near Chatham.

Day Coach and Dining-Car of Grand Trunk Train No. 16 Are Telescoped When They Are Derailed and Thrown Into the Ditch—Injuries of Miss Lafferty of Chatham Are Expected to Prove Fatal.

Chatham, Sept. 27.—A score of persons were injured, one, Miss Lafferty of Chatham, fatally, when the Grand Trunk fast train No. 16, from Detroit, was derailed about five miles west of Chatham about five o'clock yesterday afternoon. The dining car and the day coach were rolled over into the ditch and telescoped, while the engine, baggage car and the two rear-end day coaches, though they left the tracks, remained on the roadbed.

Among those injured are: Mrs. Mead, Kent Bridge, Ont.; Mrs. Robert Coyle, Chatham; Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Richards, Chatham; Miss S. T. Lewis, Detroit, Mich.; Miss Cox, Toronto; Miss Costello, Toronto; M. E. Gray, Brantford.

The dining-car was almost deserted, but the day coach was crowded with passengers, for the most part residents of Chatham. That the loss of life was not heavy is little short of miraculous, as it is stated by passengers that the train was traveling at the rate of about 50 miles an hour.

News of the accident reached Chatham speedily and motor cars and other vehicles were at once rushed to the scene and the work of rescue begun, the injured being hurried away to the General Hospital at Chatham. Here it was found that Miss Lafferty's injuries were fatal, she being hurt internally and paralyzed. It is feared her back is broken.

Several others required attention, but while severely cut and bruised, their injuries are not considered serious. Every passenger in the two coaches was severely shaken up, although the majority were able to dispense with hospital attention, their injuries being attended to at nearby farm houses.

Engineer Overland of Toronto, who was with the train, which was in charge of Conductor Higgins, denies that the train was going at high speed and asserts that the derailment was due to a defective rail. Passengers, however, say, in their opinion, the train was going at from forty-five to fifty miles an hour, and say that the ties appeared to have been in an unsafe condition.

The accident occurred on a level stretch about two and a half miles west of the diamond, a point where several lines intersect. The spot has not been regarded as a dangerous one, there being no curve.

As soon as news of the wreck was received an auxiliary started from London and reached the scene about an hour after the accident, but despite all efforts traffic was tied up west of Chatham until a late hour last night.

The damage to the diner and day coach was considerable, while the road bed was badly torn up.

Passengers on the wrecked train were able to leave Chatham on a special train east from Chatham late last night.

CAREFUL DOCTOR
Prescribes Change of Food Instead of Drugs.

It takes considerable courage for a doctor to deliberately prescribe only food for a despairing patient, instead of resorting to the usual list of medicines.

There are truly some scientific physicians among the present generation who recognize and treat conditions as they are and should be treated, regardless of the value to their pockets. Here's an instance:

"Four years ago I was taken with severe gastritis and nothing would stay on my stomach, so that I was on the verge of starvation.

"I heard of a doctor who had a summer cottage near me—a specialist from N. Y.—and as a last hope sent for him.

"After he examined me carefully he advised me to try a small quantity of Grape-Nuts at first, then as my stomach became stronger to eat more.

"I kept at it and gradually got so I could eat and digest three spoonfuls. Then I began to have color in my face, memory became clear where before everything seemed a blank. My limbs got stronger and I could walk. So I steadily recovered.

"Now after a year on Grape-Nuts I weigh 1[illegible] pounds. My people were surprised at the way I grew fleshy and strong on this food." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

To Rival The Panama Canal

OTTAWA, Sept. 26.—That the Tehuantepec National Railway will be able to compete on almost even terms with the Panama Canal is the opinion of Mr. A. W. Donly, Canadian trade commissioner to Mexico, who is in Ottawa for a few days on leave. Mr. Donly is a Norfolk county man, and has been trade commissioner to Mexico for twenty-three years. The Tehuantepec National Railway was built by the Mexican Government, and is operated partly as a public and partly as a private enterprise. It connects the two oceans from Port Mexico to Salina Cruz, and is about two hundred miles long. The road, Mr. Donly says, is now carrying a million tons of freight annually, including the sugar destined for most of the refineries in the eastern states. The terminal and other facilities are quite sufficient for all the traffic for some time to come. There is, of course, the cost of trans-shipment, but this is likely to be largely offset by the tolls of the new canal and the necessarily lengthy passage of ships through the locks. A considerable quantity of Canadian trade goes from ocean to ocean via the Tehuantepec, there being a Canadian customs official on the ground, who looks after the shipment of goods in bond.

The trade of Mexico has suffered during the last couple of years, Mr. Donly says, from the internal unrest. The foreign commerce of the country amounts to a hundred and fifty millions in gold, of which seventy per cent. is with the United States.

Her Unpaid Army Her Worst Enemy

The troops encamped outside the gatees of WuChung, China, capital of the Province of HuPeh, mutinied Wednesday and attacked the city. The troops numbered several hundred and were composed for the most part of cavalry. A strong force of General Li Yuen Heng's regiment immediately engaged the rebels, and after several hours of fierce fighting dispersed them. The casualty list is not known, but two officers were executed for failing to divulge their knowledge of the movement.

It is believed that the attacking party only intended to loot the city, but most of the towns in the interior have no defenders from such outbreaks, in which both the Republican and former Imperial troops indulge. The republic spirit apparently is not appreciated by the classes from which the soldiers are recruited

The object of the present loan is ostensibly for the purpose of paying off and discharging this menacing army, which is very large, according to the lists submitted by the generals.

The National Assembly recently made an investigation and discovered that the generals, like the soldiers, were not free from the methods prevalent under the Manchus, but the Governmen argues that it is cheaper to pay the military leaders' demands than fight.

Pathetic conditions prevail throughout the country. Occasionally detachments of soldiers engage in loot and wanton destruction. Trade is greatly hampered, and thousands are dying from starvation who could be saved by the employment of a few foreign engineers. Meantime the political situation, which is absorbing the Republican leaders, has curious and interesting phases.

Wild Ducks Hatched Out in Incubators

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 26.—The success of an expedition sent to Lake Manitoba this summer by the Storrs Agricultural Experiment Station in connection with its new work in the breeding of game birds, is announced in a bulletin issued today by the station. The expedition was in charge of State Ornithologist Herbert K. Job, and its aim was to accomplish the breeding of wild ducks under conditions of restraint, such as would prevail in the case of ordinary barn yard fowl

Previous attempts in this direction have met with failure, but Prof. Job believed he would be successful if stock be secured that was hand-reared from the egg, and had never learned wild ways.

The expedition chose a location where twelve species of wild ducks are found. The eggs were hunted, carefully selected and hatched out in incubators. The hatching was remarkable. In a majority of cases every egg of the set hatched. The average for the season was 82 p. c., which is better than most poultrymen attain.

Most of the young, except of two peculiar Maritime species, were successfully raised, with little loss. Even such supposedly wild natures as the Red Head, Canvas Back, and Blue Bill, proved perfectly tame, and thrived in confinement. The entire consignment is now on a preserve at the station.

The achievement is expected to prove the beginning of an important movement to save and restore wild fowl.

Strike In Spain Imminent.

Barcelona Sept. 27.—A general strike of a distinctively revolutionary character is imminent in the provinces of Barcelona, Valencia, Aragon and Saragossa. The dock laborers, ironmasters and members of the building trades unions have all adopted resolutions to quit work unless the demands of the railroad employes are granted within 24 hours.

There have already been several conflicts, which were immediately followed by the placing of additional artillery at vantage points, from which they were able to sweep the streets. Numerous arrests have been made.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

THE LIGTH ETERNAL

Last evening's production of "The Light Eternal" at Griffins Opera House was in every respect fully up to the previous evening. Aside from the fact that, independent of the exalted subject, the acting was of a nature which should call for the praise, and we do not hesitate to say that it was equal, if not superior, to any company visiting this city. The theatre should have been packed to the doors.

THE RED ROSE

"The Red Rose" will be the offering at the Griffin Opera House on Friday Oct. 4th with the chic little comic opera prima donna, Zoe Barnett, at its head. John C. Fisher, whose lavish production of "Floredora," "The Silver Slipper" "Babes in the Wood" and other musical comedy successes of the past decade, are well known, is sponsor for the present attraction.

"The Red Rose" tells a love story of the bond which draws Lola, an apparently penniless model of the studios, to Dick Lorimer, only son of an American millionaire captain of industry. Misunderstandings and parental oppositon part the lovers, but true love reunites them in the end. Through the action of the story, with its pathos, comedy, music, runs a riot of colorful growing, scenic investiture and careful staging. The first act shows the studio of Julian, a painting master of Paris; the second, the baronial estate of Lola's father; and the third, The Ball of the Four Arts, given by the students of Paris' Bohemia.

In Miss Barnett's support are many players known in comic opera circles, the cast including Nelson Riley, Bly Brown, Maurice Darcy, Russell Lennon, Wayne Nunn, William H. Conley, Charles M. Clear, Charlotte Philbrick, Laura Jaffray, David Reese and Walter H. Catlett. The chorus numbers s n e thirty-five members and is said to be unusually attractive. Mr. Fisher is said to have employed the greatest care in the selection of his company and the mounting of the production, which has been on a lavish scale.

Plan opens Tuesday at Doyle's Drug Store.

Merely Separate Sheep and Goats

Mayor William B. Thompson, of Detroit, called by the defence to-day as a witness at the hearing of 17 aldermen and a former city official charged with conspiracy, denied that he had ever given Detective W. J. Brennon "guest list" containing the names of a number of aldermen he believed might be susceptible to bribes.

The detective who conducted the investigation which resulted from the arrest of the officials, had previously declared that the Mayor gave him such alleged information several months ago. The Mayor testified he simply told Brennon to investigate the Council as a whole, "and separate the sheep from the goats."

Discussing the matters which led up to a civic investigation, Mayor Thompson testified that he had been instrumental in bringing members of a national detective agency to Detroit. "My intention was to look in to the Police Department of Public Works and the Council," said the Mayor.

Andrew H. Green, who, Mayor Thompson testified, guaranteed the financial end of the municipal investigation, was also on the stand today as witness for the defence. Mr. Green declared that the special detective who took charge of the probe was the one who suggested that an operative pose as an official of the Wabash Railway.

British Consular Service to Work for Canada

Hon. George E. Foster has made a remrakable record as Minister of Trade and Commerce. One close follower of Ottawa politics says he has accomplished in less than a year more than his successor did in fifteen years. Closer trade relations within the empire is his ideal, and already he has completed a treaty with the West Indies and is negotiating one with Australia. This week announcement was made of another step forward in cementing the empire, which will be of almost incalculable value to Canadian interests. He has concluded with Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of State in the British Cabinet, an arrangement of far-reaching importance by which the whole of the magnificent British consular service extending to every part of the globe will be at the disposal of Canada.

By this agreement the range of external business available to Canadian exporters will be greatly widened and authentic information as to the resources and development of Canada will be available at British consular offices the world over.

By the agreement the foreign office will furnish the department with copies of all trade reports from its consular offices as soon as they are published from any districts which may be specified by Canada.

Any Canadian firms or business men will be at liberty to apply direct to any of His Majesty's consuls in any part of the world for information as to the sale of Canadian products, methods of business pursued, and the best means of getting in touch with markets.

The British consuls will be supplied with statements of Canada's commerce, resources and development, and with lists of the principal industries and sources of supply. The consuls will pay particular attention to any reports of interest to Canada.

Canadian trade commissioners will have full liberty to apply to British consuls for assistance and advice in trade matters, and special Canadian trade representatives will be given all help possible and will have all the information of the British consular offices at their disposal.

Office room in British consulates will be afforded to Canadian commercial representatives when it is possible and convenient to arrange therefor; but in such cases the consular office will assume no responsibility for the direction or work of the Canadian representatives.

Members of the Canadian commercial service will be eligible for selection for and entrance to the British consular service on the terms and conditions applicable to other entrants thereto, subject to the regulations of the British government in carrying on its service.

These arrangements resolve themselves into this, that Canadians can use the British consular system to obtain information about foreign countries, and that foreigners can repair to British consular offices and obtain information as to Canadian conditions and opportunities. There also is opened the avenue to the building up of a Canadian consular service.

Making the Deaf to Hear

The facility with which Helen Keller, the blind deaf-mute, adapts herself to conditions as if she could hear and see and speak continues to surprise even the scientists. She has repeatedly written that she is able to enjoy music by standing close to a piano and putting her hand on it. Several scientests have expressed the opinion that she deludes herself, and that she cannot possibly be impressed by music in a definite manner. Professor W. Stern, of the University of Breslau, set out to demonstrate the matter definitely, and as the result of a visit to Miss Keller and several experiments, he has decided that she can hear with her fingers.

He sat down and played the piano while she leaned against it and placed one hand on the lid. First he played a simple melody in four-four measure, the rythm of which he specially accentuated. Miss Keller soon began with her other hand to beat-time, on the whole correctly, and when the piece was ended she called it a "soldiers' march."

The professor then tried her with different selections, with the same satisfactory results. When he played the "Blue Danube" waltz she was visibly agitated, her whole body swayed and vibrated, while her facial expression indicated great enjoyment. Chopin's Funeral March she called a "lullaby," and she was able to tell when a very high or a very low key was touched, and a thrill was promptly indicated.

The case of Miss Keller is the most extraordinary ever known in the education of blind deaf-mutes. She is proficient in an exceptional degree in the ordinary educational curriculum; she secured her Arts degree from Radcliffe College. She has a knowledge of several languages, and her general culture is exceptionally wide. She has written many books, and has a grace of style that is charming. By falling into the right system of persevering, she proves that there is nothing impossible to a person even though handicapped by many natural disabilities.

The Russian electorate has been called upon to choose a new Douma, the fourth in the new history of the country. It means much in the way of a change to substitute a legislature of elected representatives for a council selected by an autocrat, and the progress that is slowly made may be the surest in the end. The great thing is that there shall be no going backward.

••••

It has been established on what is evidently good evidence in the course of the aldermanic enquiry into the New York police organization and methods that many men with criminal records were appointed on the force, and, seemingly, with the knowledge of men in authority. This will, in many minds, account for much that has been exposed or indicated to exist. A man who has sinned and been punished is not a man to exclude from employment so that he may not get a chance to re-establish himself in the reputation of his fellows. He is not, however, as a rule, a man to set to the work of checking evildoers in a place of so many temptations as New York. The regulations for the police management evidently need amendment.

Does Not Approve Imperial Council

The London Daily Mail of recent date printed an interview with Premier Fish of Australia, sent by its Sydney correspondent, in which he says:—

"Opinion is undoubtedly consolidating on the question of national defence for which a common Imperial scheme is essential. Australia must be left to develop her own defence unit. I cannot see the advantages of the existence of an Imperial Defence Council of dominion representatives, who would sooner or later get out of touch with the thought of the people they represented and become only dead channels through which the policy of the Government would imperfectly form.

"I believe a better plan would be to hold a biennial personal consultation with the British military and naval authorities, in the same manner as was done last year. That would keep life in the common scheme of imperial defence. New Zealand's interests are irrevocably bound up with Australia, and I believe it is now recognized by the best thinkers that New Zealand will eventually join in one Australian unit of defence.

"I think it marvelous that a cadet scheme for the military training of all boys has been established with so little friction. People now regard it as a national necessity and an individual responsibility with each must shoulder.'

U. S. and Britain Should Unite for Defense Purposes

For the double purpose of business and defence, the United States and England should come together, the Duke of Sutherland declared Wednesday, while stopping over at New York en route from the Canadian North-West to London.

Incidentally the Duke, who is one of the largest land-owners in England, is trying to interest American capital in a colonization scheme in Canada. He says that Americans are regarded in Canada as very desirable citizens and, as matter of fact, many farmers are settling there.

Extracting Lion's Tooth

Toothache seems to be a concomitant of civilization. Civilized people with perfect teeth are comparatively scarce. Uncivilized and even semi-civilized people give their teeth no care, and yet they remain white and sound; but let such people move to a civilized land and dental troubles will be sure to develope. The Bulgarian peasant knows neither toothbrush nor toothache, while his fellow townsmen suffer greatly from caries.

The same seems to be true even of wild animals. When, as captives, they are brought into touch with civilization their teeth not frequently yield to our highly civilized disease, and the surgeon of the zoo is obliged to operate upon them. As may well be imagined his task is no simple one in the case of large and ferocious animals.

Such an operation was recently performed at the White City jungle, London, by Dr. Watt, a West London veterinary surgeon. The patient was a lion cub, 14 months old, which had been suffering with toothache for some time. He was drawn up against the bars of his cage and held firmly with ropes, then his mouth was kept open with chunks of wood, while the surgeon drew the decayed molar.—Scientific American.

King's Naval Library

King George possesses one of the finest collections of navel books and pamphlets that have ever been got together. Formerly his library has been kept at Bork cottage, but it is now being transferred to Windsor, where a specially fitted up room has been provided for it, says a writer in the Gentlewoman. This collection is not confined to books dealing with the British navy, but embraces the fleets of almost every country in the world and is in a diversity of languages.

There is nothing affecting the sea and its comand that escapes his majesty's notion and a leading firm of west end booksellers has a standing order to forward copies of any naval books that may be published to wherever the court happens to be situated the moment it makes its appearance. His majesty examines all these most carefully and decides whether they are worthy of being added to his collection or not. The king has a great liking for making margin notes in such books as he reads, and some of these would prove decidely interesting if it were possible to inspect them.

The Human Body

Everybody knows that the human body is wonderfully and fearfully made, but comparatively few people have an idea of the composition of their bodies as shown by chemical analysis. Somebody has given in the Chicago Tribune the analysis, not in scientific and technical terms, but in a very commonplace way. Taking a body weighing 150 pounds, the analyzer makes a blow at human self-conceit, as follows.

Do you know what you are?
You are a 100 dozen eggs.
You are four tenpenny nails.
You are 3694 cubic feet of gas.
You are 25 candles and a cake of soap.

You are heads of enough matches to fill 8064 boxes.

Furthermore, you are six teaspoonfuls of salt, a bowl of sugar and ten gallons of water.

Maybe all this is correct, but the average man would rather be told that he is composed of so many proportionate parts of hydrogen, oxygen, phosphorus, iron, albumen, etc., than that he is a mixture of eggs, nails, soap, etc., and especially with a superabundance of gas.—Nashville Democrat.

Better Dinners

"Is dinner ready, Mary?"

"Yes, Madam—it is ready, and, I think, a great success."

"Your cooking is improving."

"Well perhaps it is, and I hope so, but really Mrs. Housewife, I think our new Gurney-Oxford is partly responsible for the success I have had lately. I was never able to cook roasts and fowl so well on our old stove, and as for bread and biscuits, I used to tremble when I went to take them from the oven—they were so often soggy and heavy. Now they are always light and beautifully brown, and, if I do say it myself, something to be proud of."

"That's true, Mary, my husband has said almost the same thing. I'm awfully glad you approve of my choice of a Gurney-Oxford. He approves because of the saving in coal since we got it, also because of the better meals he is getting."

"Indeed he's right Madam—and it requires so little attention."

"That's fine. Will you serve dinner in a few minutes please."

BASEBALL.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Members of the National Baseball commission, with representatives of the Boston American and New York National league clubs, gathered here today to fix dates for the world's championship series, to settle a disputed question as to how and by whom the sale of tickets to the games shall be conducted, to fix the price for seats, formally announce the eligible players, and dispose of any other business bearing upon arrangements for the big games. Although New York is still in need of two games to clinch the Natonal league pennant, the commission will proceed on the supposition that the championship is assured and devote its main attention to arrangements for a world's series between New York and Boston. The schedule adopted, however, will be announced with a proviso, in deference to the Chicago Cubs, who have something like a 1000 to 1 chance of displacing the Giants. After deciding upon the dates the commission will invite Presidents Brush and McAleer of the New York and Boston clubs to toss for the honor of starting the series in their cities. With the honor goes the advantage of home sympathy for the first two games, if the plan to stage two games in each city instead of alternating each day is carried out.

Three of the commission will have supervision over the sale of tickets, and the fact that the American league has adopted resolutions refusing to be represented in a world's series unless accorded sole charge of the sale of tickets to games played on its grounds may result in a wrangle today. It appeared however, that the commission would let the two clubs handle the tickets to games played on its ground as usual, but would assume close supervision. The three members and Secretary McRoy, of the Boston club, after gathering in the city, planned the commission, Messrs. Herman, Lynch and Johnson, and President McAleer to go to the home of John T. Brush, president of the New York club at Pelham Manor ,a suburb, to hold a meet in there. It was said that no announcements would be made until late in the afternoon.

Jimmy Collins, former third baseman of the Boston Red Sox, and manager of the team when it won the world's series in 1904, says the Giants have an even chance to beat Jake Stahl's men in the coming battle. Collins is still ranked as the greatest third baseman in the history of baseball.

Just before the Connecticut League season closed, Pitcher Moore of Springfield, twirled ten innings without allowing Holyoke a hit. Paddy Green, who is destined to become a Yank, was his opponent, allowing three hits. Green weakened in the tenth and Springfield won out, 1 to 0.

Tex Covington who was instrumental in the smashing of Joe Wood's great record, was tagged for Kansas City, but he did not leave Detroit because of the refusal of certain clubs to waive on him.

"Lefty" Stanley, once with Baltimore and early this season with the Ganzelites,s to get another trial in the big show. He has been drafted from Atlantic City, Tri-State League, by the St. Louis Americans.

Bill Louden, the old Newark player, continues to play the best kind of a game in the Detroit infield. Bill can thank his lucky stars that he is in the big league now, and the Tigers can thank theirs that they still have Bill. The failure of Jim Delehanty and Charley O'Leary saved a job in the majors for Bill.

It was Manager George Stallings who recommended Louden to the Tigers. He also said that Bill's logical position was at second base, and since being placed there he has played a wonderful game. Jennings is confident that Louden is going to hit around .280 next year. This hitting, combined with his great fielding, will make him one of the best infielders in the game. And this is the man who nearly went back.

Frank J. Shaughnessy, manager of the pennant-winning team of Fort Wayne in the Central League, will not be back in the league next season, that is if he can help it. He owns the Ottawa Club, the pennant winners of the Canadian League, and hopes to remain there to handle that club next year. He cost Fort Wayne $300, and he is willing to part with that sum to get back to Ottawa.

It is beginning to look as if Eddie Grant would be the Red's regular shortstop next season. So far as can be learned the minor leagues have nothng left in the way of short fielders that look good. Jimmy Esmond, recently turned over to the Royals, had the shortfield job cinched until his "tummy" went back on him.

Larry McLean, it would seem, is about through as a member of the Red team. Manager O'Day says he is through with McLean and he is being backed up by President Herrmann. McLean has caused the Cincinnati managers so much worry that it is not likely any of the majors will bother with them.

At Picton fair yesterday, the Ontario baseball team of this city administered a coat of whitewash to the Picton team. The score was 8 to 0 in favor of the Ontarios The line up of the Belleville team was as follows: McGie, p. Mills, c. Gerou 1st b. Ketcheson, 2nd b. Ince, 3rd b. Goyer, ss Symons, cf. Newton, cf, and Knot lf. Watkins was to have played but injured his right hand whilst at practice before the game started.

In the New York State League season, just closed, Catcher Lou Ritter of the Utica team, made the wonderful record of catching every inning his team played, and that included 139 games and three innings of a game stopped by rain.

One hundred and fifty-seven home runs were recorded during the 1912 season in the New York State League as against 108 made the year before. Homers were frequent in Elmira, where there is a short centre-field fence; in Utica, where the ball rolls to the race track and in Troy, where the sphere drops into the river.

"I'm not a bit sore; in fact fact I'm glad Toronto won," said Manager John Ganzel of Rochester yesterday. "The loss of McMillan and Lelivelt was a serious blow, but no one will convince me that I made a mistake. In fact, I would make the same deal over again, if necessary. Without the men I got in exchange for them Rochester could not have stood up in the race as well as they did."—Statement made by John Ganzel in Toronto.

Umpire Guthrie of the International League will graduate to the National League, as the result of an agreement between President Barrow and President Lynch.

All hope of a post-season series between the Naps and Cincinnati Reds departed yesterday when Garry Hermann telegraphed to the effect that the Cincinnati club is so involved in post-season games that their cancellation would cause serious consequences. On receipt of the telegram President Somers wired Fred Clarke, manager of the Pittsburg Club in an effort to arrange a series between the Naps and Pirates.

Boston American League grounds will seat 35,000 and New York National grounds more than 40,000, so that with good weather conditions the coming world's champion baseball series should attract the biggest crowds in the history of the national sport.

Manager Birmingham of the Cleveland Naps started clearing out excess baggage Saturday. He released outfielder Hunter back to Flint, Outfielder Hauger and Third Baseman Nash to Toledo, and Pitchers Earnest Wolfe, Fred Walker and Catcher Nagleson to Sam Kennedy's Waterbury Club. Nagleson will remain with the Cleveland Club until the close of the season because of the injury sustanied by Fred Carisch Friday.

George Stovall, manager for the St. Louis Club, established a record in the August 7 games with the Athletics that is believed to be unprecedented in the annals of the game. Playing first base, he had seven assists.

THE CANADIAN SEED GROWERS' ASSOCIATION

The Eighteenth Annual Report of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association which is now being distributed by the Publications Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Ottawa, is replete with matters of interest not only to those concerned in the production of high class seed but to all who are interested in rural progress generally. In addition to the report itself there are included several addresses by such prominent authorities as the Hon. Martin Burrell, Dr. Jas. W. Robertson, Prof. C. C. James, Prof. L. S. Klinck, J. H. Grisdale, etc. Of special interest perhaps, is the paper presented by Mr. Rufus Stimson, Agent of Agricultural Education, Boston, Mass., on "Vocational Agricultural Education for Boys and Girls." The means adopted in Massachusetts and other States of the Union is interesting the boys in farm and in correlating the work of the school with ordinary farm work is most suggestive and should be carefully studied by all who are interested in the more efficient education of boys and girls in rural communities.

The above report may be had free of charge by applying to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Trade Minister Sails for England

Hon. G. E. Foster leaves Ottawa at the end of the week for England to attend the meetings of the Imperial Trade Commission and will be absent until Christmas. The commission resumes its sittings on October 9th, and the list of subject of enquiry as previously published includes a general investigation into trade conditons, a survey of the national resources of the dominions, their facilities for production, manufactures, source of supply, a general investigation into migration of population and efficiency of the agencies now employed, and how present methods can be improved. New Zealand and Australia will be visited next spring, but the order of going to the other dominions will be determined later.

Found a Gainsborough

A portrait which has hung for years in the back room of a house at Newport, in Monmouthshire, England, and whose value has never been guessed, turns out to be a Gainsborough picture of the Duke of York, which was painted for George III. in 1781. The owner of the painting on seeing Benjamin West's reproduction of the Duke of York was struck by the resemblance of the two faces, and this led to the discovery that the portrait at New port was the original. Gainsborough's signature is on the right hand corner at the bottom.

Many a man has been left a fortune who didn't get it. The lawyer saw it first.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

WOULD CENSOR PLAYS

Moral Reformers Want Dominion Board Created.

Representations on the Subject Will Be Made to Hon. R. L. Borden This Fall—Magazine Is To Be Established to Fight the Slave Trade—Three New Field Secretaries To Be Appointed—Tobacco Growing.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—Premier Borden is to be asked by the Dominion Moral Reform Council of Canada to have an act passed for the appointment of a Dominion board of censors to report on every play and act given at any theatre in the Dominion by any company, troupe, or association. This was recommended by Rev. Dr. T. Albert Moore, at the annual meeting of the board of temperance and moral reformers of the Methodist Church in Canada, which met at the Metropolitan Church yesterday. Delegates were present from all over Canada and Newfoundland. Rev. Dr. Carman and Rev. Dr. Chown presided alternately.

The board decided to establish a monthly magazine to fight the white slave traffic. It will be edited by Rev. Dr. Moore. The periodical will also emphasize the duties of citizenship.

In view of the great and growing needs of the work throughout the whole field, it was recommended that three field secretaries be appointed under the general secretary. One will reside in the west, one in the east and one in Ontario. Dr. Moore reported that in co-operation with other denominations, a social survey had been made in Montreal by a lady expert from the United States. Much valuable information was secured regarding the moral conditions, labor problems, public amusements and this evidence it is proposed to base further action.

A moral survey will be made in other Canadian centres also in smaller towns and as far as possible in the rural districts.

A lively discussion took place over tobacco growing in southwestern Ontario. A motion was finally adopted endorsing the action of the London conference, which urged all Methodists in the district to strive to repress the growing of tobacco and to discourage its use in every possible way.

Glad Hand for Wilson.

Fall River, Mass., Sept. 27.—Governor Woodrow Wilson found the people of Massachusetts, who greeted him yesterday, as enthusiastic and demonstrative as any he has met since he began campaigning for the Presidency.

Great crowds turned out at Springfield, Barre, and Fall River, where the governor made scheduled speeches, but along the way his reception was practically continuous.

The nominee covered a variety of topics in his speeches, including tariff, the questions affecting monopoly and Governmental assistance to farmers. He said last night he felt deeply pleased at the friendship he had struck up with the people.

Consul Arrested for Theft.

Duluth, Sept. 27.—Charged by the police with taking $4,000 from four estates left in his care, V. D. Nikolitch, general consul for Montenegro in the United States and Canada, was arrested here yesterday. The consul, upon being taken to jail, declared that international law prohibits his arrest by civil authorities.

In default of $1,500 bail he went to jail. Bonding companies caused his arrest. The prisoner says he has already written to Montenegro for $6,000 and that he will soon pay all obligations.

Went From Law to Priesthood.

Guelph, Sept. 27.—Rev. Father Geo. B. Kenny died here early yesterday, after a lengthy illness from anaemia, aged 72. Father Kenny was a son of the late Hon. Sir Edward Kenny, once administrator of the Government of Nova Scotia and entered the priesthood after having practiced as a barrister.

Drowned as Brother Was.

London, Ont., Sept. 27.—Kingsley Warner, aged 9, of Dresden, while playing on the docks alone, fell into the river and was drowned. His brother lost his life in the same manner and in almost the same place six years ago.

Progressives Name Knox Smith.

Hartford, Conn., Sept. 27.—Herbert Knox Smith of Farmington was nominated for governor by the Progressive state convention here yesterday. The nomination was by acclamation.

Mr. Smith resigned a few weeks ago his position as commissioner of corporations at Washington to aid the Roosevelt campaign.

A WOMAN'S WISDOM.

The worried mother wakes up to hear her baby's heavy breathing—a little cough—perhaps the croup or whooping cough. She does not want to send for the doctor when perhaps the trouble does not amount to much. Finally she thinks of that medical book her father gave her, The Common Sense Medical Adviser, by R. V. Pierce, M. D. She says "just the thing to find out what is the matter with the little dear." Two million households in this country own one—and it's to be had for only 31c. in stamps—1,000 pages in splendid cloth binding. A good family adviser in any emergency. It is for either sex. This is what many women write Dr. Pierce—in respect to his "Favorite Prescription," a remedy which has made thousands of melancholy and miserable women cheerful and happy, by curing the painful womanly diseases which undermine a woman's health and strength.

MRS. ZUEBERT AND BABE.

"My desire is to write a few lines to let you know what your valuable medicine has done for me," writes MRS. MARGARET ZUEBERT, of 323 S. Bentalon Street, Baltimore, Md. "Before the storck came to our house I was a very sick woman. I wrote you for advice which was kindly given and which made me a different woman in a short time. After taking the first bottle of 'Favorite Prescription' I began improving so that I hardly knew I was in such a condition. I did my own housework—washing and ironing, cooking, sewing, and the worst of all nursed three children who had whooping cough. I hardly knew of the advent ten minutes before—so easy was it. The baby is as fat as a butter-ball. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best medicine for any woman to take when in this condition. I recommend it to all my friends."

BURGLARS CAUGHT.

Toronto, Sept. 26.—Mainly through the clever work done by Detective Wallace, the three men responsible for the burglarizing of Follett & Cox's jewelry store at 776 Yonge street, last Tuesday night, were arrested yesterday afternoon. Two of them, "Bubbles" Lillie and William Snow, were apprehended at 60 West Queen street, and the other man, Oliver Brown, was caught by Detectives Montgomery and Taylor in the Kirby House. The arrests took place about three o'clock in the afternoon.

Wallace and five other detectives were put on the case. It was up to the department to get these thieves, and they made good. Wallace, through a friend, heard that certain individuals were suspected. A number of names of men known by the police as denizens of the underworld in Toronto were gone through. The list was gradually brought down to about a dozen, and then, through a series of eliminations, six men were sized up as the probable perpetrators of the theft. Wallace knew that Snow used to live on North street in a house almost directly opposite the rear of the place used by Follett & Cox. As Snow had figured in other deals of a like kind in the city, suspicion naturally attached itself to him and friend. The supposition was correct, and when Wallace and three other detectives went to the house on West Queen street yesterday afternoon they found Snow and two other men there as well as Snow's wife and a man named Reginald Lovett, who were both locked up on a charge of vagrancy.

All the jewelry stolen from the store was recovered. It aggregated $2,000. The jewelry was found in the hollow leg of one of the tables, wrapped up in a lace curtain. There were 54 lockets, 54 bracelets, 12 watches, 61 rings, 45 watch chains, 63 other chains, 10 brooches, 19 stick pins, 20 ladies' guards, 21 necklets and much other jewelry.

WILLIAM BELL DEAD.

Founder of Piano Company Killed by Train at Guelph.

Guelph, Sept. 27.—Grand Trunk section men yesterday morning found the body of William Bell, badly mutilated, on the tracks about two miles east of the city. Identification was made by papers found in his pocket.

Mr. Bell was the founder of the Bell Piano & Organ Co. of Guelph, and was eighty years of age. He had left home yesterday afternoon about 2.30. His family were under the impression when he did not return that he had gone on to Toronto. Just how he met his death will probably never be known. Coroner Owen decided an inquest unnecessary.

Mr. Bell was prominently identified with the activities of Guelph and several other places. He established the Bell Piano Works in 1865. He had been president of the Guelph Junction Railway, and was vice-president of the Manufacturers' Life Insurance Co. when Sir John A. Macdonald was its president. He had also been president of the Traders Bank of Canada. He leaves a widow, one son, W. J. Bell, Guelph, and a daughter, Mrs. (Dr.) W. B. Kennedy of Guelph.

Damage by Typhoon.

Tokio, Japan, Sept. 27.—Damage exceeding $20,000,000 was caused by the typhoon which swept Japan from end to end on Sunday, while the loss of human life was very heavy, and tens of thousands are homeless.

The storm was the worst that has occurred here for over a half a century, according to reports which have just reached the capital, which has been practically cut off from the rest of the country for days.

At Nagoya every house was damaged and a great tidal wave demolished the harbor and sank three steamers, while several others went ashore.

At Gifu 262 people were killed and 283 injured.

The Kioko Maru foundered off Enshu and the whole of her crew and passengers were lost.

Praying For Peace.

Ballyroney, Ireland, Sept. 27.—Ulstermen are praying and hoping for peace, but if that is denied to them, they are ready for war, according to the Earl of Kilmorey, while addressing a big outdoor demonstration of Irish Unionists here yesterday.

Some 20,000 people from the County of Down were present at the meeting, which was the final Unionist demonstration before Ulster day (Sept. 28).

The Earl of Kilmorey was chairman and in his speech declared his intention of refusing to submit to home rule if the act passed. A large number of Irish peers, he said, including Field Marshal Lord Roberts, and the Marquis of Dufferin, had signed a pledge not to accept a seat in either house of an Irish Legislature.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 26.—There was little new on the grain market today. Options opened fractionally under the previous close, and the trading was very moderate. Why, it's Mrs. Edwards round again—she's always ready to lend a hand with the cooking. That nourishing home-made Irish soup of hers is a real dish-of-all-work—useful in a hundred ways.

It's fine and tasty by itself. It's the secret of a savoury sauce. It's the making of a made dish. And, to bring out the goodness of your own soup and gravies and hashes and meat puddings there's nothing like adding

EDWARDS' DESICCATED SOUPS

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE BELLEVILLE CITY COUNCIL

A special meeting of the City Council was held last night, called for the purpose of passing some 30 debenture bylaws relating to granolithic sidewalk construction, and other business. As it was necesary to secure 17 members it was nearly 9 o'clock before that number of the city fathers could be secured to pass the bylaws. A resolution was adopted authorising the City Solicitor to prepare a bylaw for the putting down of a permanent pavement on Front Street, and also to take the necessary steps to open up Lingham Street. The Gas Committee was also authorized to prepare an estimate of the cost of lighting Front Street by gas the same as Bridge Street is being lighted.

The members present were: Mayor Vermilyea, Aldermen Ackerill, Alford, Black, Boyle, Clarke, Canning, Flagler, Lucas, Marshall, McCurdy, Panter, Parks, Robinson, Wallace, White, and Woodley.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on bylaws and passed the various bylaws referring to sidewalk debentures. The Committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

Moved by Ald. Clarke, seconded by Ald. Canning, that the Solicitor be authorized to apply to the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board for certificates of the said Board approving of Bylaw No. 1751 of the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Belleville, being a bylaw to authorize the issue of $13,000 debentures for the extension of the water works system of the city and the debentures issued thereunder, under the Ontario Municipal Securities Act, 1908.—Carried.

Moved by Ald. Woodley, seconded by Ald. White, that the Solicitor be authorized to take the necessary proceedings to open Lingham Street.—Carried.

Moved by Ald. Panter, seconded by Ald. Woodley, that the Clerk be instructed to prepare a bylaw to provide for the building of a pavement on Front Street, terms of payment to be 33 1-3 per cent. by the municipality, 33 1-3 per cent. by property owners on each side of the street.—Carried.

Council adjourned.

AID TO PERFECT HEALTH

That this body may be in a perfectly healthy, normal condition, it is necessary that the various organs perform their natural functions in the regular manner.

This is particularly true of the Liver, the principal work of which is the separation of various poisonous materials from the blood. Unless these are withdrawn and disposed of, they are re-absorbed into the system, resulting in a gradual poisoning of the whole system.

Rexall Liver Salts has proven remarkably efficacious in aiding the Liver to properly perform its functions, and for this reason we most highly recommend the use of this preparation to you.

We have it in two sizes, 25c. and 50c. McKeown's Drug Store. The Rexall Store.

And occasionally a woman thinks she is marrying a mighty oak when only to discover later that she is tied to a stick.

A Wonderful Discovery

An eminent scientist the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poison! Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk. They care nothing for the science of the thing. All they know is that Zam-Buk stops their pain. Mothers should never forget this.

Again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh, healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. The tissue thus formed is worked up to the surface and literally casts off the diseased tissue above it. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day, Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimier Ave., Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. To-day—over three years after his cure of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured, and has no trace of any return of the eczema.

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c box, or we will send free trial box if you send this advertisement and a 1c. stamp (to pay return postage). Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Coe Hill Holds Her Annual Fair

There was a large attendance at the Coe Hill Fair, held on the 18th and 19th inst. The weather which had seemed so unpromising in the morning, became quite favorable in the afternoon. There was a fine display of roots. The goodly variety of potatoes abounded in fine specimens. Mangles, beets, turnips and cabbage were excellent. There was a turnip about a foot across. One man thought that no place in the world could produce better potatoes than some displayed. The display, though not large, was a credit to the county. Onions were good.

There were fine samples of apples. There was a pleasing variety of beautiful fancy work. The cattle looked very well, but there is need for more attention to be given to securing good milk producers. Holsteins predominated. The sheep and swine were not numerous. There were some fine colts. The two-year old belonging to Mr. Hoard of the Ridge was certainly a fine one. Others were a credit to their owners, whose names your correspondent does not know. In the saddle horse race Mr. Blackburn's horse seemed right in its element. The drivers contesting in the carriage race need more practice so as to trot more smoothly. Mr. Ludbrook did a good business. In the base ball game, Coe Hill vs Bancroft, the former team led off strongly, but Bancroft put up a good play later, and nearly balanced the score which was 9-11.

Buffalo Robes Scarce

Out in western Kansas one still frequently sees an old plainsman drive into town covered wih a buffalo overcoat or a buffalo lap robe in the winter time, says the Kansas City Journal. However, buffalo robes are becoming very scarce, and in a few years they will entirely disappear.

There was a time when Kansas furnished buffalo robes for the world. No well-regulated family on an eastern farm was without one. They were not only very warm, but reasonable in price.

It was the Kaw Indians who first marketed buffalo robes. Later, manufacturers, seeing the vast profit in them, made them up by the thousands and supplied the world. But the manufactured or patent tanned robes didn't last as long as the robes tanned by the Indians. In fact, it is said that the robes now in service were those tanned by these Indians many years before the white man began to tan them.

The Indian women did the tanning. They fastened the green hides to a set of frames just like grandmother used to fasten her quilts to, when she made them. The squaws would then take a blunt implement, resembling a hoe, and work off all the flesh and membrane from the hide.

They called it "fleshing." Then they would rub the skin for several days with a heavy, smooth surfaced club till all the grease had been driven out of the hide. They used no chemicals at all in tanning. Only hides from buffaloes killed late in the winter were used in making robes, as the fur was then heaviest.

Before the Kaws threw the robes on the market they used them in making moccasins and winter clothing, also for covering for the tepees. But when a market was established for them and the Indians could get real money or real food or real whiskey for them, buffalo tepees soon disappeared from the reservation.

THE BEST PROTECTION

It always pays to get the best. This is all important in fire insurance. You can get cheap insurance but it is not the best. It is usually not even good money and taking a chance that you will have to stand your own loss? Companies that sell cheap policies do pay losses when they are able, but how frequently they fail just when you want their protection? Demand a policy in the Manitoba Assurance Company and get the best. Agents, J. W. Davison, Jas. H. Hudgins, Diamond & Diamond.

Liberty Was Brief.

Guelph, Sept. 27.—Grant and McGillivray, the two young men who escaped from the provincial farm a few days ago, and were captured at Ayr, appeared before Magistrate Saunders yesterday afternoon. Both pleaded to escaping and also to stealing goods. They were sentenced to two years, less one day, each, for the first offence, and six months for the latter.

McGillivray was to have been before the parole board on Saturday and would likely have been released in a few days.

FELINE WHISKERS.

Delicate Sensitive Hairs That Record the Slightest Touch.

We are apt to think that the cat's ability to see in the dark is due entirely to its eyes, but competent authority assures us that the feline's power in this respect is due almost as much to its "whiskers."

These delicate hairs that project from the muzzle of the cat family are wonderful mechanisms. Each one grows from a follicle, or gland, nerved to the utmost sensibility. Its slightest contact with any obstacle is instantly felt by the animal, though the hair itself may be tough and insensible. The exaggerated whiskers on the muzzle often project to such a distance that from point to point they indicate the exact width of the body of the beast.

Consider the lion stealing through the jungle at night in search of prey, when the least stir of a twig gives alarm. The lion's whiskers indicate, through the nicest nerves, any object that may be in his path. A touch stops him short before pushing through some close thicket where the rustling leaves and boughs would betray his presence. Wherever his head may be thrust without a warning from the vibrissae there his body may pass noiselessly. It is the aid given him by his whiskers, in conjunction with the soft cushions of his feet, that enables him to proceed as silently as a snake.—Harper's Weekly.

Misunderstood.

"Before you were married he said he would go through fire and water for you, didn't he?"

"I thought he did, but I think now that I misunderstood him. I think he must have said fire water."—Houston Post.

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

All night we alternately dozed, or took our spell at the oars in succession, and once more morning dawned upon a lonely and glassy sea, where not a sail was in sight; and now the thirst we had already begun to endure on that night of excitement when the ship was destroyed, was becoming maddening.

Our lips were baked and cracked, our throats and tongues sore and dry our eyes bloodshot, and most of us were without other protection for our heads from the fierce rays of the sun than the sleeves of our shirts, torn off and twisted round them in turban fashion.

Though my constitution was a hardy one, and my bodily sufferings were becoming great, yet I gathered strange and gloomy satisfaction from the conviction that I endured them for Clarice, or in my pursuit of her; and yet, unless in heaven, Clarice might never know them. And times there were when I thought how strange would be the coincidence if we were both to perish there, and find our graves at the bottom of the same sea.

On this day the heat was excessive and our consequent thirst intolerable and we had the most tantalising memories of refreshing draughts of bitter beer and Dublin stout, of springs, and streams, and pools of sparkling water. Our hunger was altogether a secondary sensation or craving to this of thirst.

About midday the wind began to blow, and, to add to our misery, it rapidly increased to more than half a gale. The boat was filled twice with water as the sea broke over her, and we were so weak now, as to be only able to bale her partially. By the sea on these two occasions all our oars were carried away—torn, save one from our feeble hands; and so all we could do now was to let her float or drive before the waves and wind, the helpless sport of both.

Night came on us again without hope, and a Scottish seaman from Gourock began to manifest symptoms of madness for

He, poor fellow, had a wife and children—
Two things for dying people quite bewildering.

He began to tear his hair and rave of his "dear gudewife and bonnie bairns." Ere long he began to imagine they were beside him, that one pet child—"Elsie"—was seated on his knee. He played in fancy with her golden hair, and addressed the most endearing epithets to all.

Suddenly this vision of home and happiness, of his fireside, seemed to pass from him, and a gleam of sense, of some new phase of madness, came on him, and he found himself, as before, tossing on the dark and midnight sea, with his gaunt and haggard companions. A yell of despair escaped him, and springing overboard into the water, before a hand could be raised to save or onterrupt him, he vanished for ever.

We gazed blankly into each other's hollow and stony eyes, for it seemed as if he but anticipated the doom that awaited for us all.

So the night passed, and as we had no means of rowing, we continued, weakly and wearily, to bale the boat with a wooden vessel used for the purpose, and earnestly we prayed for rain—rain even in torrents; but we had only the salt, bitter spoon-drift of the sea, torn by the wind from the white crests of the waves, and swept over us ever and anon.

Walmer repeated very earnestly and piously certain verses from Isaiah, which seemed to apply to our situation, and as gray dawn stole over the sea, and though the wind and waves went down to-gether, our hands and feet were cold, benumbed and swollen, so that our condition gradually became terrible and piteous indeed.

'Sail O!" sudenly cried Joe Mullins, the boatswain, in a voice that is indescribable. "Oh, heaven be thanked—heaven be thanked! Sail O!" he cried again, and the strong man burst into tears.

'Where away, Joe, my lad?" asked Walmer.

"Just on the star-board bow, sir."

Eagerly—yea, with all the anxiety that men in the jaws of death can only feel—we turned in the direction indicated, while fearing in our hearts that it might be an optical delusion with Mullins, the result of suffering, despair, and a heated imagination, but there, bearing right towards us, out of a gray and hazy bank of morning mist, was a large craft, a full-rigged ship, with her courses, topsail, and topgallant sails set.

She was about four miles off, but she loomed large and close to the eye, for all her canvas shone in the red light of the rising sun as she came on like a tall spectre gliding noiselessly out of the vapour.

On, and on, and on she came, sailing at the rate of ten knots an hour at least, yet not too fast for us. Joy and hope lent us a power we did not think we possessed, for when she was sufficiently near we raised a united shout with all our voices and all our strength. The wind seemed to bear it away from her, and the watch on deck never heard it; but that we were seen we could not doubt, for now by the cheerful light of the beautiful morning, we saw, on the poop and main deck, men hurrying to and fro, telescopes levelled and hands pointed at us, preparations made for launching a boat, the davits swung clear of the quarter, and the fall-tackles cleared; and once more our hurrah, however faint—the hurrah that comes readiest and best to a Briton's tongue—rang over the water, as we saw the mainyard thrown aback and her topsails shivering, when we were not more than twenty yards from her, and tossing upand down like a cork on the heaving sea.

She was a merchant ship of beautiful build. Her figure-head was a Black Frair, or Franciscan, with bald plate, cowl, robe, and beads. She was straight as a lance in her planksheer, and her sharp bows, sheathed to the bends in new and glittering copper, towered up above us, lined by a row of dark and foreign-looking faces.

"Hola, barqueta! De donde viene vin?" (i. e. "Boat ahoy! Where do you come from?") hailed a man, in Spanish.

"Inglesos?"

"Si, senor," cried I.

"Lo entiendo un poco," I replied.

I could speak a little Spanish, but poco indeed.

'A little! Bueno—that is well. Lay your boats alongside if you can, and we shall soon have you on board.'

In our wretched and enfeebled condition, and with only one oar, we could not lay the boat alongside, so the Spaniards lowered one from the quarter with considerable celerity, and ere long we were all on board the ship, and stowed away in beds in the forecastle bunks—beds that, if not over clean, as the crew was Spaish, were comfortable and easy after the misery and horror we had endured so long. Hot coffee and brandy were supplied to us; but that we were rescued, so little did we care by whom, or for whither bound, that it was not until the noon of the next day that any of us made inquiries about these matters, and then, in reply to some questions of Walmer's, we learned from a Spanish mate that we had been picked up by the Santo Domingo, a six hundred ton ship of Cadiz, from Rio de la Plata, bound to Puerto Rica, Jose Casanova master.

The crew were all black haired, black whiskered, sallow, and picturesque-looking fellows—some of them being half-breeds from the Spanish Main.

Senor Jose Casanova was a good sea man, who had once held a commission in the royal navy of Spain, but had been dismissed by a court-martial at Cuba for shooting a superior officer in a duel about a girl in the island of Tortuga; and now, on learning from Joe Mulins, who was the first of us that was able to crawl on deck, that Walmer was the captain of the lost ship, and that I had borne a commission under Her Majesty the Queen and had been 'un officiale Britanica' he had us conveyed aft and placed in his own cabin, where we were treated with every attention and courtesy.

When he rescued us he had still six hundred miles to run before reaching his destination, Puetro Rico, and I consoled myself by remembering that this island did not lie far out of the original course I was pursuing to Jamaica, and meant still to pursue—but for what purpose naw?

For many hours after we were rescued, the rain, for which we had prayed so earnestly in the boat, fell in such a torrent that had we been still in the boat our fate would soon have been sealed. All duty was conducted silently and noiselessly, and with true Spanish taciturnity, while this discomfort continued, and there I lay below, lulled by the monotonous rush of the tropical rain, dreaming of the past—of the wild work I had seen among the Kaffirs—and times when I seemed to hear amid the wind as it hummed through the rigging, the bagpipes of the 74th Highlanders. Another sound, but a gentle and a soft one—the voice of one who was dear to me—came at times to my drowsy ear, stiring the chords of agony in my heart; and so I lay for two days and nights, helpless, in my little cabin, till, when the rain abated and the weather was beautiful, I made an effort and came on deck, where I found the survivors of our crew had preceded me, and the poor fellows gathered round me with warm congratulations.

On the noon of the sixth day, Captain Casanova announced that land was in sight, and through the telescope we could see the ranges of beautiful mountains which intersect the whole island of Puerto Rico. The navigation there is perilous work among the groups of islets, rocks, and sandy keys, which lie along the eastern coast of the island; and all that night and all next day we were working slowly through them, till the following evening saw us running freely along its northern shore, and the crew of the Santo Domingo toiling cheerfully in preparing for harbour. While labouring thus they all sang Spanish songs, at times with considerable taste, and no small degree of melody and tenderness.

The scarlet and yellow ensign of Castile and Leon was floating out from our gaff peak.

The sun was just setting on our starboard quarter, and a blaze of golden light bathed all the land and sea, when the studding sails were taken in as if by magic; and when we were abreast the lighthous on the Moro, the courses were hauled up, the mainyard backed, and the light breeze swept softly through the open rigging from stem to stern.

The anchor was let go with a plunge, the sails were swiftly and neatly handed. Slowly the great ship swung round with her sharp brow to the wind, and I found myself in the harbour of Puetro Rica—a place of which I had read in boyhood as the scene of some of the exploits of the gallant English admiral Sir Francis Drake; but where, certainly, I never expected to find myself under anl circumstances whatever, most assuredly least of all as a penniless, almost aimless wanderer and castaway.

HAPPY THOUGHT

There is One Most Important Thing About a Stove

And that is this,—What heat value will it develop from the fuel you put into it?

Mind you, heat in the firebox does not count for anything. The heat must be in the oven or at the holes—where you need it for cooking.

So, when we say that from every ounce of fuel you put into a HAPPY THOUGHT you get the full return in heat value, we mean that you get something more than you get from other stoves.

A small fire in a HAPPY THOUGHT is equivalent to a big fire in a less efficient stove. It does more work. It saves you the difference in fuel.

That is the kind of saving that it pays you to invest in. A good stove is not a cheap article. It should be carefully selected. It should be chosen chiefly on this one point of greatest importance.

That is why a Quarter Million Canadian women use the HAPPY THOUGHT every day.

Believe Turkey Will Declare War Against Russia

After Concluding Peace Terms with Italy Port Would Welcome War in the Balkans.

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The Bulgarian Minister of Constantinople has asked for an explanation on the concentration of Turkish troops in Adrianople, according to a Constantinople despatch by the Daily Telegraph. He was informed that they were there merely for manoeuvres.

Th. belief at Constantinople, however, is that preparations are being made for war, and that the 200,000 men under arms in the Adrianople district will be under the personal direction of the War Minister, Nazim Pacha, who recently declared that the reorganization of the army was so complete that he could assume the responsibility of defeating Bulgaria.

Rechad Pacha, Minister of Mines, who left Constantinople for Switzerland yesterday, it is stated, has taken with him proposals which are extremely likely to lead to peace with Italy, says the same despatch, and then it is not improbable that the Porte will welcome a war with Bulgaria and an opportunity to regain its lost prestige.

Halifax Has a $30,000 Conflagration

HALIFAX, N. S., Sept. 27.—A spectacular fire took place at two o'clock this morning, when Geo. C. Cook's warehouse on Water street was completely destroyed, together with all of its contents, causing a loss estimated at $30,000.

The fire spread with great rapidity, and it was fortunate there was no wind, the flames going straight up in the air and the embers falling in the harbor or back in the ruins. The fire was confined to the Cook building, and the firemen were greatly assisted by the Canadian soldiers and German sailors.

When the flames were observed from the Citadel, a detachment of a couple of hundred soldiers were despatched to the scene. The Victoria Louise, the German training ship in the harbor, sent two boat loads of sailors, dressed in white, fully equipped for assisting in the fight, and lent the most valuable aid. They came within ten minutes of the outbreak of the fire.

The occupants of the building were: George C. Cook, broker; Corkum and Ritcey, provisions; Canadian Oil Company's offices; the Anti-Dust Manufacturing Company's offices and warerooms.

The structure adjoining was occupied by the Canadian Cereal and Milling Company. The Canadian Mining Company, Toronto, was damaged, and Pickford and Black's offices, adjacent, were in considerable danger.

Bankrupt Suicided

JANESVILLE, Sept 27.—The death of Edward Leonard Dwyer, who rose from head of a street gang in Chicago to be multi-millionaire, and who blew out his brain yesterday in the street just after he had given small change, the last cent he had, to a tramp, brought to a close a meteoric career.

Dwyer was once a member of the Chicago Board of Trade. He amassed wealth but lost it in an attempt to corner wheat. He retrieved his fortune by the development of mines in Mexico and was rated a millionaire when he went to New York and on Wall Street again was reduced to penury.

In 1895 he married the Duchess Castulac, widow of an Italian Duke, who left her $7,000,000. His wife soon died, leaving her the remnants of her fortune and several islands off the coast of Maine. He sold them and lost the proceeds in speculation, being adjudged a bankrupt in New York in 1899. From then Dwyer's luck failed. He enlisted in the navy in an attempt to reach China to share in the development of that country but returned to America broken in health and spirits. He spent his last few dollars entertaining a few friends in Chicago before starting for Janesville.

"Here's to fame and a busted name. "Tonight we dine, and tomorrow I die."

This is said to have been his toast, drunk in his glass of wine before he walked out of his hotel with just enough money to get him to Janesville and leave a few dimes over.

Fewer Coming To Canada

LONDON, Sept. 27.—During August 38,727 residents of the United Kingdom emigrated 28,770 to the British dominions, including 17,687 to Canada, 6,500 to Australia and 2,324 to New Zealand.

For eight months of the year Canada received 114,000 or 2,000 less than in 1911; Australia 42,000 or 14,000 more, and New Zealand 6,000, or 6,000 more.

Rockefeller's First Job Recalled On Birthday

CLEVELAND, Sept. 17.—John D. Rockefeller, dealer in oil and gasoline, to-day celebrated the fifty-seventh anniversary of his first job.

Flags waved at Forest Hill in commemoration of the event, and John D. took a walk over the golf links, recalling the thirteen-year-old youngster who entered the offices of Hewett & Tuttle, forwarding commission men back in 1855.

John D., the richest man in the world, recalled the $50 the thirteen-year-old clerk received for the first three months of his service. He recalled how out of that $50 he paid his board and washerwoman.

And John D., recollected that during the three months he gave one cent regularly each week to his Sunday school.

Windsor Woman Drank Laudanum

WINDSOR, Sept. 27.—Mrs. June Smith, a prepossessing woman of 29, made a nearly successful attempt at suicide tonight when she swallowed a big dose of laudanum at Stephen's Hotel, Sandwich Street east. Mrs. Smith, who is separated from her husband, Wm. Smith, has been employed at the International Hotel here for some time as a waitress.

This evening, after supper, she went to Stephen's Hotel, where Russell Churchill, son of J. B. Churchill, acts as bartender. The two quarrelled and then as she turned to leave, the woman swallowed the dose. She was hurried to the Hotel Dieu, where prompt use of drastic remedies was the means of saving her life.

Montreal Professor Dies at Guelph, Ont.

GUELPH, Sept. 27.—The Rev. Father George B. Kenney died here early to-day, after an illness from anaemia, aged 72. Father Kenny was a son of the late Hon. Sir Edward Kenny, once administrator of the Government of Nova Scotia. He waes born in Halifax, became a barrister in 1862, and practised in Halifax. He abandoned the law and was ordained to the priesthood in 1874. He was professor at St. Mary's Jesuit College, Montreal, from 1887 to 1891; superior at the College of the Immaculate Conception, Guelph, for some years, and later returned to Montreal. He came here to spend his last days, being for some time in very feeble health.

Bieberstein's Successor

BERLIN, Sept. 26.—Count von Bernstorff, now Ambassador to the United States, is regarded as both the leading and the "logical" candidate to succeed the late Baron Marschall von Bieberstein in London.

Count von Bernstorff left here for Paris to-night with the intention of sailing for the United States on Oct. 13.

One Robber Was Caught

CHICAGO, Sept. 27.—One of the two Canadian bank robbers who escaped from the Sidlias saloon after beating Lieut. Burns into insensibility, was arested last night in St. Louis by Chicago detectives, according to a report received by Assistant Chief of Police Scheuttler early today.

The detectives trailed a woman, said to be the sweetheart of one of the men, who went to St. Louis, disguised as a cripple. The arrest was made when the two met on a street corner. The man arrested is described as the "short robber." The woman was located on the south side of Chicago, according to Sheuttler, and was permitted to learn that detectives were searching for her.' She boarded a train and went to a town outside of Chicago where she purchased a ticket for St. Louis. She walked with the aid of crutches, according to the four detectives who rode in the same car with her to the Missouri metropolis. Arriving there she met her suspect-sweetheart within a few minutes on the street.

In their anxiety to prevent the man from escaping again, the detectives are said to have closed in about him, paying no attention to the woman, who threw away her crutches and ran through an alley, making her escape. Her baggage is said to have been searched and many newspaper clippings relating to the escape of the robbers together with a revolver were found among her possessions.

French Baroness Badly Injured

Noted Aviatress a Victim of Serious Auto Collision.

FRANCE, Sept. 27.—Baroness De La Roche, a noted aviatress, was seriously injured in an automobile collision at Belleville Sur-Saone last night. Charles Vcisin, an aviator, was killed at the same time. Baroness De La Roche was the first woman to make an aeroplane flight in Paris. She won her air pilot license in February, 1910. At an aviation meet at Rheims the following year the baroness, driving a Voisin biplane, lost her nerve at a height of 50 feet, shut off the power and fell with her machine to the groud. Both legs and arms wer broken, but she recovered sufficiently in a few months to continue her hazardous pastime.

Divorce Imperial From Local Issue

HALIFAX, Sept. 27.—Lord Milner addressed the Canadian Club to-night, and the audience that heard him was the largest in the history of the organization. No set subject was announced in advance as his topic, but what Lord Milner really contended for was absolute divorcement of Imperial from local issues.

Any contribution Canda might make to the navy should be made, he said, not as to England, but to the Empire. Lord Milner pleaded for the consideration of Imperial matters altogether apart from local matters. This could be done by the education of public opinion, and would become a fact when public sentiment showed the politicians that mere factious opposition to Imperial measures would not be tolerated. Lord Milner hoped that such a non-partisan sentiment would be brought about in Canada. In England, matters of foreign policy had been, during the past ten years, withdrawn from partisan strife, and he hoped for the time when throughout the Empire the same thing would happen to Imperial questions.

Lord Milner leaves for St. John on Saturday.

Parallel to the Crippen Chase

BEUTHEN, Germany, Sept. 27.—An ocean race to New York after a criminal which paralleled that of Crippen was recalled to-day by the opening of the trial of the boy bank robber and murderer, Peter Badura.

The prisoner was caught in March last year on board the liner 'Zeiten' in New York harbor by a Prussian detective, who had been on his trail for months and who had followed him on board a swifter vessel, the 'St. Louis'.

The prisoner, when he held up the bank of the frontier town of Myslowitz, and, with the aid of a youthful accomplice, killed its cashier, and escaped with a considerable amount of money in 1910, was not eighteen years old. He had, however, already committed a series of crimes in Russia, for which he was sought by the Russian police, whom he succeeded in evading by continuously crossing and recrossing the frontier.

When at last the German police obtained a clue to his whereabouts he escaped to Bremen and boarded a vessel for New York, but wireless telegraphy was utilized and the captain put him in irons until the Atlantic had been crossed, when he was handed over later to the authorities for extradition. He was later sent back to Germany in charge of the detectives who had made the voyage on his trail.

Navy Next Week Before the Cabinet

OTTAWA, Sept. 27.—A series of very important Cabinet Councils, will be held next week, beginnig Monday morning. It is expected that the question of naval aid will be under consideration. Fatal Rear-End Collision

KENORA, Sept. 27.—A rear-end collision causing the death of fireman C. A. Clark, and possibly fatally injuring Conductor J. H. Neael, and Passenger Engineer G. H. Olst, ocurred early this morning west of Busteed between Extra No. 4; composed of dead-head coaches running east, and a heavy freight train also going east.

Injured in Wreck, Are Doing Nicely

Not Expected That Any Fatalities Will Follow Accident on G.T.R. Near Chatham, Ont.

CHATHAM, Sept. 27.—All of the injured of the Grand Trunk wreck are reported to-day as improving, and it is expected there will be no fatalities. Miss Lafferty of Chatham, who was most seriously injured is progressing favorably in the Public General Hospital, and it is now thought she will recover.

Mrs. Cox and Miss Costello of Toronto were not seriously injured, and were able to leave for home. Only three of the victims are now confined in the hospital. Mrs. J. E. Richards of this city is in a serious condition. Her injuries were worse than at first reported. She is confined to her bed at her home on Raleigh Street.

As far as can be made out this morning, the accident was caused by a defective rail, the spreading of which caused the train to leave the track.

Calls Colonel Modern Cæsar

Some time ago Senator Bristow of Kansas and Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi were the principals in a sensational debate in the Senate over Colonel Roosevelt's official correspondence about the International-Harvester Company when he was President in 1907.

Senator Bristow spoke in support of Colonel Roosevlt, and Senator Williams was the former President's assailant.

Mr. Williams characterized the former President as a "modern Caesar willing to seize power by any means," while Mr. Bristow defended the Colonel as the "modern tribune of the people," and criticised President Taft's administration.

Senator Williams read this parody on the Apostle's creed:

> I believe in Theodore Roosevelt, maker of noise and strife, and in ambition, his only creed (My Lord). He was born of the love of power and suffered under William H. Taft; was cruciefid, dead and buried. He descended into Africa. The third year he rose again from the "jungle" and ascended into favor and sitteth on the right hand of his party whence he shall come to scourge the licked and the dead.
>
> I believe in the holy Outlook, the big stick, the Annanias Club, the forgiveness of political activities, the resurrection of presidential ambitions and the third term everlasting. Amen, Amen, Amen.

Miss Wylie Here To Give Battle

MONTREAL, Sept. 27.—The Montreal Star to-day published the following despatch from Quebec on the arrival of Miss Wylie:

"We have been promised by the many Canadian women that they are ready to join us in our fight for women suffrage.

"There are many English women residents in Canada also willing to help us. We are of the opinion that the people of Canada are too sensible to make it necessary for us to adopt the militant methods, which are practically forced upon us by the treachery and extreme stupidity of the Asquith Government. We are resolved to gain our point, and we will continue to fight until it is won in Canada as in the United Kingdom, even though we have to make ourselves a nuisance and have to resort to force."

Norwegian Girls Ordered Deported

ST. ANDREW'S N. B., Sept. 27.—Percy W. Thomson, Norwegian Consul at St. John, arrived here last night to hold an investigation in connection with the importation of Norwegian girls by the Canadian Sardine Company to work in the sardine factory at Chamcook. Five of the girls were ordered deported and are at Quebec awaiting inquiry into charges affecting their moral character. About one hundred girls were brought from Norway to work in the factory. Another matter to be inquired into by Mr. Thomson is the charge by thirty Norwegian men, who were brought here to work in the sardine factory, but were put to work on construction of buildings instead. They claim a breach of contract. The factory buildings are expected to be ready for operations in a fortnight.

WOMAN'S WORLD AND IT'S DOINGS

Give not that which is useful to the pigs, neither cast away stale bread which may possess the promise and potency of a pudding.

Flattery is foolishness, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise; nevertheless the discreet woman may use a little bit of it for her husband's sake.

Onions uncooked are much less strong in flavor if sliced, then put in a colander and boiling water poured over them. Then plunge them in ice water and allow them to stand for half an hour; they will be sweet and crisp.

After cooking fish or onions in a pan, boil out the pan with soda water, wash it clean, then put it on the fire and shake a little oatmeal in it. Leave this to boil, then wipe the pan out with a dish cloth, and all the unpleasant taste or smell will have vanished.

Among the unpopular women is the inquisitive woman who has no real interest in our lives, but is imbued with an overwhelming curiosity. You never purchase anything but she asks you point blank: "Where did you get it? How much did you pay for it?" She does not hesitate to question you about your family relations. She asks point blank questions about personal affairs. Nor can you evade an answer for, if you try to change the subject, she will revert to her question time and time again until you finally must answer or offend her by saying that you do not care to tell her.

The new evening wraps show no armhole, nothing of a sleeve except the cuff, are untrimmed save for a hood or a border of fur, and are lined with the most vivid satins. Martial and Armand have created what they call the "Murillo wrap." It is just a wonderful drapery of two straight pieces of geranium velvet and is pronounced quite the most artistic creation of the autumn.

Most women know glass should be wiped dry while still warm.

As this means it is also wet—not being allowed to drain—plenty of towels are necessary if there are many pieces to be cleaned.

Cloths for wiping glass should be without lint.

A soft linen towel is excellent, afterward polishing with an old silk handkerchief.

Tissue paper also makes a good polisher.

A soft brush should be finally used which will penetrate the cuttings.

Bottles, decanters, etc., may be cleaned by dropping crushed eggshells into them with soapy water. This is a safe method.

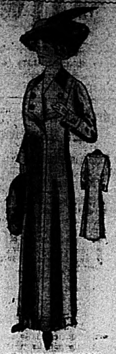
Potato peel, also bits of paper, may be used in the same way.

For coarser glassware or for very bad stains, a handful of tacks or shot will be effective.

When decanters or glass bottles have a musty odor, they may be sweetened by mixing a little powdered charcoal with warm water, using it for thoroughly rinsing.

A box of jeweler's sawdust is an excellent thing to have in the pantry. After the glass is washed it should be packed in the sawdust for final drying.

LIFE-PRESERVING CLOTHES—Here is Leon Rouge, a French inventor, floating like a cork in a buoyant suit of clothes he has made from tissue cloth. He says the outfit is useful for all steamship passengers and motor boat enthusiasts, and for aviators flying over water. Besides being nonsinkable, the suit is water proof.



STYLISH LONG COAT

This cut shows the wide reveres and velvet collar, features in the newest models. Large buttons, too, such as shown on reveres and cuffs are very fashionable.

Secretary of State Langtry of Massachusetts has decided that there is nothing in the constitution of that State that prevents a woman from holding office, although she may not vote. In consequence Prof. Ellen N. Hayes of Wellesley wil' have her name on the primary ballots as a candidate for secretary of state.

A Chicago police matron who has had ample opportunity to judge, and who has seen much domestic unhappiness, states that big men make the best husbands, and that men with sharp, thin noses, particularly little men make the worst. We have no desire to be mobbed, so once more we state that a Chicago woman made the statement.

Mrs. Matthews S. Robertson, president of the Organisation Committee of Los Angeles Woman's Athletic Club and its other members recently accepted the plans for the million-dollar club house which it proposes to build on Hill Street, opposite Central Park. It will be the most expensive home for a woman's club in the world when finished. The contract was signed and according to Mrs. Robertson, immediate invitations for membership will be issued and stock placed for sale. The most prominent society women in Los Angeles are back of the movement. The plan approved is for a twelve-storey building. The large swimming pool will be in the basement. Storerooms for shops will take up the first floor. The rear of the first and second storeys will be occupied by a concert hall to seat about 900 people. The front of the second floor will be a perfectly fitted up gym. with baths and offices for the club members. The fifth floor is to have hand-ball and tennis couarts, and there will also be reception rooms and parlors.

Cluster pleats, side pleats, box pleats, and kick pleats are all noticed in the display of skirts for fall wear. In all these pleated skirts the straight effect is carried out. Women will no longer tolerate the extremely narrow skirt of a year ago, which did not permit of any freedom of motion. The modified narrow skirt, measuring from two to two and one-quarter yards, has been found so graceful, becoming and practical that there is every likelihood that it will remain in style for some time to come.

To take the place of the straight back, a flap down the centre back or a panel is seen on many of the new skirts. The majority of skirts continue to be mounted on an inside belt, varying from one to two and one-half inches. Some are made with belts, but they are sewed on the outside of the skirt and can be removed when desired.

Bye-Election in Richelieu.

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—The federal bye-election in the County of Richelieu, it is expected, will be held shortly. A. D. Morgan, Montreal, who was the Conservative candidate last election will again run. J. P. Cardin was elected a year ago, but was unseated. His majority was large, and as the seat is traditionally Liberal, it is considered doubtful whether the Conservatives will win.

LETTERS OF A SLIM-MADE WOMAN TO HER FAT SISTER

Third Letter: On the Mistaken Theory of Starvation to Reduce Weight

Dear Sis:—I've just finished dinner, and if I had time would tell you all the good things I ate—you'd be horrified.

Remember that dear, mistaken old doctor back home who tried to take the fat off me by starving me? What a patient, trusting creature I was to put up with it! I was half famished and weak, and actually sick from lack of food—and he would graciously allow me about one cracker a day—I felt like a parrot.

You know I always said that system was barbarous—that there must be a simple, easy method to take off superfluous flesh. Well, I found it, found the simple, harmless Marmola Prescription. It took time, of course. But I've ben carrying that load of fat for years, and I was mighty well satisfied to get rid of it in a few months.

The way I did it was this: At the drug store I got 1-2 ounce powdered Marmola, 3-4 ounce Cascara Aromatic and 4 3-4 ounces Peppermint Water. I mixed these at home, and began taking a teaspoonful after meals and at bed time. There wasn't any change at first, but I kept right on, and pretty soon I noticed a gradual reduction in weight—slow at first, but greater as weeks went by—until now I'm as trim as a princess, flesh firm, skin smooth, complexion clear, and feeling fine. If I'd kept on starving I'd have died—fat.

Lovingly, BETTY.

It will require some time yet to adjust the country's available banking surplus to its monetary requirements. Unfortunately conditions abroad are more apt to aggravate the situation than otherwise. It is anticipated that the Bank of England will advance its discount rate to 5% early in October. Further gold imports by the United States would hasten such action. To close students of the financial situation, the flurry in call money was not unexpected. Surprise is even expressed that temporary rates are not higher than is the case. The board demand for money in commercial circles is most unusual. The outlook is for high rates for money for several weeks more.

THE STOCK MARKET.

The advance in prices inaugurated some ten days ago in the face of a disturbed financial situation, was a genuine outburst of bullish enthusiasm. It has been many months since there has been such a wide public interest in the stock market. In fact, the advance was almost solely the result of public buying. It now remains to be seen whether the banking interests will co-operate with the public and carry the advance further, or at least assist to sustain the present level of prices. A sharp advance in rates for call money would seem to indicate that the banking interests do not favor any material rise at this time. However, owners of stocks show little disposition to part with their holdings and a continued public interest will no doubt carry prices much higher. Under these circumstances the temper of the general public seems to be the controlling factor in the present movement.

PUBLIC UTILITY STOCKS.

The shares of Light and Traction companies are growing in public favor, because as a rule they yield a higher rate of income than the Railroad shares. A tendency to group a number of companies under the control of a holding company is a popular field of enterprise. Economies in management from such amalgamations have been highly successful, particularly in the Southern and Central States. The shares of some of these companies during the past six months have advanced enormously, notably American Light & Traction and Columbia Gas & Electric. This week an initial dividend of 1½% to be paid quarterly is announced for the Preferred stock of the American Public Utilities Company. In Ohio a re-organisation of the Toledo Railways & Light Company is well under way. The high income to be derived from Public Utility stocks is attracting many investors.

H. E. FAIRFIELD

At Griffins Opera House on Friday, October 4th., John C. Fisher will present for the first time in this city his Globe Theatre (New York) success, "The Red Rose." The production is said to contain a notable cast, an unusually large presenting company and a scenic mounting of real merit characteristic of Mr. Fisher's usual extravagance as evidenced by "Florodora," "San Toy," "The Silver Slipper," etc.

"The Red Rose" is the collaborated work of Harry B. and Robert B. Smith, and is said to be a correct portrayal of the gay student life in Paris, but unlike many of its predecessors possessing a Parisian atmosphere, is a play whose morals is clean and wholesome. The first act takes place in an artist's studio, where the young men and women have assembled from all over the world to study painting from the master Julian. The second act is a baronial estate in the suburbs of Paris; and the third depicts the famous ball of the Four Arts. The motive of the play is a love story between Lola, a seemingly parentless artist's model, and young Dick Lorimer, son of an American millionaire. The discovery of the fact that the girl is properly equipped with a rich and titled father brings about, not unnaturally, the usual "bless you, my children" ending, and the final scene permits of a riot of fun and music.

The musical score contains twenty-four numbers, with a variety of popular song hits and others of great musical worth. One of the special features of the performance is the "Students' Glide," which caused, to say the least, a mild sensation when the piece was presented first in New York. Zoe Barnett, who has made rapid strides upward in her chosen profession, heads the long cast, which includes Nelson Riley, Bly Brown, Maurice Darcy, Russell Lennon, Wayne Nunn, Charlotte, David Reese and others. The entire organization numbers sixty-five persons.

Is it up to Ourselves

There are few, if any, towns in the Province of Ontario, that have more to be thankful for than this industrious little city of Belleville. Aside from the mercantile conditions, which are most satisfactory—so much so, in fact, that business travelers are wont to remark that "Belleville, for its population, is among the most profitable upon their list,"—the industrial progress is of a most gratifying nature, with an upward tendency for the future. Referring to its report for the month of August, the Labor Gazette for September has the following to say in our favor, which is but a drop in the bucket compared to our prosperity upon the whole:

> "This month was one of activity in so far as labor was concerned; all classes having sufficient employment. Many buildings, chiefly residences, were erected. In the industrial line there was considerable activity. A bylaw was submitted to the ratepayers to grant a free site to the Wood Chemical Company of Canada for the establishment of a plant in this city. The vote was 659 for to 24 against. They contemplate erecting an extensive plant and will commence operations in the near future. The Marsh & Henthorn Foundry Company are erecting extensive and up-to-date works.
>
> "The prospects are bright for active operations in all the industries. Some are compelled to work overtime to keep up with orders.
>
> "In the agricultural line the season has been good. While some grain crops were not as heavy as in previous years, on the whole the crop was satisfactory. Dairying is carried on extensively and good prices for cheese are being paid. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are working east and west on their line through this city district. The Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company have made a large addition to their new freight shed at Belleville."

With a reasonable amount of enterprise on the part of our Board of Trade in the way of extending inducements for the locating of industrial concerns, we believe, within much less than the next decade, our city will have become one of the busiest communities to be found in the Dominion. We have facilities innumerable; shall not our efforts tend to their development? Let us get busy.

Manufacturers and the Farmer

With an eye to the manufacturers' convention in Ottawa, the Toronto Globe preaches a sermon upon the fallacy of imagining that a tariff which promotes manufacturers, and so builds up cities and towns, is a benefit to the farmer. The market provided by a big urban population is not necessarily, The Globe in effect contends, a benefit to the neighboring farms. Baldly so stated, this contention sounds rather silly. The Globe supports it by mere assumption, except in the case of a supposed proof which as a matter of fact does not apply.

A curious expression is used by The Globe, namely, that the surplus products of the Canadian farmer "are sold in the open markets of the world at free trade prices." We do not know exactly what this means. We suppose the intention is to indicate that the world's prices for farm products are fixed in free-trade England. Perhaps they are, and if so, they would be fixed still lower than now if through lack of tariffs and consequent bigger home markets, the farmers of Canada, the United States, Germany, France, Denmark, had to send more of their products to England than they do at present. Assertions as to what would be the case if something else were not the case are rather poor argument.

The Globe's contention had better be presented more fully. Its summary is as follows:

> "The boasted home market has not compensated the farmer for the increased prices he has to pay for everything he buys. His surplus products, after he feeds the home consumer, have still to be sold in the form of bacon, and cheese, and apples, and cattle, and grain in the open markets of the world at free trade prices. His economic handicaps are greater than his advantages. The chief reason for the very serious decline in the population of rural Ontario is to be found in the fiscal system which pretends to protect the farmer in his home market and exacts from him in return a similar protection for the manufacturing element of the towns that far exceeds the protection accorded to the rural population. The tariff, in short, makes it much easier to earn money even by physical labor in the town than in the country. That is why York County farms have a smaller population now than they had forty years ago."

The foregoing is supported by a citation of the fact that the rural population of York County, adjoining Toronto has decreased during the past thirty years.

Well, let us see if this fact applies. If it does, it does so only on the basis that a tariff causes a decrease in rural population where free trade would mean an increase. Let us look, then for a country which enjoys free trade, and see how its rural population is getting along. Great Britain practices free trade. Let us see how the farming population of Great Britain fares.

And we meet the interesting fact that the English farming population has been steadily decreasing under free trade, in proportion to the rest of the population.

Two tests may be cited as regards the English case. First, the urban versus the rural population as determined by what are called the "urban sanitary districts" in England. These comprise all municipal areas down to 3,000 population. By this test, the rural population of England has decreased in thirty years from 25 per cent. of the whole to 21 per cent.

Second and corroborative—only more decisive—are the English census returns as to persons engaged in various occupations. According to these, there were in 1881 in England and Wales, 1,383,184 persons engaged in agriculture. In 1901, the number returned as engaged in agriculture was only 1,152,495. Notwithstanding a great increase in the total population of England and Wales in twenty years—six millions—the number of people engaged in agricultural work had decreased by 230,000. It may be added that in Scotland, and still more so in Ireland, the comparative case has been worse.—Ottawa Evening Journal.

A New Jersey lawyer sought to secure the release of a prisoner because the indictment charged that he "did wilfully kill and nurder." The lawyer took the ground that "nurder" was no offence under the law, and that therefore there was no charge against his client. The court ordered that the spelling of the word in the indictment be changed, and the trial proceed. This is the peculiar part of it. People were beginning to believe, and not without reason, that any kind of a technical quibble was sufficient to hold up a trial before a United States court. It is perhaps not too much to say that many important cases have been affected by quibbles of no more importance than the misspelling of the word "murder" in the indictment referred to.

Italian Murder At Lime Ridge

LIME RIDGE, Que., Sept. 27.—Considerable excitement was caused here yesterday when Angelo Rossi, an Italian, came rushing to town announcing that murder had been committed in his camp at Kidderville, about five miles from here. The murdered man is Camillo Cherubino, twenty-eight years of age, and the alleged assassin is one of three brothers, Frank, Joseph or Bruni Raffelo.

About nine o'clock this morning the men were at work and Joe Raffelo and Cherubino started quarrelling. In a short time his two brothers came to his assistance and a free-for-all fight was waged. Rossi, who employed the men, finally separated them. The bro went one way and Cherubino the other. Ten minutes later Rossi heard two shots and on going to the main road found Cherubino dead, shot through the back with a shot gun. No trace of the three Raffelo brothers could be found. Rossi immediately notified the authorities but no attempt was made to locate the murderers, until ten-thirty tonight, after Coroner Lemieux secured a verdict of murder, and charged the Raffelo brothers with the crime.

At eleven o'clock Bailiff Wm. Bishop and an Italian to identify the fugitives, left by train for Dudswell Junction, a distance of four miles, where it was reported that two Italians had asked for food and lodgings. Another bailiff, a new man of Bishop's Crossing, joined the search party here, but up until one o'clock this morning the fugitives had not be located and searchers were calling at every house in the vicinity.

Bruno Raffelo, one of the brothers, is armed, and his wife is with him. They are armed with double barrelled shot guns, and it would not be surprising if trouble were experienced before they are captured. Other Italians in the lumber camp are rendering every possible assistance to arrest the guilty parties.

Declares China Will Make War Against Russia

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—A cable from Paris says: In an interview in the Patrie to-day on the general position of international policies, the Russian General Spiridovitch gave it as his opinion that one forthcoming development would be a declaration of war between China and Russia. In the course of his remarks the general gave the following curious reasons for this remarkable statement:

"China is obliged to follow the same method of expansion as Japan, which has been forced to pour her overflow population into Korea and Manchuria. China has now 500,000,000 inhabitants, and there are twenty million births yearly. Siberia is necessary to her.

The States in it, Too.

"The United States knows this, and now that it has the Panama Canal with which to become master of the Pacific, its policy will consist in arming and organizing China in order to make that vast empire an importing country, to be assured of an exchange of trade, and to force China to drive back the Russians to the Urals.

"Russia is also certain to enter into a conflict with the United States, whose Imperialist policy is aggressive and egotistic. Already the relations between the two countrise are far from cordial, and the tension will become more and more acute.

"It is thus criminal to give China the $300,000,000 which the group of Anglo-American banks promised her, and the coin of which France would be called on to furnish.

"It is the enemies of the Franco-Russian alliance who, to lessen Russia's power, are procuring for China the financial means to make war on Russia in the near future."

Ulster Rank and File Are Quite Serious

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The Liberal and Radical papers are making a deal of fun of Sir Edward Carson, who is accused of surrounding himself in the recent Ulster demonstrations by ceremonial usually reserved for the King. They ridicule the Ulster agitation generally, the dummy rifles and artillery, and the psuedo military spectacle, as a sort of circus show. They admit, however, that the Ulster people themselves are in deadly earnest.

The Belfast correspondent of the Radical Daily News says:—"In England, where these military parades are very properly smiled at, it would be well if attention were withdrawn from the ridiculous figures cut by the political leaders and fixed on the folk who do the parades, for they are quite in earnest and not ridiculous, although they seem to have lost their sense of humor. But they hold tenaciously to their rancorous. I believe some of them would die for it."

Fires 350 Shots A Minute

ROME, Sept. 27.—A monk of the name of Mario Bontempi, a teacher of physics and mathematics in the manastery at Lanciano, in the province of Chieti, has abandoned monasticism to exploit an automatic rifle which he has invented. He claims that the weapon will fire 350 shots a minute.

Bontempi wanted to patent his rifle and offer it to the Italian Government, but his superiors ordered him to destroy the plans and specifications of such a murderous weapon. He refused to do this, and is now negotiating with the War Office.

MINNEAOLIS, Sept. 27.—Directors of the International Bowling association at a meeting here recently officially awarded the 1913 tourney, which is to be held February 11-18, to Minneapolis. Milwaukee had been awarded the tournament previously, but later surrendered its claim.

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 27.—As a result of the disappearance of Jack Spencer with funds belonging to the Ontario Jockey club, the management have decided a way whereby it will now be impossible for any cashier with crooked intentions to make an escape. A new rule went into force yesterday that all cashiers on the pari-mutuel machines must submit statements showing the amount of money they have given out or taken in during the afternoon, and tickets representing the same. They are locked in the office and no one leaves until a balance is struck by the auditors.

Nat Butler, the noted bicycle and motor-paced rider, arrived in Toronto Thursday from New York and is here to represent John M. Chapman, who is managing the coming six-day bicycle race at the Arena Gardens the week of October 21. Mr. Butler says that all the noted champions will be here to take part. The champions of four countries will be among the starters. Mr. Butler has been in the racing game for over twenty years and has won several American and European championships.

Unless there is a radical change in the weather conditoins, the fall meeting of the Ontario Jockey club will not be a howling success. The attendance has been a long way below the mark up to the present time, and there seems to be a decided lack of interest, for some reason or other. The racing, on the whole, has been good, though the fields have been more noted for quantity than for quality. The Schorr stable has captured the majority of the rich prizes, and the Milwaukee brewer will reap a harvest. Favorites were generally succesful yesterday, though "good things" went wrong when Moving Picture and Colston finished in the second hole There was a great plunge on the Davies filly, but she evidently "busted a film."

Eddie Durnan's chances of bringing home the world's sculling championship are considered exceedingly bright hereabouts. Durnan will have plenty of time to condition himself for the race, and on that score there should be no apprehension. The date has been definitely decided upon—October 14, and with over two weeks to get in trim and to accustom himself to his new surroundings, the Toronto sculler, who did not neglect his training by any means while aboard ship, should be in pretty fair trim. Many of his local supporters are talking about cabling over a sum of money to wager upon his chances. They feel that he has an even chance of winning, and are prepared to back their opinions substantially. In any event Durnan will give Barry the battle of his life.

THE RING

It was a poor showing that the Ferns brothers made in their invasion of Buffalo on Wednesday night. The much-touted rope arena artists rushed into the Bison City prepared to lick the best that could be trotted out, but after the battles, when they were suddenly beaten, they slunk out of sight. The home-brews had them yelling quits before their bouts were half over.

BASEBALL.

The Boston Reds are within one game of the American league record for games won in a season. With six games yet to play the champions should establish a new mark.

Detroit was looked upon to have at least an even chance with Chicago, but the Cubs made the Tigers look like bush leaguers on both occasions You can't tell a thing about how the series is coming out. You will pull for your favorite, but if you leave it to the dope book—to the statistics—you could pick the winner now: Boston!

Boston bunched hits with Keating's passes in the fifth and sixth innings of yesterday's game, and the former Hamilton twirler was derricked. The Highlanders secured an early lead, and it looked like the first big league win for the big fellow, but he was touched up freely, and became as wild as the proverbial hawk. Caldwell relieved him. Keating's showing so far has not been asy to encouraging, but by striking out eight men yesterday he showed that he had the stuff. Perhaps it's a stage fright, but that will wear off.

Already the statisticians are producing figures to show that the Red Sox are the best, and that the Giants are the best. As far as the dope is concerned, the Boston's will come in for the lion's share of the conclusions. In almost every department the Red Sox will show to advantage, but figures won't win a world's series. On form the Athletics figured the best last year, and they won, but in previous years the grand old dope has been given severe upsets, especially when the White Sox beat the Cubs, and when the Pirates beat the Tigers.

BERLIN, Ont., Sept. 27.—At a large and representative meeting of baseball fans it was unanimously decided to form a joint stock company to be known as "The Twin City Athletic association, limited." In addition to purchasing the franchise of the Berlin Canadian League team from W. H. Williams, the present owner at $3000 it was decided to take steps to secure grounds as quickly as possible and fit them up for baseball, football and horse show. In the meantime the Athletic grounds at Victoria park will be available to the company.

The necessary papers for the charter were drawn up this morning, and W. M. O. Lochead, A. J. Ross, C. N. Heuther, H. A. Hagen and Dr. F. H. Kalbfleisch were nominated as provisional directors of the company. Owner Williams was assured that the franchise would be taken off his hands within the next thirty days. The proposed company will be capitalized at $40,000 instead of $10,000, as formerly proposed.

FOOTBALL

MONTREAL, Sept. 27.—The McGill Students' Council feel that this year is going to be one of the biggest football seasons in the history of the university. What with the encouraging practices under the guidance of Coach Shaughnessy, who has won the confidence of all the students, and the extraordinary interest that has been exhibited in the team event at this early date, there seems to be every indication of a banner year. In view of this the council, at a meeting held recently, decided to utilize the full seating capacity of the campus, which in the past has been requisitioned only at the end of the season when the teams has been in the running for the championship. These seats will be sold to all who may want them for a flat rate for the whole season, thus ensuring good gates at the games which may not be as important as others, and ensuring the public at large of accommodation which in past seasons has been occupied exclusively by the undergraduates. These season tickets will shortly be put on sale at the union and other central places

"Danny" Maher, the jockey, has settled more or less permanently in England. A few years ago he rented a house near his friend, George Williamson, the famous ex-steeplechase jockey, and was so charmed with the district that he bought about a hundred acres of land. Maher, whose parents come from Tipperary, did at one time think of buying a place in that county in order to settle down when he retired from riding, but gave up the idea.

CHESTERVILLE, ONT., JAN. 25th, 1912

"For over twenty years, I have been troubled with Kidney Disease and the doctors told me they could do me no good. They said my case was incurable and I would suffer all my life. I doctored with different medical men and tried many advertised remedies, but there was none that suited my case. Nearly a year ago, I tried "Fruit-a-tives". I have been using them nearly all the time since, and am glad to say that I am cured. I have no trouble now with my Kidneys and I give "Fruit-a-tives" the credit of doing what the doctors said was impossible. I am seventy-six years old and am in first class health."

OBJECT TO WAR PAINT

Moral Reform Board Want Indian Parades Stopped.

Calgary's Exhibition of Red Men During the Stampede Will Be Subject of a Memorial to Borden Government—Three New Field Secretaries Are Apointed By the Methodist Branch of the League.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—Three new secretaries were appointed by the Methodist branch of temperance and moral reform. A great educational campaign is to be held throughout the Dominion and Newfoundland, which is included in the Methodist general conference. The campaign will not be immediately directed towards seeking changes in the laws, beyond seeking the appointment of the board of censors for theatres as announced yesterday.

Rev. Dr. Moore was authorized to confer with the Governments of the respective provinces to ask them to have an investigation by a commission to report on the advisability of making it compulsory for medical certificates of freedom from contagious disease necessary before marriage licenses are issued.

The new secretaries will be: Rev. J. H. Hazelwood, Toronto, for Ontario; Rev. J. Garbutt, Cobourg, for the western provinces; Rev. W. J. Smith, Hamilton, for the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland.

It was agreed to co-operate with the Presbyterian board in establishing rescue homes for girls.

A resolution commending N. W. Rowell's "banish the bar" policy was adopted.

A protest will be sent to Ottawa against Indians being granted leave to take part in parades in their war paint at fairs, and expressing regret that this took place during the visit of the Duke of Connaught at Calgary.

The Dominion Government will be asked to make the law respecting seduction by certain employers general, so that it would include restaurant keepers. This was on account of allegations respecting the employment of white waitresses in Chinese restaurants.

The moral reform magazine to be issued by the branch, is to be started in January.

A resolution commending the Women's National Council's efforts to protect feeble-minded girls was adopted.

Hon. Sam Hughes will be asked to stop the serving of liquors at the officers' and sergeants' messes in barracks and armories, as well as at annual camps.

The question of international peace was discussed, a resolution being adopted condemning "jingoism" in the form of talk of war between England and Germany, and declaring in favor of the principle of arbitration of all matters of dispute between nations.

Man Caught Not the One.

Seattle, Wn., Sept. 28.—The man arrested in St. Louis, according to detectives directing the search here, is not Al. Addison, alias Albert Anderson, the last of the trio believed to have committed the actual robbery of the New Westminster Bank.

Addison was Charles Dean's partner in a bowling alley in Tacoma, and also in the ownership of a swift gasoline launch, in which the thieves are supposed to have escaped from New Westminster.

It was the theory of detectives here that the actual robbery was done by John McNamara, Charles Dean and Addison. The two former are in prison awaiting trial. Addison has never been found. All the other arrests in various parts of the country in connection with the robbery are said to have been of men accused of handling stolen bills.

Every man believes he is entitled to a lot of credit doesn't get.

BOYNE FLAG UNFURLED

Great Anti-Home Rule Meeting Held in Belfast.

Sir Edward Carson Is the Central Figure In a Demonstration In Ulster Hall, Where Many Leading Unionists Rouse Ulstermen to a Frenzy of Enthusiasm — Assembly Is Orderly.

Belfast, Sept. 28.—The singing of the National Anthem by an audience of three thousand persons comprising everybody representative of Belfast's great industrial mercantile, civil and religious community last night brought to a close a great anti-home rule meeting in Ulster Hall amid a fervor which was not equalled even by the anti-home rule convention of 1892. The meeting renewed the adoption of the resolution passed at that convention protesting against home rule Parliament for Ireland.

The supreme dramatic moment of the memorable gathering last night was the unfurling and presentation to Sir Edward Carson, the chief propagandist against home rule, of the flag carried by King William at the battle of the Boyne. The flag was greeted with frenzied cheering.

No new pronouncement of Unionist policy was made at the meeting. The Ulster watchword is "We will not have home rule," but none of the various speakers nor the letters of the influential Unionist leaders which were read in their absence attempted to reveal the plan of resistance, if such a plan exists, should King George sign the home rule measure. In comparison with the demonstrations held elsewhere during the past week the absence of talk of armed resistance was noticeable. Also there was less of a display of the military spirit in Belfast yesterday.

The Weekly Outlook last night made the startling announcement that one-third of the officers in the British army are Irishmen, that over 50 per cent. of them are Unionist Protestants, and that they are now considering how to resign their commissions in order to lead Ulster in arms against home rule.

A vast crowd had congregated about Ulster Hall hours before the time of the commencement of the meeting. Proprietors of neighboring warehouses took precautions against possible trouble by barricading their windows.

In the absence of the Duke of Abercorn, who was unable to attend, Lord Londonderry presided. Among those on the platform were Sir Edward Carson, the Marquis of Salisbury, Baron Willoughby de Broke, Lord Charles Beresford, the Earls of Kilmorey, Clanwilliam, Erne and Leitrim, and Frederick E. Smith and many other Unionist members of Parliament.

Lord Londonderry, in opening the proceedings, said the determination of Unionists of Ulster to oppose home rule never had been more significantly shown than in the campaign which was just closing. Those that signed the covenant law, he declared, would abide by it at all hazards.

"Premier Asquith and John Redmond (loud hooting) will learn from it," continued Lord Londonderry, "that Ulster is not bluffing. The covenant will be something that they cannot ignore."

The Lord Mayor of Belfast, after the reading of the letters, moved a resolution denouncing home rule.

There was a dramatic scene when Sir Edward Carson rose to speak. The entire audience stood and cheered him.

Then the stalwart Col. Wallace, representing the Orangemen, advanced slowly to the platform and unfurled, waved solemnly and presented to Sir Edward Carson the flag which was carried to the front by King William at the battle of the Boyne. In making the presentation, Col. Wallace delivered a stirring little speech, concluding with, "This flag will be borne before Carson at the signing of the covenant to-morrow."

The audience here broke into a storm of delirious cheering and hat waving, which lasted several minutes. Sir Edward Carson, holding the flag aloft, replied to Col. Wallace:

"I accept this flag as a token of victory for civil and religious liberty. I hand it back o you and ask you to keep it as a sacred trust until we have killed the conspiracy that confronts us."

Capt. James Craig, member of Parliament of the County Down, then presented Sir Edward with a silver casket containing the scroll of the covenant and a silver pen, with which Sir Edward will sign it to-day. Having expressed his thanks for this gift, Sir Edward proceeded with his speech, which was a statement of Ulster's defiance.

Sir Edward then left the hall to address the overflow meeting outside.

Bodyguard For Carson.

Belfast, Sept. 28.—The authorities say that they do not anticipate any disorder in connection with the demonstration on Ulster Day, but they have taken the precaution of ordering the troops in the city to be confined to barracks in readiness should their services be required.

Sir Edward Carson during his progress to and from Ulster Hall to-day will be escorted by a bodyguard of 100 selected men from the Unionist clubs.

The entire city is gaily decorated, and from thousands of houses in the residential districts Union Jacks are flying. An appeal has been made to the Ulster men to make a unique display of the national flag, and this has given occasion for an unprecedented show of bunting.

Suicide a London Man.

Woodstock, Sept. 28.—That the man who was found dead in this city last Monday morning, having committed suicide by taking strychnine, was William Dunlop, London, has now been established, A. Haines of that city, with whom Dunlop boarded, having identified him. The deceased had family troubles.

Long In Toronto.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—Three thousand deep-throated voices veritably shook the walls of Massey Hall last night when they moved with one accord a resolution against the adoption of home rule in Ireland. The speaker was Hon. Walter Hume Long, the British Unionist Parliamentarian.

Thousands more lined the streets outside and re-echoed the cheers that emanated from within. Orange Young Britons' bands paraded the streets playing the "Protestant Boys" with might and main, followed by Orange lodges, members of which had arrived too late for admission to the assembly.

"Ulster bars the way because home rule demands the loss of liberty to herself and children," Mr. Long concluded. "Ulster is in deadly earnest and will never give way. Honor forbids, and reason makes it impossible."

At the close of Mr. Long's speech, Col. Scott moved a resolution of protest, which was seconded by Hon. Tom Crawford, M.P.P.

Another C.P.R. Rumor.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—An interesting rumor was circulated in Toronto financial circles yesterday on C.P.R. The rumor stated that the Cabinet had decided to grant the application for the increased capital asked for by the railway, but that in order to placate public sentiment the new stock was to be offered at $200 a share to present shareholders. With a 10 per cent. dividend, it is argued, that investors would on this arrangement only get 5 per cent. on their money and that this was a reasonable return. The rumor also said that the authority to increase the capital would be announced from Ottawa prior to the meeting of the C.P.R. shareholders next week. C.P.R. stock was exceptionally strong yesterday, selling up to 281-1-8. This was accepted as the result of inside information of the Government's intention.

Montreal Cars Kill Two.

Montreal, Sept. 28.—Two deaths resulted yesterday from street railway accidents. Fred. Tuckwell of the firm of Tuckwell Bros., automobile tire repairers, was struck by a car on the crossing of Melville avenue and St. Catherine street and fatally injured.

Four-year-old Hazen Glendenning, whose parents reside at 158 Queen street, was knocked down by a car on the crossing of Vinet and St. James streets and died a short time afterward.

Mr. Tuckwell died at the Western Hospital last evening.

WANT FREE TRADE.

Grain Growers Look For Close Link With Britain.

Winnipeg, Sept. 28—The Grain-grower's Guide has issued the following statement in reply to the offer of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for a conference with the farmers on closer trade with Great Britain:

"Western grain-growers have repeatedly declared for an increased British preference, and eventually free trade with the Motherland. If the Canadian Manufacturers' Association is prepared to assist the grain-growers towards this end, there is no doubt but that the grain-growers will be glad of the assistance of the manufacturers, as they realize the manufacturers have great influence in tariff-making. Freer trade with the Motherland would reduce the cost of living to every Canadian, and bind closer the greatest overseas Dominion with Great Britain. Every loyal Canadian will be glad to know that the Manufacturers' Association is not opposed to lower taxes on British imports. If the association is prepared for a conference with the producers to assist in securing free trade with Great Britain in ten years it will be a welcome message to every western grain-grower."

Not Serious Enough.

Ottawa, Sept. 28.—A number of the manufacturers who were present on Thursday morning when the appeal of the Western Grain-Growers for co-operation in promoting practical Imperial unity by increase in the British preference was greeted with derisive laughter, and rather humorously disposed of, have since expressed the opinion that the association made a tactical mistake in not dealing with the question a little more seriously.

Key Saved His Life.

London, Sept. 28.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Charles Handyside, Montreal, who is staying in London with his wife and daughter, narrowly escaped death in a Tottenham Court road melee yesterday morning when an Armenian named Titus shot five people, one of them fatally. Handyside said:

"I was standing near Tottenham Court road waiting for my wife and daughter from the dressmakers. Suddenly I saw a tall man with something in his hand rushed towards me. As I raised my shoulder slightly the man paused for a second, faced me and then firing the revolver, darted off again. Three hours afterwards when I got back to my hotel, I remembered I had the key in my pocket. I took out the key and then saw that there was a great hole in it. I felt the lining of my overcoat and there found a bullet right at the bottom of the coat. The bullet entered my overcoat just below the heart and if Providence had not caused me to have the key with me I should have been killed. I am going to keep the key and bullet as a souvenir."

Rebels Rob American Contractor.

Jaurez, Mexico, Sept. 28.—Rebels raided the camp of William Orr, a contractor employed by the Mexican Northwestern Railway, and forced the American to give over his payroll, amounting to about $14,000, equipment valued at $12,000 and about $10,000 in commissary supplies. Reports of the raid which occurred Wednesday, were received here yesterday. One report says the American contractor was injured by the rebels.

Orr's camp is situated at Cumbre, in the Casas Grandes district, south of Pearson. Federal troops guarding the camp were removed a few days before the rebel raid, Orr reports.

Woodstock Manufacturers Must Pay.

Woodstock, Sept. 28.—The City Council at its session last evening dealt with the question of assessment for the manufacturers of this city. The report of the finance committee fixing the assessment rate of the manufacturers on a forty-two per cent basis was adopted. The basis is higher than the manufacturers desired, but the settlement will mean about $5,00 increase in the yearly taxes.

Fight On In Galt.

Galt, Sept. 28.—A hot local option campaign is now on. The present is the third year under the act, and the antis are putting up a vigorous fight for repeal. A statutory requisition to go before the council has been in circulation several weeks, and is said to be complete and ready for presentation. If the new list be not ready for January, 200 residents, the majority being antis, will be disfranchised.

Supporters of the act, who claim it has been rigidly enforced and a complete success, express strong faith that it will be sustained. On the other hand, opponents claim the proximity of the wet zone north and south nullifies the effects of prohibition in Galt. The result here will be a test of the working of the act under adverse conditions. Therefore the fight will be strenuous, and the opposition forces are stronger and better led than before.

Winnipeg Grain Market.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 27.—Trading was active in futures, altho during the later hours business fell flat. Prices were lower at the opening ⅛c to ½c, and declined a further ½c to ⅝c, October leading. The weakness in values was due to lower Liverpool cables, weak American markets and heavy [illegible] reaction developed and the closing figures were unchanged to ⅛c to ⅛c lower.

Cash demand was good for all grades, and prices [illegible] with offerings on a more liberal scale. Export enquiry was moderately active, altho no new business was located as bids were out of line. Oats opened unchanged for all months, but weakened later.

There were in sight for inspection this morning 500 cars.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Sept. 27.—Cables on Manitoba spring wheat were weaker at a decline of 3d to 6d. The demand was fair, and sales of about 150,000 bushels were made by exporters, who had some cheap ocean freights, but the prices, based on todays asking freight rates, were away out of line. There was also some business done in oats for export. For the first time in many years a cago of 100,000 bushels of American No. 3 clipped white has been bought, duty paid, and sold for local consumption at much lower prices than Canadian grades can be bought, but the quality is much inferior. Grain Movement Late.

Ottawa, Sept. 28.—Late as was last year's western wheat crop in moving, this year's is even slower, according to official figures which are received at the Trade and Commerce Department. On Sept. 22, 1911, there were at the terminal elevator 3,396,358 bushels of wheat and 3,037,901 bushels of oats, or a total of 6,434,254 bushels. This year on Sept. 20 there was only about half this amount at the terminals. There were 2,387,287 bushels of wheat and 1,267,492 bushels of oats, a total of 3,655,319 bushels.

Blame Defective Rail.

Chatham, Sept. 28.—All of the injured in the Grand Trunk wreck are reported as improving, and it is expected there will be no fatalities. Mrs. J. E. Richards of this city is more seriously injured than at first reported. As far as can be made out, the accident was caused by a defective rail, the spreading of which caused the train to leave the track. The sudden applying of the emergency brakes caused two of the cars to tumble into the ditch.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

LIFE TALK

When you take out a life insurance policy you make the biggest bank deposit you ever made in your life at one time. Did you ever put one thousand—five thousand—dollars through the receiving teller's wicket and say: "Put that to the credit of my account"? No? Well, the minute you sign the application for such an amount and pay the first instalment on your new bank account you have actually provided that whole sum—ready—waiting for service against the one big call that is coming to you some time—the one on which you will never get any extension of time. IT RESTS WITH EVERY WOMAN TO BE ATTRACTIVE

No woman, perfect features or otherwise, can afford to have an anæmic or worn-out, tired appearance if she would wish to be thought of as either beautiful or attractive. Good features are to be prized, but many a woman possesses them who never impresses you with the fact. Why? Because she is pale, sickly and worn-looking.

Good features, however, are not the essential factors, for how often do you see homely people whose faces are attractive? The healthy complexion, the bright eye of health, the altogether fresh appearance make it so.

These Qualities Are Within the Reach of Every Girl and Woman

by using Restoratone Tablets. Prompt in action, they restore the natural freshness of youth. It is their capacity in this direction that makes Restoratone Tablets stand first. In short, they are attracting great attention. Their continuous effect is entirely beneficial, while their tonic properties raise the vitality and nutrition of the whole organism, thus restoring the blood to a healthy normal condition—the real secret of a good complexion. Restoratone Tablets have been tried and tested in hundreds of cases; all you need to do is to give them a trial to be convinced of their wonderful virtue. They are recognized as being the most natural and, therefore, the best treatment for all undermining or diseased conditions found in girls and women.

THE STERLING ANNUAL AGRICULTURAL FAIR

On Thursday and Friday of this week a fair was held at Stirling and it proved to be a successful affair in every respect. In the various departments there were many exhibits, being far in excess of other years. This was especially the case in field and garden products. The attendance yesterday was large and all present had a most enjoyable time. It was an ideal day for a fall fair. The management had provided an excellent programme of attractions for their patrons which the later were not slow to appreciate. The speeding events, as is usually the case at fairs, proved to be a drawing card. Each event on the lost was well contested and we are informed that some good time was made, despite the fact that the track was in very poor condition, owing to incessant rains during the past few days. During the afternoon the I.O.O.F. band of this city was present and discoursed a programme of music which delighted many. Piper James Clarke of this city was also present in Highland costume and gave some selections and exhibitions of dancing..

COULDN'T BREAK THE WILL

Lawyers Could Not Help Disappointed Relatives.

Some disappointed relatives tried recently to break the will of a deceased farmer in Ontario. Their legal advisers told them it would not be difficult, as it was known that the farmer had not consulted a lawyer when making the will.

It seems that he had had some unpleasant experiences with lawyers' fees that had created a decided prejudice in his mind against the entire legal profession. The relatives, however, were doomed to a second disappointment, as it was found that the deceased had used a BAX Copyrighted Will Form.

Their lawyer was compelled to advise them that the BAX Will Form is made absolutely in accordance with the law and is indisputable.

The BAX Will Form costs 35 cents, and with each form is included a specimen will and full instructions for your guidance, so that mistakes are impossible.

The BAX Will Form can be obtained at 35 cents, or will be sent on receipt of price by the BAX Will Form Company, Toronto. For sale by C. L. Sills, Belleville.

Aeroplane Maker Killed in Motor

LYONS, France, Sept. 27.—Charles Voisin, the constructor of aeroplanes, was killed in automobile accident today, and Baroness de la Roche, the noted woman aviator, was seriously injured.

The Baroness de la Roche was frightfully injured by a fall at Rennes on July 8, 1910, and has not been taking a very active part in air work since.

The Baroness was formerly a showgirl in the company at the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre. Six years ago she left the stage and married the Baron de la Roche. She was the first woman in the world to learn how to drive an aeroplane and made her first flight in a Voisin biplane in October, 1909.

Annual Meeting Of the Y.W.C.T.U.

It was with sincere regret that the "Y" received the resignation of Mrs. John Williams, honored president since the society was formed, but owing to her long illness felt compelled to accept it.

Disaster in Wake Of Great Typhoon

TOKIO, Sept. 27.—Damage exceeding $20,000,000 was caused by the typhoon which swept Japan on Sunday while the loss of human life was very heavy, and tens of thousands are homeless.

The storm was the worst that has occurred here for over half a century, according to reports that have just reached the capital, which has been practically cut off from the rest of the country for days.

Crops suffered severely everywhere, but the greatest damage was done in the neighborhood of the cities of Nagoya, Nara, and Osaka on the Island of Hondo and in Gifu.

At Nagoya every house was damaged and a great tidal wave demolished the harbor and sank three steamers, while several others went ashore.

At Gifu 262 people were killed and 283 injured.

The Tokio Maru founderd off Enshu, and the whole of her crew and passengers were lost.

At Osaka 20,000 houses were ruined, and all the breakwaters and the harbor piers were washed away.

Too Much Mercy With Justice.

Woodstock, Sept. 28.—After having in his custody two men now believed to have been daring crooks, who were discovered in the office of the Drumbo skating rink Thursday evening during a concert, the constable of the village allowed his prisoners to go without making further enquiries, and the police of this county now believe that an important capture has been missed. The men were in the act of robbing the till when caught. Because they had not succeeded in getting any money the constable allowed them to go.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

Governor-General Lends His Influence in Temperance Work—Some Incidents.

The fact that Canada's Governor-General, the Duke of Connaught, has been for years a strong sympathizer with temperance effort, and that he has taken a high stand on the matter of total abstinence, not only in Great Britain, but also in various colonies where his position in the British army has placed him, is perhaps not generally known in this country.

For a long time the Duke of Connaught has been president of the Royal Army Temperance Association of Britain, acting not merely as an ornamental head, but by chairmanship of meetings, messages of encouragement and like means evincing a keen interest in the work and progress of that important organization. In July 1909, His Royal Highness was honorary president of the twelfth International Congress on Alcoholism, held in the Imperial Institute, London; and in the following year, during his South African tour, as royal representative to inaugurate the South African Federation, he received a deputation of Bechuanaland chiefs desiring his aid in the endeavor to keep the curse of alcohol out of their territories. The chiefs were encouraged by his symapthetic reply.

The excellent health which the Duke enjoyed in the summer of 1882, when so strenuously employed in military duties amid the heat and trying conditions of Egypt, he attributed to his practice of total abstinence.

Princess Margaret, who by her marriage on June 15, 1905, became the Crown Princess of Sweden, is a strict teetotaler. The Crown Princess is a member of the white ribbon union of her adopted land, and displays deep interest in its work and success.

Police Court Circles

Before Judge Deroche yesterday afternoon, Richard Stapley jr., was placed on trial on a charge of appropriating to his own use monies which belonged to the F. S. Anderson Company. During July and August the accused was delivering ice for the company and it was proven that he sold ice to some parties who were not enrolled customers and retained the money. The evidence was conclusive but as the young man had previously borne a good character, His Honor after consulting with the Crown Attorney and Mr. Carnew, private prosecutor, decided not to enter a conviction of theft against the accused and the company did not wish to be vindictive in the matter. Stapley was allowed to go after being cautioned. His Honor remarked that the company were perfectly justified in bringing the action against Stapley. Mr. Shorey appeared for the accused.

ALLEGED THEFT.

Nicolo Piccola, an Italian, was charged with the theft of a watch, the property of Mr. Archie Murray. It is allegd that the foreigner stole the watch from the complainant's pocket. He pleaded not guilty. Some evidence was taken and the case was adjourned until Mondoy. The accused was allowed his liberty upon furnishing substantial bonds. Mr. Anderson, County Attorney for Crown; Mr. Carnew for prisoner.

Mrs. Mary Wilson was charged with appropriating to her own use a hand satchel, containing a small purse with money therein and other articles, the property of Mrs. Lizzie Bailey, of this city. Mrs. Bailey lost the purse, and two children found it. The charge is that Mrs. Wilson, who appeared upon the scene when the children picked up the purse, took it away from them and kept it for several days. After some evidence had been taken the case was enlarged until Monday. In the meantime Mrs. Wilson is out on bail. Mr. Anderson for Crown; Mr. Carnew for the accused.

It is also requested that all the members of the Board of Education will attend at 9 o'clock Monday morning to see the school opened to decide about some important matters in connection with the school.

Fell Under a Train

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Sept. 27.—William Cousins, a Michigan Central conductor, was almost instantly killed in an attempt to board a moving train. He was on his way home at the south end of the city and missed his footing and fell beneath the wheels. An arm and a leg were crushed, the leg being almost severed. He was picked up and taken to the office of Dr. McGarry and then to the general hospital, where he died in a few minutes after being admitted. He was 25 years old and unmarried. He formerly was night yardmaster for the M.C.R. at Montrose.

Suffragettes to Wear Armor

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The suffragettes' latest dodge is the wearing of protective armor. It is learned that several of the women who disturbed Chancellor Lloyd George's Welsh meeting on Saturday wore quilted and padded garments, with sharp pins, point outward, firmly fixed in the padding.

MOOSE PLENTIFUL NEAR RUEL.

Best Moose Country in Ontario reached in a day.

The impression seems to prevail that it is necessary to go a long distance from civilization in order to shoot this monarch of the forest. While this may be the case in regard to many districts, the northern territory traversed by the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway forms the great exception. Hunters may now go to Ruel by rail and there transfer to Clemows launches, which run from that point down the Opickinimicka River to Dechene Lake. Hunters can make camp right on the shores of these waters in the centre of the best moose country in Ontario. Guides can be secured and all hunting supplies purchased at this point.

The service of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway to these hunting grounds is almost too well known to require any introduction to the sportsman. Solid vestibuled trains are operated exclusively, and special rates will be in effect good going October 7th to November 9th, returning to December 12th.

Before making your annual pilgrimage to the woods this fall, investigate the hunting possibilities of the territory along the lines of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway, and be assured of a good season's sport.

A postcard to R. L. Fairbairn, General Passenger Agent, Canadian Northern Ontario Railway, Toronto, will bring you folders and all information.

Woman Attacks Aged Cardinal

Suffragettr Mrkes Bitter Onslaught On Cardinal Gibbons in Kansas.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 27.—On his return yesterday from a trip through the west, Cardinal Gibbons told how, when in Wichita, Kansas, he escaped an attack from a rabid suffragist, who was incensed at an interview he gave out in St. Louis, in which he denounced woman suffrage in plain terms.

Mrs. Myra McHenev, whom the prelate described as being of the Carrie Nation type, made threats of personal violence to the aged Cardinal in a speech before a crowd just before he arrived in Wichita.

She said she was waiting for him, and the police promptly put her in jail.

Cardinal Gibbons said he regarded the incident as closed.

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Author of "The Romance of War," "Under the Red Dragon," "Fairer than A Fairy," etc.

CHAPTER XLV.

Furnished with a letter from Captain Casanova to the British consul with Captain Walmer, I lost no time in seeking out that official, for we were alike without purse or wardrobe, and had to prove who we were. Money and an outfit I required imperatively, as I was burning with impatience to take the first steamer for Jamaica, and the Captain, with the remnant of his crew, meant to make his way home to England.

Though there was snow on the lofty mountain peaks, the hot sun blazed down upon the unpaved streets of San Juan de Puetro Rico till the soil almost cracked; the dusty gutters were dry, and the passers to and fro were grilled and breathless. Green fans, vast straw sombreors, and ample umbrellas were all in requisition by those who could procure them.

We soon found next day the consul, a wealthy merchant, whose residence, built in the form of a square, had all the melancholy and unfurnished aspect peculiar to a warm climate, presented our letters, and were courteously received, for the consul was a well bred man of Old Castile.

Our story was soon told, and duly recorded in his books; the names of the seamen were taken down, and letters of credit given us. The sailors departed to enjoy themselves, and talking of our future plans, Walmer and I—after being at a banker's and also at a clothiers establishment—wandered for hours through the streets of the city, undecided as to which hotel we should honour by our residence.

At the corner of one of the streets a litle lamp was flickering before a gaudy figure of the Madonna and Child. Beside it I saw a man standing, and at first I thought he was engaged in prayer; but another glance showed me that he was endeavoring to light a very refractory cigar at the flame of the lamp.

As we aproached he glanced hastily and uneasily about him, fearing, perhaps, the act might be deemed rather as a sacrilege, and hurrying down a dark street disappeared; but at the moment of his turning round an irrepressible exclamation escaped me.

He was rather fashionably dressed, and looked more like an Englishman than a Spaniard; but in the pale and impassible face, on which the lamplight flickered for a moment, in the cruel mouth, cold, glittering eyes, and peculiar features, I saw—or thought I saw—the mysterious wretch who fell beneath the pistol of Speke van Bommel in the far away Cape Colony.

I dashed after him, but whether he thought himself pursued, whether he had recognized me, or whether he had merely entered some house which was his destination I know not. Anyway, the man, if he existed at all, or was not some phantasm consequent to all I had undergone, had disappeared; and when breathlessly I rejoined Walmer, and told him of the affair, and why I had darted so suddenly from his side, he rallied me severly and laughingly "for yielding to such fancies."

"But a man of the same name sailed in the Eugenie," I urged.

"True; but there may be more Van Neukerques than one in the world," replied the practical Walmer. "How many Smiths, Browns, Joneses, and Robinsons are there?"

"But the description of his personal appearance, as given me in Cape Town, tallied exactly with that of the man I met and saw buried in the bush."

"Imposible, my dear fellow; it is all fancy."

"His name, too, was the same."

"Nay, you only know that his initial letter of his name was similar, that is all."

"You saw the man as well as I did, quietly lighting his cheroot at the lamp."

"Ghosts usually give up bad habits, and smoking is one. I saw him, of course, but with you the likeness was undoubtedly fancy."

"It was no fancy," I persisted; "and could I but have spoken with him he might have ended the horrible suspense and misery I endure about the loss of the Eugenie."

"Well, here is a cafe; let us overhaul the newspaper The shipping list will show me the first craft for Liverpool."

"And for Jamaica," I added.

Entering the house, we summoned the waiter, and ordered wine, cigars, and the newspapers. Walmer lit a cigar, and taking one of the papers, ran his eyes over the advertisement.

"I am sorry to say we shall soon part company, my friend," said he; "and after all we have endured together, danger and suffering in common, I shall certainly miss you; but we shall meet again, Captain Haddon, for in this work-a-day world no one ever stands still."

"You have procured what you sought—a ship?"

"Yes for Liverpool direct. The San Francisco will touch here to-morrow morning on her way from Kingstown. The crew, or all that remain now of the poor fellows who manned the Wanderer, will go with me in her as passengers."

"And for myself."

"Another steamer—the Hernan Cortes—bound for Port-au-Prince, Vera Cruz, and Tampico, on the Gulf of Mexico, will call here before touching Kingston, on the twentieth of this month."

"Good. I shall have a whole week to prosecute my inquiries after him," said I thoughtfully.

"Him! Do you mean the ghost?"

"I mean the strange man we both saw plainly enough."

"But with different eyes," replied Walmer, laughing. "I saw one man certainly, but you saw another."

I felt petulant, but remained silent for some time, while Walmer continued to read the shipping intelligence, in which he felt, of course, a professional interest.

"Now Walmer, there's a good fellow, don't bother with that paper after you have found out all we want to know," said I, tipping the ashes from my cigar; "but listen to me, I should like to talk to you."

"About poor Miss Haywood, of course; but good heavens, what is this I see, here, Haddon?"

"News of her wreck, or of the raft" said I with a groan as I started up.

"News of neither. But see," and pointing with his finger he indicated the shipping intelligence from Jamaica four or five months back, wherein was announced—

"Entered inwards the navis marchant (i. e., merchant ship) Eugenie, with goods and passengers.",

With eyeballs that I felt were starting in their sockets, I read over this announcement again and again.

"Oh, Jack Walmer!" I exclaimed, in a broken voice, "how little do we know how trivial an incident may have a great, a glorious, or a dark and terrible influence over our fortunes, and our future. Had you not, in mere idleness probably, been glancing over this old Spanish paper, we had not seen this."

"True, my dear fellow—but compose yourself. We see her, that before the date of the supposed wreck, a ship called the Eugenie has entered Kingston harbour, Jamaica but it may not be the Eugenie in which we are interested."

"Ah, don't crush my poor hopes so soon."

"The notice says entered inwards; bu does not say from where."

"Alas! true, Walmer, and the name is common enough in all shipping lists."

"There is still hope, my friend."

"But what about the message from the sea?"

"That remains yet to be seen."

Yes, yes though brief, it was circumstantial—so terriblet circumstantial. Let me but get to Jamaica, and then I shall know all—the best of the worst. I shall have a week to wait here and will count every hour of it till the sailing of the Hernan Cortes."

After we had conversed for some time, and canvassed the chances pro and con, and searched over the file of the Balanza Mercantil for more news, till we were weary, we sat smoking in slence by the light of the wax candles.

My mind was turned completely inwards, and I heard neither the distant blare of the Spanish trumpets, nor the sweet notes of the vesper hymn and Walmer, thinking of his chances of a new ship when he saw once more the waters of the Mersey, sat silently watching the pale blue smoke of his cigar, till a sharp and abrupt exclamation that escaped him made me start and look up.

"What is the matter?" I asked. "Did a mosquito sting you?"

"Did you see that?"

"What?"

"Why, the man!"

"What man?"

"The man whose appearance so startled you at the shrine some time ago."

"No, Walmer; I saw no one."

"Well, there at that open window, staring in full at us—at you particularly and undoubtedly—he stood a moment ago, and, by Jove! so far as your description of a pale face, green eyes, red lips, and a general aspect of dampness and unhealthiness go, he is the very man of your weird story."

I sprang out into the verandah, but it was untenanted; there was no one even in the street.

"Hola mozo de cafe!" cried I, and rang the hand-bell furiously.

The startled waiter came; but he had seen no one. We alone were the visitors to-night. The opera house and the Senor Gobernador's ball had apparently absorbed the attention of all idlers.

We could learn nothing more, and so, after paying our bill, we returned to the Hotel del Caballo Blanco; and then, after one more cigar and a glass of sherry, we separated for the night, a litle sadly too, for we knew that we were to part on the morrow, and too probably for ever.

The "weed" failed to sooth me. I tossed restlessly on my pilliw, feverishly awake; and when I did sleep it proved but a species of doze, full of exciting dreams, from which I would start to think over the notice I had seen in the paper, to surmise why the strange being, Neukerque, if he really existed at all, should have been watching me.

More Men for Ministry

"We anticipate that this unification movement will have to an increasing extent the effect of turning the attention of capable young men to the ministry," declared Rev. Principal James Smyth, of Wesleyan College, who has just returned from a trip in the old country. "The fact that the possibilities of the ministerial life are great and for the elevation of the community will now be brought home with increasing emphasis to the minds of intelligent young men." Dr. Smyth stated that already Wesleyan College was feeling the effect of the impetus derived from the joint sessions arrangements which is to come into force next week. "We are sure of an increase in registration of thirty per cent.," he said. The college, he explained, had been thoroughly renovated and overhauled, and several structural alterations had been made to meet in some way the increase demand for dormitory accommodation. This has necessitated the obliteration of the James Ferrier Hall as such, the scene of many convocations. The hall has been partioned off, and now provides a commodious lecture hall and also a library, whilst the old library has been taken over for class purposes. Notwithstanding these modifications, the governors will still be face to face with a housing problem which will have to be settled. Having been absent from the Dominion for some months, Principal Smyth said he was greatly pleased to see how successfully the arrangements for the opening of the joint sessions had been completed, and he was of the opinion that the visit of Bishop BoydCarpenter and Dr. Robt. E. Speer would inaugurate a far-reaching movement in the history of the churches of the Dominion.

The Third Degree

By CHARLES KLEIN
Author of
The Music Master and
The Lion and the Mouse

In writing "The Third Degree" Charles Klein arraigns the sweat-box method of extorting confession of crime, now generally employed by the police of every large city in the country, and by means of which many persons, driven by hypnotic suggestions, confess to crimes of which they are wholly innocent. It is a powerful play, abounding in tense, well-built scenes embracing a group of strong and interesting characters.

ANNIE JEFFRIES

Howard Jeffries, jr., an amiable but weak man, the scion of a wealthy family, has met and married against his father's wishes a young woman of the laboring class, known as Annie Jeffries, the daughter of a convicted criminal who died in jail. The mesalliance has been not only the source of great unhappiness and public humiliation to Jeffries' family, but has been the cause of a complete rupture between father and son. The misery of the situation has driven Howard to drink, and on the night of the tragedy which is to bring him world-wide notoriety as a murderer he stumbles into the rooms of Albert Underwood, a college friend. The latter having failed to play an honest game himself, has just been discovered and cornered as a swindler who has been preying upon society by the sale of bogus antiques. Howard, hard up for money and begging for a loan, continues to drink in Underwood's apartment until he becomes maudlin. A strange bond between the two men is the fact that Underwood had once loved Howard's young step-mother, but she had thrown him over in favor of the richer and older man, Jeffries, Sr. Driven to desperation by pressing debts, by the lack of patronage from Mrs. Jeffries' own circle, and by her complete contempt for his dishonesty, he had threatened to kill himself. She calls there in reply to a threat he has sent, and reaches the apartment shortly after. Howard has fallen into a drunken stupor. Though she pleads with Undrewood to refrain from so rash an act as suicide, she refuses to befriend him, to sacrifice her friends to him, or her self-respect to his overtures. She has scarcely left him when he steps to an inner room and kills himself.

One hour later, Captain Clinton and Sergeant Maloney, of the district detail, confont Howard Jeffries in Underwood's apartment and accuse him of the crime. In the presence of Doctor Bernsein, summoned to examine the body of Underwood, they ply the drink-stupefied brain of Howard with a bombardment of searching questions which gradually undermine his prostestations of innocence, and he breaks down and finally weakly echoes Clinton's statement that he shot Underwood. Clinton knows a woman named Jeffries had called just before the pistol shot was heard, and when Annie Jeffries, Howard's despised young wife, comes to him, Clinton turns the terrible searchlight of his merciless cross-examination upon her. The elevator attendant fails to identify Annie as the woman who did call, and to his chagrin he fails to get a single statement from Annie to incriminate either herself or her husband. Jeffries Sr., the boy's father, not only fails to display a particle of sympathy for his son, but refuses even to defend him.

"I only want to ask you not to desert your son at such a time," Annie pleads when Jeffries faces her; "whatever he may have done to deserve your anger, don't, don't deal him such a blow. You can't realize what it means at a critical moment like this. Even if you only pretend to be friendly with him—you really need to be friends with him, but don't you see what the effect will be if you, his father, publicly refuse him support! Everybody will say the boy is no good; he can't be any good or his father wouldn't go back on him, they'll say—you know what the world is, it will condemn him because you condemn him, and they won't even give him a hearing. Oh, don't, for God's sake, go back on him now—."

"Of course, you realize," Jeffries growled, shutting her off, "that you above all others, are responsible for his present position."

"Responsible—me?" she cries. "Well, all right, I'm responsible, but don't get back at him——"

"I could have forgiven him everything—everything, but—"

"But me—yes, I know—don't you suppose I feel it, too, and don't you suppose it hurts?" The girl turns away despairingly

"Forgive me for speaking plainly," Jeffries continues, "but his marriage with such a woman as you has made it impossible even to consider the question of a reconciliation.

"What have I done?" she begs. "I worked in a factory when I was nine years old, and I've earned my living honestly ever since."

"I repeat—my son's marriage with the daughter of a man who died in prison—"

"Don't hold it up against Howard; he didn't know it when he married me," she explains eagerly; "he never would have known it but for the detectives employed by you to dig up my family history, and the newspapers did the rest—God! that made fine reading for the public, but it finished my career—killed my chances all right."

He offers her assistance, but when she insists upon a public declaration of his son's innocence, he refuses flatly to give his moral support, she scorns his offer of money.

"So his family must desert him," she asserts bitterly, "and his wife must leave; the poor boy must stand absolutely alone in the world and face a trial for his life—is that your idea? Well, it isn't mine, Mr. Jeffries. I won't consent to a divorce; I won't leave America. As for his defence, I'll find someone. I'll go to Richard Brewster myself, and if he refuses I'll go to someone else. There must be some good, noble-hearted lawyer in this big city who'll take up his case. You needn't trouble yourself any more, Mr. Jeffries; we shan't need your help. Thank you very much for the interview. It was very kind of you to listen to me so patiently. Good-morning, sir."

Annie plunges into the difficult task of winning over Brewster, the great constitutional lawyer. She persistently dogs his footsteps, and he persistently refuses the case on the ground that he is the legal adviser of Jeffries, Sr. Somehow, however, his sympathy goes out to her. Her courage, her determination, her loyalty and her devoted love for the accused boy won Brewster's admiration for her character. Jeffries, Sr., and Mrs. Jeffries are already complaining that Annie is going on the stage to earn money to fight the case and thereby bring added notoriety upon the family name. They seemed determined to down the efforts of the girl, and when Brewster finds himself instinctively defending her, Jeffries refuses to be guided by him. He will not set the seal of approval on crime by defending it. But Brewster knows the girl will go to any extreme to help Howard, that devotion such as hers will move insurmountable barriers. All at once, Mrs. Jeffries seems to realize that this very determination is going to result in exposure for her as the woman who practically drove Underwood to his death, and she tells Brewster that she must see Annie.

For the twentieth time, the girl comes to beg Brewster to take the case. "It's your duty to do it, Annie tells him, as Brewster resists her appeal, "your duty to his son and to me, to Mr. Jeffries himself. Why, he is so eaten up with family pride that he can't see the difference between right and wrong."

"No, I'm his lawyer," Brewster interrupts, angrily.

"Then it is your duty to put him right!" she retorts. Brewster laughs impatiently. He knows he cannot resist this woman's appeal much longer. "Let me tell you it's downright wicked of you to refuse," she goes on hurriedly. "You're hurting Howard. Why, when I was hunting around for a lawyer, one of them actually refused to take up the case because he said old Brewster must think Howard guilty, or he'd have taken up the case himself. You and his father are putting the whole world against him, and you don't know it."

Annie Jeffries threatens to go upon the stage to earn money to defend her husband

Brewster offers her money in old Jeffries' name to remain off the stage but she will not concede anything unless he agrees to defend Howard. He presents every argument why he should not take the case, while she preents every argument why he should. It is evident Brewster is yielding, little by little, as he flings out leading questions on the case. When, at last he learns that Howard had made a signed confession against his will, that Doctor Bernstein had asserted that Captain Clinton had used hypnotic influence, and that Howard is practically a hypnotic subject, Brewster surrenders.

"So you think I am afraid of Mr. Jeffries, do you?" he suddenly blurts out. "I'm going to take up your case." Annie fairly leaps to her feet.

"Oh don't pretend to be surprised," Brewster growls. "You know I would. You knew it when you came in that door. My clerks knew it. Everybody knew, but me!" She goes nearer, leaning toward him eagerly. "And please don't thank me," he goes on. "I hate to be thanked for doing what I want to do. And if I didn't want to do it. I wouldn't.

"Well, have it, and be done with it!"

Brewster now plunges into the case and secures all the evidence Annie can present, tending to prove Howard's innocence. The girl is more than astonished when Mrs. Jeffries returns to make conciliatory advances.

"They say you married old Jeffries for his social position," Annie sneers, showing marked antagonism.

"Old Jeffries?" the other woman repeats. "Have you no respect for your husband's father?"

"Not a bit," declares the younger woman, "and I never will have until he acts like a father. I had only one interview with him, and it finished him with me for all time. He ain't a father—he's a fish.

"A fish? But surely you respect his position," Mrs. Jeffries gasps.

"No ma'am. I respect a man because he behaves like a man—not because he livse in a marble palace on Fifth Avenue—"

"But surely, my dear child," the other woman cries out, "you realize that when you married Howard you—to say the least—made a mistake."

Annie, stung by the blunt truth, intimates that Howard, even in his drunken stupor, heard and recognized Mrs. Jeffries' voice the night of the tragedy in Underwood's rooms. Mrs. Jeffries is staggered. Fear of exposure and notoriety takes complete possession of her. When she learns that Doctor Bernstein has asserted that Howard was hypnotized into confession, her agitation is pitiful.

"What's the matter?" Annie begs eagerly, going to her, "you look frightened to death—you—" Mrs. Mrs. Jeffries turns and clings to her.

"Annie, what am I to do? I believed Howard guilty as his father did. I—it was natural—his own confession—every one believed it—I—I had no reason to doubt it," she stumbles on. Underwood must have kept his word and shot himself!" ejaculated Annie, only half comprehending. "Then why didn't you come forward?"

"The disgrace—" began the other feebly and ashamed.

"Disgrace! Good God, disgrace!" Annie cries out.

"It must be done now—ah! if I'd only done it before—" She breaks down at the thought of making a confession. "They'll say that I—God knows what they'll say. My husband will be dragged through the mire of another scandal. His social prestige will, ah, I dare not think of it! My duty is to that poor unfortunate boy, and I mustn't think of myself—"

Brewster joins them, but Mrs. Jeffries shrinks from telling him. He has placed detectives on the trail of the woman who visited Underwood's apartments and he declares he will find her. Unaware that she is the woman he seeks, he faces old Jeffries himself to tell him that he is undertaking the defense, and that their business relations are at an end.

"Well, who's afraid now!" he shouts facing the startled Annie. She tells him she has found the woman he seeks and will bring her to him to make a confession. Brewster is elated. He summons Bernstein, Captain Clinton and Maloney to the library of his house to tell them that Annie has found the woman who can clear up the mystery. Defiantly he confronts Clinton and accuses him of giving an untruthful version of the matter to two sensational newspapers.

"These papers have tried this young man in their columns," Brewster charges angrily, "and found him guilty, thus prejudicing the whole community against him before he comes to trial. In no other country in the civilized world would this be tolerated, save in a country overburdened with freedom!"

"They have live reporters who came to see me for information and got it!" snorts Clinton.

"You have so prejudiced the community against him," goes on the attorney, "that there is scarcely a man who doesn't believe him guilty. If this matter ever comes to trial how can we get an unbiased jury. And, added to this foul injustice you have branded this young man's wife with every stigma that can be put on womanhood! You have hinted that she is the mysterious woman who visited Underwood on that night of the shooting, and openly suggested that she is the probable cause of the crime."

"Well, it's up to you to prove I'm wrong," laughs Clinton, undisturbed.

"In my opinion, Captain Clinton, your direct object is to destroy the value of any evidence she may give in her husband's favor."

"Why, I haven't said a word about her! Huh! And what do I gain?" Clinton growls.

"Advertisement!" thunders Brewster. "Political capital! These same papers speak of you as the greatest living chief, the greatest public official. Oh, you know the political value of that sort of thing as well as I do."

"I can't help what they say about me," explains Clinton, more amiably. "I don't like all this, Mr. Brewster. 'Tain't fair; I ain't on trial."

"No," shouts the other, hotly. "More's the pity!"

The lawyer now confronts Clinton with proof of how he drove several other persons to confess crimes of which they were innocent, and how Howard ceased to be a conscious personality the moment his eye rested on the shining steel barrel of the weapon that killed Underwood. The condition fits in every detail the clinical experiences of the nerve specialists and the medical experiences of the psychologists. The visual captivation of Howard Jeffries' attention makes the whole case complete and clear, both to Brewster and to Bernstein, the physician.

Lawyer Brewster; won over, agrees to defend Howard Jeffries

"A new one, eh!" Clinton laughs, turning to Sergeant Maloney, and ridiculing "visual captivation."

"It's a very old one, Captain Clinton," Brewster asserts quietly, "as old and as cruel as the Spanish Inquisition. In those days they extorted confessions from poor unfortunate subjects by means of physical torture, but your third degree is worse. It's mental torture, but certainly explains these other cases, doesn't it?"

"I don't know that it does—I don't acknowledge—"

"Captain Clinton, whether you acknowledge it or not, I can prove that you obtained these confessions by means of hypnotic suggestions, and that is a greater crime against society than any the state punishes or pays you to prevent."

"I didn't come here to hear about that," Clinton snaps. "You were going to produce the woman who called on Underwood the night of the murder. That is what I came here for—not to have my methods criticised. Where is she?"

Annie joins them. She refuses to disclose the name of the woman they seek, until she comes in and speaks herself. Clinton threatens to arrest the woman the moment she arrives. But when Mrs. Jeffries does come, and she hesitates to tell the whole truth, not even Brewster is keen enough to see that it is she whom they are waiting for.

The suicide's last letter to the woman he loves

"I shall be torn into little bits of shreds," she cries, clinging to Annie when the men have left in disgust "They won't leave anything unsaid, but it's not that I care for myself so much, it's the injustice of it all of the power of evil. This man Underwood never did a good action in all his life, and now even after he is dead he has the power to go on destroying—destroying!" She sinks into a chair, dismayed and stunned, when Annie informs her that Clinton is waiting to arrest her. Her agitation is painful.

"I can't—I can't. Oh, that's too much," she cries. "I've done nothing—nothing—look!" She drags out Underwood's letter. "You can see for yourself," she goes on, "the wretch wrote me—wrote me—frightened me into such a state of mind that I hardly knew what I was doing: And I went to try to prevent him, that's all, Annie, that's all, but do you suppose that any one will believe it?" She breaks down completely, weeping hysterically. Annie goes to her, fascinated by that letter, and lifts it from her hand to look at it.

"This is great for Howard," whispers the girl, staring at the incriminating letter. "But what a mean bound to write such things as that! His kind of fellows breed trouble, don't they? Alive or dead, they breed trouble. . . . . I'm heart-broken. I'd do anything to save you from this public disgrace. But this has got to come out, now, hasn't it?"

"I can't, Annie, I can't go to prison," the other woman sobs. Then she rises and reaches for the letter, but Annie withholds it. "Give me back that letter. Don't ask me to make this sacrifice now." She clings terror-stricken to Annie, begging for the letter, when Clinton returns. At once a strange impulse of courage seizes her, and she bids Annie give the letter to the detective.

At that moment Brewster also returns.

"Excuse me," he says, stepping beside Clinton and snatching the letter from him. "She is my client; I'll take care of this." But Clinton has seen enough to understand that it was addressed to Annie Jeffries, instead of to Mrs. Jeffries, Sr. He has no sooner left with the admonition that he will arrest Annie the moment she leaves the house, when Brewster discovers the truth.

"You are not the woman to whom this letter was addressed," the attorney fairly shouts, as he faces Annie. It is evident now to him that the girl, imbued with false sympathy, means to protect the older woman from exposure. She has nothing to lose. "It is your intention to go on the witness stand and commit perjury! Tell me," demands Brewster, "do you expect me as your counsel to become particeps criminis to this tissue of lies?" The girl stares at him calmly, eye to eye.

"If it can be done, why not?" she answers quietly. "It's a good idea. I'm glad you suggested it. Everybody says I'm the woman who called on Robert Underwood that night; well, that's all right. Let me think so. What difference does it make so long as Howard goes free?"

"Oh, no, don't go, the Captain is waiting for you outside—" and Brewster attempts to detain her.

"I wouldn't keep Captain Clinton waiting for the world. Good-night, Mr. Brewster, and God bless you." And as Annie leaves, Mrs. Jeffries sinks fainting to the floor.

• • • • • • •

Howard is acquitted, but Annie is publicly viewed as the woman who drove Underwood to his death. Though she has assumed the guilt and protected the reputation of Mrs. Jeffries, the family of her young husband try to force her to a divorce. But her husband still believes in her, though he is ignorant of the sacrifice she has made. Believing separation from Howard is the best thing for his welfare, Annie is willing to go, when Berstein interfered, and awakens Howard to a sense of duty toward his courageous and self-sacrificing wife, by telling him the facts.

"You saved my step-mother from disgrace; you spared my father, eh? It was splendid, splendid, Annie!" Howard cries.

"What of the future, Howard?" Annie asks.

"I've thought of that, too," Brews-

Politics in a Civic Address

In explanation of references to the reciprocity pact read into the address presented by Edmonton, Alberta, to the Duke of Connaught when there, the Mayor, George S. Armstrong, over his own signature addressed this letter recently to the Edmonton Journal:

"My attention has been directed to a discussion which is being carried on in the newspapers with reference to the civic address from the city of Edmonton to His Royal Highness the Governor General, read upon the occasion of the visit of his Royal Highness to this city. It would appear that the contents of this address was such as to lead a great many Liberal newspapers to the conclusion that the city of Edmonton is in favor of the reciprocity proposals brought down by the late federal Government. So acrimonious and so widespread has the discussion on this address become that I think it only fitting that there should be some word of explanation from myself.

"When it was ascertained that it would be necessary to present a civic address to His Royal Highness, I cast about for some scholarly person to prepare a suitable address. With one accord such scholarly persons as I approached began to make excuses and finally the choice fell upon certain gentlemen, who have undoubtedly the necessary scholarly qualifications, whatever other qualifications they may lack. The address was prepared and handed to the city office just in time to forward it through the proper channels to Government House at Ottawa. I glanced hastily over it and noticed a reference to 'wider markets,' and in view of the fact that I had just returned from the Panama conference at Calgary, assumed that any reference to an extension of markets referred to the opening of the Panama Canal, the completion of the transcontinental lines of railway, the establishment of the corresponding steamship lines, a general increase in trade with the Far East, and otherwise by means of the Panama Canal.

"If it has been possible to read into this address any endorsation of the policy of the late Government, it is a compliment to the skill of the gentlemen who undertook to prepare the address. If such a reading was intended by the gentlemen who prepared the address, no explanation is further necessary than to state that the address was prepared by Mr. William Rae, solicitor, of Edmonton, a leading supporter of the late minister of the Interior, assisted by Mr. A. G. Mackay, the late leader of the Liberal Opposition in the province of Ontario."

SAW WEST DEVELOP

One of First White Women Born in Manitoba Witnessed Stormy Scenes

Mrs. Mary Ann Clelland, who was one of the first white women born in Manitoba and who died at Treherne, Man., at the age of 76, had in common with all the old timers of the West many varied and stirring experiences during her life time.

She was the daughter of Duncan McRae, the builder of the forts at Upper Fort Garry and Lower Fort Garry for the Hudson's Bay company. Her father also built the old Kildonan Presbyterian church and St. John's cathedral, Winnipeg.

Mrs. Clelland was twice married and was the mother of 14 children, nine of whom are still living. Her first marriage took place in 1862, when she became the wife of Alexander McDonald.

Mrs. Clelland remembered the events of the Metis uprising, known as the first Northwest rebellion. She also witnessed the flood which, caused by the overflowing of the Red river, submerged the whole of the territory on which the city of Winnipeg now stands. She sat on the banks of the river and watched houses and barns being carried away by the flood.

When over sixty years of age Mrs. Clelland walked from Selkirk to Winnipeg to the bedside of her son who had met with an accident. The weather was so bad that horses could not make the trip.

"Thank you, Mr. Brewster, I will." The boy is deeply touched and grateful.

"And you'll forgive me for wanting to leave you, won't you, old girl?"

"Don't call me old girl, Howard, because it's true," she laughs.

USE OF LEFT HAND

Belief Growing That Man Should be Ambidextrous

Why is it that we neglect to use the left hand so much?

Among English-speaking people 97 out of every 100 are right-handed when they reach reach maturity. Out of every 100 such persons 17 are born right-handed, three are born left-handed and the remaining 80 are born without preference as to either hand. Eighty are influenced to become strongly right-handed during early childhood.

No great asset in the world is so neglected as the average left hand. Formerly all the world was ambidextrous. Primitive man had no preference which hand he used. And in various parts of the world efforts are now being made to revive the use of the left hand.

Japan has for many years been teaching two-handedness to the men of its army and in its Public schools. The German Government is following Japan's example. Sir Robert Baden Powell, founder of the Boy Scouts does not consider a man a well-trained soldier unless he can mount equally well on either side of his horse, use the sword, revolver and lance equally well with both hands.

BUILDING BRANCHES

Canadian Roads Have More Mileage in States Than Latter in Canada

The announcement that Newman Erb, president of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad is incorporating a new company to build branches to the Canadian border causes a Canadian writer on railroad matters to note that while the United States Railways have only 1,485 miles of track in the Dominion, the States have been invaded by Canadian roads to the extent of 7,197 miles divided as follows: Canadian Pacific Railway, 5,391 miles; Grand Trunk System, 1,656 miles; Canadian Northern, 170 miles. The writer goes on to add: "The Grand Trunk had a big fight to obtain admission into New England but its efforts were successful. The main purpose of extending that road into the rich traffic territory of New England is, according to the railway's own contentions, to balance their business between the Eastern and Western States. The Grand Trunk's double track main line lies across Canada like an arm, the elbows at Montreal, the forearm across Ontario, the hand upon five fertile and productive States, with Chicago, the great traffic centre, in its palm. The fingers of this hand are the feeders, which will bring through this gateway the traffic of the west, the northwest and the southwest."

BAN ON BIG TRUNKS

Baggagemen Wearied of Handling Them as Big as Small Cottages

Railway baggage agents in Canada and the United States have decided that the long trunk must be banned as far as possible from the baggage car. The Canadian agents have received the sanction of the Dominion Railway Commission to place discriminatory charges on all trunks more than forty-five inches long, and they are waiting for the conceding of permission to the railways of the Republic to do likewise by the United States Railway Commission before putting the new regulations in force in Canada.

For a long time the baggagemen groaned at the constant encroachments of a part of the travelling public in the size of baggage, and consequently on the available space in the baggage car. Their patience became exhausted with the introduction into use of the huge wardrobe trunk.

An Imperial Exhibition

An imperial exhibition, adequately representing all parts of the British Empire, will be held in 1915, if the plans of a committee recently organized in London do not miscarry. The chairman of the committee is Captain Sir Peter Stewart Bam, and it is stated that Lord Strathcona approves of the scheme. Such an exhibition would give the colonies an opportunity to display their manufactures in the United Kingdom.

ENDORSES PRESIDENT

C.M.A. Agrees With Mr. Curry's Reply to Grain Growers.

Head of Manufacturers' Association Tells Farmers' Organization That It Is Not Prepared to Consider a Sweeping Fifty Per Cent. Reduction In Favor of Britain at So Short Notice—Willing to Confer.

Ottawa, Sept. 27.—Without a dissenting voice the Canadian Manufacturers' Association yesterday endorsed the attitude of President Curry as shown in his reply to a telegram from The Grain Growers' Guide asking that the association declare for a duty on British goods equal to only half that on imports from the U. S. President Curry, in addressing the convention, said he thought the message was part of a political game. His reply was:

"The Grain Growers' Guide Winnipeg, Man.:

"The association acknowledges the receipt of the message from The Grain Growers' Guide, dealing with the two questions—first, Canada's loyalty to the Motherland; second, the question of a larger preference on British goods.

"Our association believes that all Canadians, regardless of their calling, are doing what they can to promote the feeling of loyalty and closer union between all parts of the British Empire.

"The attitude of the C. M. A. on the British preference has been set forth in resolutions and adopted after long and careful consideration of the varied interests involved. It believes that no adequate consideration of such a sweeping proposal as that embodied in your telegram, received only this morning in the closing hours of the convention, is possible.

"If any organization or organizations, representative of all productions in this, or both the middle and the farthest West, desire a conference on any matter looking to the advancement of Canada as a whole, or as an integral part of the British Empire, our association will gladly co-operate."

R. S. Gourlay of Toronto is now president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, with C. B. Gordon of Montreal, vice-president. Vice-presidents for the provinces are: Ontario, J. W. Woods, Ottawa; Quebec, D. J. Fraser, Montreal; Manitoba, J. A. Parkhill, Winnipeg; British Columbia, A. O. Flemmerfelt, Vancouver; New Brunswick and P.E.I., S. E. Elkin, St. John; Alberta and Saskatchewan, W. Georgeson, Calgary. Nova Scotia will be chosen later.

As a fitting climax to an eminently successful convention, the C. M. A. held a banquet last night in the Chateau Laurier at which fully 500 were present, among the honored guests being Premier Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. J. D. Hazen, Hon. J. D. Reid, Hon. J. C. Doherty, Hon. A. E. Kemp, John Kirby, jr., president of the American Association of Manufacturers.

The new president, Mr. Gourlay, occupied the chair and acted as toastmaster for the one toast which was to the King.

None of the speeches was lenghty. The Premier paid some sincere compliments to the American people and the American nation and in a splendid oration urged all Canadians not to forget the importance of promoting the ideals of nationhood and character.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made some humorous references to the tariff question and spoke in an appreciative way of the growth of Canadian industries.

Hon. Mr. Hazen advised the manufacturers to establish a Canadian Lloyds and said that the Government would do all that it possibly could to get better marine insurance rates for vessels on the St. Lawrence.

After dealing with facts and figures showing the growth of Canada in the last few years Mr. White appealed to the Canadian manufacturers to recognize the importance of higher education.

Funny Peasant Notions

The astronomical lore of the Russian peasantry of the north, center and south of the empire is limited to a knowledge of the existence of the sun and the moon and stars, of three constellations, of the Milky way, of one planet, of comets, shooting stars and meteors. The sun is to all a mysterious and beneficent being.

The moon, covered with ice and snow, is ever in flight from its brother, the sun. Upon its disk is portrayed the murder of Abel by Cain, the latter being done to death with a pitchfork. The lunar rays are malignant, and evil comes to those who sleep unprotected from them. The horns of the moon afford information as to the weather.

The stars are lamps or candles lighted and extinguished by the Eternal. A shooting star is the soul of one just passed away. Comets are heralds of war and famine. No Russian ever forgets that the Napoleonic war followed the great comet of 1811.—Exchange.

The "PANDORA" Range Solves Cooking and Baking Problems--More Reasons Why

The superiority of the "PANDORA" Oven to that of any other range you can buy has been convincingly proven in a former advertisement. The swelling tide of orders from our agents testifies to that, yet there are many more features—some of them exclusively McClary's—which add to the excellence of the "PANDORA" range.

Illustration No. 1 shows the semi-steel linings of the "PANDORA" Fire-box. These linings are manufactured by a special process. As you see there are five pieces—a front-piece, two ends and two at the back—and fitted into Fire-box without bolts or cement. The surfaces of these linings are smooth—they have great fire-resisting power and are already famous for durability and simplicity.

Illustration No. 1.

Illustration No. 2 shows the grates used in "PANDORA" range and the ease with which they are removed—being made with three bars they are heavier and stronger than the two-bar grate—the teeth are shorter—crush clinkers easier and are less liable to break. Anybody can remove the "PANDORA" semi-steel grates—the operation is simplicity itself. A boy can take out coal grates and insert wood by simply sliding them in and out on their independent grate frame.

Illustration No. 2.

The baking power of an Oven depends largely on Fire-box—it must be built in exact proportion to oven. The Fire-box of the "PANDORA" is deep and wide but not out of proportion—there is a wide surface at top of fire so that it radiates more heat and cooking can be done much quicker over front pot-holes without forcing fire—another apparent reason for our fuel economy claim.

TEN DON'TS FOR A WIFE'S MIRROR

"Put these up in your wife's mirror where she can see them every morning," said the Rev. W. W. Bustard, Rockefeller's pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland in a sermon on "Ten Don'ts for Wives." His don't are:

"Don't marry a man for a living, but for love. Manhood without money is better than money without manhood."

"Don't overdress or underdress; common sense is sometimes better than style.

"A wife with a hobble skirt and a husband with patched trousers make a poor pair. A woman can throw more out of the kitchen window with a spoon than a man can put into the cellar with a shovel.

"Don't think that the way to run a house is to run away from it. It is wrong to go around lecturing other women on how to bring up children while you are neglecting your own.

"Don't tell your troubles to your neighbors. They have enough of their own. Fight it out with your husband if it takes all summer.

"Don't nag. The saloon-keeper is always glad to welcome your husband with a smile.

"Don't try to get more out of a looking-glass than you put into it. Nature's sunshine is better for woman's beauty than man's powder and paints.

"Don't make gamblers and drunkards out of your children by running whist parties for prizes and serving punch with a stick in it.

"Don't forget to tell the truth, especially to the conductor about the age of your child. Honesty is worth more to you and him than a nickel. A boy who is eight years old at home and six on the cars will soon learn other things that are not so.

"Don't forget that home is a woman's kingdom, where she reigns as queen. To be the mother of a man who achieves fame through his sincerity is to be the mother of a prince."

And now the fate of nations and armies is to depend upon a fleet (is that the right word?) of aeroplanes. The nation with the greatest number of skilled aviators and good aeroplanes can, it seems, win out in the next great war. When and where will it all end? After we are all killed off? It looks that way.

NIGHT WATCHMEN IN ROYAL PALACES

Every night the palace at which King George is sleeping is patrolled by night-watchmen, who pass along the corridors, inspecting doors and windows. These watchmen wear carpet slippers to deaden the sounds of their footfalls, and are specially trained to know exactly what to do in case of fire. In addition to the night patrol, there is always a sentry on duty outside the chamber in which the King sleeps.

King Alfonso of Spain is guarded at night by specially selected soldiers, who take charge of the keys of all palace doors each night. These men pledge themselves that the doors shall not be unlocked until daybreak, and no one is allowed to enter or leave the palace until night is over. The guards sleep outside the Royal bedchamber, so that no one may enter during the night.

King Albert of Belgium is another carefully guarded monarch whom no one may disturb once night has set in. Soldiers patrol the corridors of the King's palace, and his special valet locks himself in the King's antechamber, which no other person is allowed to enter. The valet is forbidden to open either door until morning under penalty of death.

The Czar of Russia, the closest guarded of any monarch, is protected at night by several companies of soldiers, including Englishmen, members of the secret police, and a body of Cossacks. The various companies work independently of one another.

The Sultan of Turkey is nightly watched over by a very large number of soldiers and councillors, who remain within the neighborhood of his bedroom until morning. The Sultan changes his sleeping apartments oftener than any other monarch. He has the choice of two-score bed-chambers, and he visits many of these in turn throughout the year.

The Pope is guarded by an attendant who is able to watch the welfare of his master through a spy-hole in the wall of his bedchamber, so that the Pope is always under observation.

MONEY FOR A BRIDE

Emperor of Austria's Recognition of Military Aviator's Feats.

Lieut. von Blashke, the military aviator, has been presented by the Austrian Emperor with $5,000 to enable him to marry the lady of his choice.

The Lieutenant, who made a world's record by ascending over 13,000 feet with a passenger in his aeroplane, was engaged to a Fraulein von Csakay for some time, but she did not possess the $12,500 dowry necessary under the regulations for an Austrian lieutenant's bride.

Recently, however, the lieutenant had made $7,500 himself towards this sum from prizes in flying competitions, and, in recognition of his brilliant flights, the Emperor gave him the balance out of his privy purse.

Baby Sea Elephant

London has a sea elephant which is an object of interest to zoologists throughout the world, because this is one of the few members of this branch of the elephant family in captivity. The sea elephant is not really a member of the elephant fraternity, being a seal and called after the big land pachyderm because of its tremendous size. The London acquisition is only a babe, but it appears to be in the best of health and will doubtless grow to the average size of its kind, some of which have been known to reach a total length of 20 feet, with proportionate girth. King George was donor of the animal to the Zoological Gardens, his Majesty having received it from the director of the South African Museum at Capetown. The sea elephant is an inhabitant of the seas of the southern hemisphere, and this particular specimen came from the Crozet Islands in the Antarctic.

CHARLES T. RUSSELL
Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

CHRIST DIED TO SAVE SINNERS

The Redeemer Is Yet to Become the Great Deliverer of the World.

Montreal, Sept. 22.—Pastor Russell gave two addresses here to-day, one on "BEYOND THE GRAVE," the other on "St. Paul's Gospel."

America's Ubiquitous Preacher comes quite frequently to the Provinces, and the immense audiences that everywhere greet him are proof that the True Gospel which he preaches has to some extent found a responsive chord in thousands of Canadian hearts.

We report the Pastor's second address, which was from the text, "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you; * * * how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day." (I. Corinthians xv, 1-4.) So complete a statement of the Gospel in so few words is wonderful. Without inspiration St. Paul, like the rest of us, would have said more—would have said too much. Let us analyze the text and see what it contains.

First of all, it teaches that we are sinners and that our sins are beyond our own power to wash away or eradicate. This is a fundamental, important matter. Failure to realize that we are imperfect, born in sin, "shapen in inquity," has hindered many from seeing the necessity for a Redeemer, and therefore from accepting Jesus as their Saviour. To say that we are sinners implies a time when righteousness prevailed in our ancestry. We do not speak of brutes as sinners, because the Scriptures say that "sin is transgression of the Law," and God would not give a law to a brute, which could not comprehend that law. Similarly the perfection of our first parents was implied in this term, because God would not give a law to a being not sufficiently intelligent and capable of keeping that law. Thus this very simple statement, We are sinners, implies the thought of a fall, just as the Bible declares.

For Christ to die for our sins implies that our sins had a death penalty attached to them. This again implies that at the time that death penalty was imposed it was a just one, because a just God would not punish unjustly. The justice of a death penalty implies a high degree of intelligence on the part of the sinner and that he was in a condition in which he would not have needed to die if he had not sinned.

This statement, "that Christ died for our sins," further implies that Christ was not of the fallen race, for had He been a sinner, how could He have died for sinners—how could His death have been of any profit or advantage to them? Thus our text teaches that Jesus was indeed "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," that God sent His Only Begotten Son into the world that we might not perish but have everlasting life. The whole force and import of this text is that human salvation is secured by the death of Christ and His resurrection. Were we not sinners and dying we would have needed no one to die for us. Were it not to rescue us from sin and from death God would not have sent His Son.

Here let us notice the force of the word death in our text. It did not mean life in torment to our Redeemer, for the Scriptures bear clear testimony, not only that He died, but that He arose from the dead on the third day. And the Scriptures declare that He was not alive anywhere during those three days. This contradicts the thought of some who claim that He was the Heavenly Father Himself and could not die—that He merely got out of the body on the cross and let the body die and afterwards pretended that He had died, when He said, "I am He that liveth, and was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore."—Rev. i, 18.

We have a genuine Redemption, a real Sacrifice, and the Redeemer is yet to become the Great Deliverer of the world, whose deliverance from death by resurrection cost the Redeemer His life. As by a man came death, by the Man Christ Jesus comes the resurrection of the dead; "for as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive—every man in his own order."—I. Corinthians xv, 21-23.

Great importance attaches to the fact that the One who died for our sins did not remain dead. He descended into Hell—Sheol, Hades, the tomb—but His soul was not left there, as the Scriptures declare. God the Father raised Him from the dead on the third day. The importance of Christ's resurrection is many-fold. It shows that He did not die a sinner, but, on the contrary, maintained His relationship with the Father—"holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." It shows that He kept the Law; otherwise He would have remained dead like the remainder of the Jews.

More then this, the fact that He was raised from the dead to a higher nature, a spirit being, "partaker of the Divine nature," proves that His sacrificial death was very pleasing and acceptable in the Father's sight; hence His high reward. And all this proves that the Heavenly Father's great promise to Abraham is in process of fulfilment. Our Lord's resurrection to the plane of glory demonstrates to us the greatness of this Seed of Abraham, and His preparation for the great work foretold—the blessing of all the families of the earth.

From this viewpoint we see the importance of His death and of His resurrection, co-related. The death was necessary as man's Redemption price. His exaltation to power and great glory was necessary for man's deliverance from sin and death. Here we have, then, the Gospel which St. Paul received and which he, in turn, dispensed—the true Gospel of which he was not ashamed. As he wrote to the brethren at Rome, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth—to the Jew first and also to the Greek."

As a great oak may be said to be in an acorn, so the great Gospel Message may be said to be in our text, as St. Paul declares. Every time we look at it, it seems a little larger and a little more beautiful than before. We can almost see it grow—not that the Gospel is growing, for it is the same that God purposed in Himself before the foundation of the world. It is our appreciation of the Gospel that grows, in proportion as we grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Divine Plan and in the Spirit of our Lord; for without His Spirit, the Holy Spirit, to enlighten our understanding and to enable us to appreciate the testimonies of the Word, we would not be able to comprehend "the deep things of God."

How plainly the Apostle states this, saying, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, * * * neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned; * * * but God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."—I. Cor. ii, 14,10.

Pastor Russell's reputation for faithfulness to the Divine Word, his courage to speak the Truth in Love, and his power to hold vast audiences in rapt attention for hours has spread everywhere. Newspapers to the number of 1,500—in the States, in Great Britain and in the Dominion—which are publishing his sermons and also his comments on the International Sunday School Lessons are zealous in their support of his excellent services and are praying still more power to his voice and pen.

We have merely seen the root of the Gospel, continued Pastor Russell, as it centres in the promise made to Abraham and in the redemptive work accomplished by our Saviour. In Romans xi, 16-24 St. Paul uses the illustration of an olive tree, and declares the branches of the tree to be the members of the Body of Christ, which is the Church. From these branches will come abundant fruitage by and by, of "olive oil" for the light of the World.

St. Paul points out that the natural Israelites were the natural branches and that the Jews therefore had the first right, privilege and opportunity of becoming the members of the Body of Christ, the Church. As a matter of fact, all privilege and opportunity was excluded from the Gentiles until Israel's time of favor was complete—three and a half years after the cross.

During those years the Lord's providence so blessed the Jews that they were all brought in contact with the Truth under most favorable conditions. We remember that thousands were converted and blessed at Pentecost and other thousands a little later on. We may be sure that every worthy branch in that tree was accepted of the Lord—every "Israelite indeed in whom was no guile." St. Paul tells us that then the unbelieving Jews, the natural branches, were all broken off, separated from the Divine favor in which they had previously been. Then began the work of calling, preparing and engrafting Gentiles, whom the Apostle represents as of a wild olive tree.

This work of engrafting the Gentiles into the Jewish stock and making them fellow-heirs with the Jews of the original Divine promise made to Abraham has progressed for now nearly nineteen centuries. This is the same Gospel, because it all springs from the same glorious promise. It was "good tidings" when as a message it was given to Abraham. Its value was intensified when God made oath to its certainty of fulfilment. The fulfilment began in Jesus, continued through the Jewish disciples, and now has accumulated a considerable number of the Gentiles—probably the foreordained number is completed. When the Elect number shall have been tested and proven and shall have been accepted in the resurrection change and passed beyond the veil—then this most wonderful feature of the Gospel will have been accomplished.

The completion of Spiritual Israel will be followed by the establishment of Messiah's Kingdom and the beginning of the blessing of all the families of the earth. We are to distinguish here between the Church and the families of the earth, for the Church in their consecration and acceptance of the Lord and begetting of the Holy Spirit become members of the new nation. They are no longer humans. As St. Paul declares, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you" (Romans viii, 9). The Church not only receives eternal life, but that life is on a higher plane—as spirit beings. Theirs will be glory, honor and immortality, in joint-heirship with their Lord.

Amongst the families of the earth to be blessed by Messiah's Kingdom the first place will be given to Natural Israel. In all things the Jew was to have pre-eminence, for this is the Divine arrangement. As the Jew got the opportunity of becoming members of the Body of Christ before it was offered to the Gentiles, so Fleshly Israel will be the first nation to be granted the opportunities and blessings of Restitution to human perfection under Messiah's Kingdom. Provision has already been made for this. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the Prophets of old have the testimony that they pleased God and that they are to have a better resurrection than the ordinary. They cannot be members of the Bride of Christ, nor sharers in the spiritual privileges and the Heavenly Kingdom. They lived before the High Calling, before the Heavenly Calling was opened. Jesus was the Captain, Leader and Forerunner in this, and His joint-heirs all follow Him. None of them preceded Him.

But the Messianic Kingdom, itself spiritual, will need earthly Representatives, and they are provided for in those Ancient Worthies. Their testing having been completed, they will be raised perfect human beings, as Adam was in his perfection, and Jesus in His while on earth. Their superior powers of mind and body will soon grasp all the wonderful things which Divine providence has arranged for since their day, and they will be quite masters of the situation. Naturally, perfect men will be Princes amongst imperfect ones. But these will hold the title from the Great Messiah. This is prophetically stated: "Instead of Thy fathers shall be Thy children, whom Thou (Messiah) shalt make Princes in all the earth."—Psalm xlv, 16.

Assuredly the new order of things will appeal to the Jew first. His lessons under the Law will make him specially amenable to the new condition of things, for during that thousand years all mankind will be judged, not according to their faith entirely, but specially according to their works. Faith will be easy when knowledge will be so complete and so general. Good works will be gradually more and more possible as they shall be blessed and restored to perfection under the Kingdom arrangements.

The Scriptures intimate that the world at that time will be in a dejected condition. The great "Time of Trouble" with which Messiah's Kingdom will be inaugurated will cut a deep swath in earthly hopes and ambitions, and all nations will be in the condition to desire the Messianic Government, and then, "The desire of all nations shall come."—Hag. ii, 7.

The Scriptures prophetically foretell that as the Divine blessings of Messiah's Kingdom go more and more to Israelites, other nations will take note of this and be inclined to entreat a share of the Divine favors, saying, "Come, let us go up to the mountain (Kingdom) of the Lord's house; He will teach us of His ways and we will walk in His paths." The whole world, every nation, people, kindred, tongue, needs just the blessings of healing and life eternal which the Messianic Kingdom is to offer them. And the terms will not be impossible, but quite the reverse. Messiah is to be, not only a Great King to rule, but also a Great Priest—and the Church with Him is promised to be a Royal Priesthood.

However, God will not accept any other nation than Israel. All of His blessings are to go to the Seed of Abraham. And as Abraham's Seed spiritual in the resurrection becomes "as the stars of heaven," so his seed natural will increase to fill the whole earth, and are compared to "the sand of the seashore." Nor will this be an arbitrary matter. It means the greatest good to all. Note that the first members of Spiritual Israel came from Natural Israel, and that the Gentiles were grafted in. Similarly the first fruits of the world will be Natural Israel, but all nations will have the privilege and opportunity of being engrafted into and becoming members of Israel—much after the same manner that people of all nationalities coming to American Canada may enjoy citizenship here under certain Covenant conditions. The New Covenant conditions inaugurated with Israel (Jer. xxxi, 31-34) will thus be open to all mankind, because all will be permitted to become members of Israel. Thus, as the Scriptures prophesy, Abraham eventually will be "a father of many nations."—Romans iv, 17.

Eventually, all the willing and obedient will be glad to enter into this New Covenant relationship with God through Christ and to be counted members of "the seed of Abraham." Eventually, all others will be destroyed in the Second Death, so that then all the earth will be blessed as Abraham's seed. Here we have the Gospel in its fulness, expanded from the original promise made to Abraham, and taking in all the features of Divine grace and mercy and eventuating in the most wonderful blessings possible for the human mind to imagine! And all this centres in the work of Jesus, in His death for our sins and in His resurrection for our deliverance and the execution of the Gospel Program. Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift! Hallelujah, what a Gospel! Hallelujah, what a Saviour! Hallelujah, what a God!

Due Warning.

Rotorua has been laughing over the wording of a notice that has been placed by the Public Works Department on some of the electric wire posts on the road to Okere, in New Zealand.

Some time ago a Maori youth, who seemed to have a misguided taste for experimenting, threw a long piece of cable over the electric wires that run to Rotorua from the power station at the Okere Falls.

The town was at once plunged in darkness for two or three hours until the mischief had been located.

The dusky and youthful experimenter was carpeted in the court and fined for his scientific enthusiasm, and the department put up this notice:

"Any person climbing the electric light poles or damaging the insulators are liable to a fatal shock and a penalty of £10."

—To illustrate how one's own idiosyncrasies may effect one's testimony, Mr. Borden, the Canadian Premier, who has been on a visit to this country, tells a story of a man who asked about the habits of one of his friends.

"Doesn't Jock Anderson get a wee bit drunk sometimes?" was the question.

"Drunk!" was the other's reply. "Man the last time I was with Jock he got that drunk I couldna' see him!"—Pearson's London Weekly.

The Russian electorate has been called upon to choose a new Douma, the fourth in the new history of the country. The first and second were short-lived, the members being more given to talk and the promulgation of wild ideas that to work. The third had a lengthy existence, during much of which but little was heard of it outside of Russia, which fact is probably to its credit. It means much in the way of a change to substitute a legislature of elected representatives for a council selected by an autocrat, and the progress that is slowly made may be the surest in the end. The great thing is that there shall be no going backward.

• BANFF ALBERTA •

THE MANY ATTRACTIONS OF THE CANADIAN ROCKIES

Tourists bathing in the Natural Basin, Banff, Alta.

IMAGINE playing golf on a links in the midst of the Canadian Rocky Mountains, five thousand feet above sea level. Sounds almost too good to be true does'nt it? And yet that is what everyone who travels through the Canadian Rockies this summer has the opportunity of doing. At Banff, Alberta in the very midst of the big Canadian National Park, there has recently been opened a new golf course, which is just about the most picturesque links on the continent.

Golf enthusiasts who have played the game on the ordinary country golf links will find the sport at Banff even more fascinating. Here the environments are such as no country club could hope to duplicate. Nestling among the mountains, completely surrounded by gigantic peaks, and with the glacier-fed Bow River flowing throughout its length, the course is superbly located, Nature making it not only one of the highest courses on the American continent, but also one of surpassing beauty.

The links are reached from the Banff Sprngs hotel by a foot-path which leads directly to the club-house. The house is nicely furnished and provided with all conveniences.

The difficulties that had to be met in building this new course can be realized when it is stated that in preparing for the advent of the golf enthusiast, no less than between five and six thousand trees had to be cut down or removed. Besides this considerable leveling had to be done at the points where the greens are located and altogether the work was a big one.

Now, however, with the links in first class condition, they are proving one of the most popular attractions at Banff. When you come to look into the matter, that is saying a good deal, because Banff has probably more than her share of attractions, that please and amuse. Everybody, of course, who comes to Banff does not play golf, and even the greatest admirers of the game cannot play it all the time, so Banff has taken everybody's welfare to heart and has provided many other attractions. The bathing facilities, for instance, are unsurpassed. Behind the hotel is Sulphur Mountain containing the hot springs that would have brought fame to Banff even if it had not been in so picturesque a locality. The story goes that the engineers, when they were at work on the railway, observed a cloud of smoke continually arising from high up on one of the neighboring mountains. They investigated this curious phenomenon and discovered a great cave through which the smoke emerged. A rope was procured and one of their number was lowered down into the cave, afterwards reporting the presence of a great pool of hot water. The cave itself is covered in by a natural roof of rock and is fed by water from the springs still higher up the mountains. It is not much larger than a goodsized room, but the curious deposits of sulphur about its roof make it well worth a visit. The water at the cave has a temperature of 114.3 degrees Fahrenheit and possesses wonderful curative properties.

Of even greater attractiveness than the cave baths, however are those operated in connection with the Banff Springs Hotel. Here there has been opened this season what is probably the finest bathing establishment on the continent, situated at an altitude of over 5,000 feet above sea level. It is built in the form of three terraces, the outer and lower one of which forms the great semi-circular cold water swimming pool, which is one hundred and twenty feet in diameter and varies from three to five feet in depth. The second terrace contains the sheltered warm sulphur-water pool which is supplied by piping the water direct from the Hot Springs on Sulphur Mountain at the rate of 1,165 gallons per hour. This pool measures 23 feet by 80 feet and varies from 4 feet to 5 feet in depth. The water in the pool is maintained at a temperature of 110 degrees Fahrenheit—about five degrees lower than at the source of supply—by the continuous flow of water. The bathing space is enclosed by a screen of plate glass between concrete posts, to protect the bathers against the breezes.

In connection with and adjoining the sulphur plunge, there are ten shower baths, and complete Turkish and Russian baths finished in marble and fitted with all the latest plumbing devices. One hundred dressing rooms are provided at this level and on the third terrace there are the cooling rooms, private sulphur baths, and rooms for the Swedish masseur and his attendants who were brought from Europe to take charge of the bathing establishment.

The roof of the third terrace forms a wide promenade upon which chairs are placed to enable guests to obtain both a view of the bathers below and of the whole magnificent panorama of the mountains. The whole structure is of reinforced concrete and the pools are lined throughout with white glazed tile, and lighted by electricity so that they may be used at night as well as by day.

The pools were designed by Painter and Swales the well known Canadian architects who contrived to give the swimming pools the unique effect of a garden, the only one of its kind on the continent.

The Canadian Rockies are unique for their abnormally high percentage of sunny days, their corresponding minimum of rain, and the entire absence of foggy or misty weather and dew. From the 1st of June to the 1st of October there is practically no rain, except passing showers of short duration, preceded and succeeded by bright sunshine. The climate of Banff is Alpine in character, but it is distinctly drier than the Swiss Alps and has the advantage of having more sunshine. Yet it is seldom ever sultry. This charming town bears a strong resemblance to St. Moritz in the upper Engadine part of Switzerland and the Paracelsus Spring at St Moritz has the same elevation as the main spring at Banff.

Very shortly Banff will be a stop-over point on one of the most magnificent automobile highways in the world. This road is now being built by the Dominion Government, the British Columbian Government and the C. P. R. It starts at Calgary, Alberta, and runs through the mountains to Banff. Near Banff, at Castle, it branches off through the beautiful Vermillion Pass to connect with a road already in existence running from Golden to Cranbrook on the Crow's Nest Pass line of the C. P. R. This section of the road traverses the beautiful and rich Windermere valley, one of British Columbia's best fruit growing districts. From Cranbrook there is a road to MacLeod, from which point there is a good trail to Calgary, making a six hundred mile automobile circuit, which when completed will be unsurpassed as a motor highway.

Of the shorter drives "the Loop" is a beautiful roadway around the Bow Valley, in full view of the superb Bow Falls—distance about seven miles—skirting the base of Mount Rundle, to the banks of the Bow Rver. Another pretty drive is along the north side of the Vermillion lakes, as far west as Edith Pass, from where a beautiful and entirely new view of Mount Edith is obtained.

Tunnel Mountain affords another delightful drive to the visitor. A spiral roadway has been cut through a charming wood and from the summit the views up and down the valley of the Bow are superb.

Of the longer trails that have been opened, probably the most important is that up Brewster Creek, at the head of which is a huge glacier. This is the nearest glacier to Banff, and can be made in a day by pack train. A day could be spent here and another making the return journey to Banff, giving an ideal three day trip

For those who wish to go still further from the railway, there is a new trail from Lake Minnewanka, west through Aylmer Pass and down the Ghost River, returning to the Lake by way of the Devil's Gap. There is also another magnificent trail from the Spray Lakes to Kananaskis Loke. The first of these trips require about a week while two weeks can be profitably spent on the second. Both trails open up magnificent country for the fishermen and sportsman.

During the summer season another source of amusement for visitors at Banff are the animal cages near the museum. Here in their steel barred enclosures are fine specimens of bear, mountain lions, deer and all the other big game found in the Canadian Rockies. The Museum itself contains exhibits of the game and also of the fish and bird life to be found within the Park. Indian relics are shown and also pieces of Indian workmanship of more than ordinary interest.

A band of buffalo, relics of the countless thousands which once ruled the central plains of North America, occupy an enclosure near the town. With them are a number of elk and moose, together with other specimens of the wild life of the Northern plains and woods.

For the botanical student the flora of the district present a wide field for research. Here the profusion and variety of wild flowers is greater than in any other part of the continent. Almost every known species of wild flower can be found within a short distance of the Banff Springs Hotel, making the district one good to live in,—a district where "edelweiss and heather, forget-me-nots and wood anemones, blue-bells and ferns convert all the valleys into flower gardens."

In the Aviary there are some two hundred specimens of the bird life of the continent. Of the pheasant family alone there are many varieties, among them being Japanese Golden, Jaupanese Copper, Mongolians, English Silver, English Ringnecks, Prince of Wales, Rieves, Lady Amherst and Common. The eagle cage is also a great attraction to all visitors. Many other specimens of birds are to be found in the Park, and they are all interesting.

Good opportunities for boating are had on the Vermilion lakes, and on Lake Minnewanka. These are lovely stretches of water and they give the visitor unrivalled views of the giants that surround them. From Banff to Lake Minnewanka is nine miles, the drive skirting Cascade Mountain and following Devil's Head River until the precipitous sides of Devil's Head Canyon are crosed by a rustic bridge. The lake is sixteen miles long, with a width of from one to two miles. Here a launch can be chartered by visitors. This interesting trip usually occupies three hours. Fishing tackle, boats, etc., may be procured, this being a favorite resort for anglers. A cluster of Hoodoos (natural concrete pillars), and the Devil's Gap, on the way to Ghost River, are among the points of interest in this locality.

Truly Banff was born amidst wonderful environments. The very fact that it is in the centre of the Canadian National Rocky Park is evidence of the scenic splendor of its location. This is the largest National playground in the world and contains more than 6,000 square miles of territory within which far flung boundaries there is contained the continent's most magnificent scenery. It is a region unparalleled for majestic mountain ranges, immense ice caps and glaciers, falls and cacades.

Everywhere in the mountain the visitor finds himself in strange surroundings, and over all stand the majestic snow-tipped peak, ever extending a challenge to the newcomer to scale the granite barrier and view a new world, with its endless combinations of light and shade, parks and passes and gorges, always pervaded by a clear electric atmosphere, which is a revelation to persons accustomed to living in the close, damp air of the lower altitudes,

PRACTICAL JOKER MUST AID HIS VICTIM'S FAMILY

BUFFALO, Sept. 28.—Warren House, who caused the death of Valentine Ludowski, a fellow workman, a few months ago while playing a practical joke will begin at once the serving of an unusual sentence imposed by Justice Marcus in the State Supreme Court here. The sentence places House in charge of a probation officer for an indefinite period and compels him to pay $3 a week to ward the support of the family of the dead man until the children are able to support their mother.

It is estimated that the fine will cover a period of about ten years, amounting in all to more than $1,500. House turned a compressed air hose on his fellow workman in fun. The pressure was so great that Ludowski was instantly killed.

May Escape Death Penalty

William A. Ferguson, slayer of H. Herbert, the Canadian immigration inspector on a Windsor ferry boat, even though he be convicted of the crime for which he is now on trial before the United States District Court in Deteroit, will not go to the gallows, if the recommendation made in open court by United States District Attorney Webster carries any weight.

After Ferguson had taken the stand in his own behalf, Friday afternoon, and made an impassionate plea for his life, and in the course of which he declared he had been been hounded out of Canada by Inspector Herbert and other immigration officials, the prisoner declared: 'I killed Herbert. I killed him because I was worked up to a fever. He had it on me because I was a criple. I shot him down because he hounded me and followed me. I wish he was alive now, and I am sorry I killed him.'

Following the statement of Ferguson, District Attorney Webster addressed the court at considerable length. In the course of his remarks he expressed the opinion that even should he be found guilty by the jury Ferguson should not receive more severe punishment than a live sentence.

Taking the Bull By the Horns

Lindsay Daily Warden.

One of the most remarkable feats of daring and chivalrous spirit was exhibited by two Lindsay heroes at Bobcaygeon on Wednesday last, which will have the effect of making their names a household word and their memory never permitted to rest in oblivion. Who are those heroes that have come to the front and walked through iron and brass gates and walls adamant, which one must invariably break down to gain notoriety?

Our Lindsay heroes did not have to do this, but achieved fame just as easily as a man would carve his way into the centre of a Christmas pie.

Messrs. Douglas Sinclair, carriage maker, and John Jackson, tax collecter, are the men. Both those gentlemen were seated on the verandah of the Thompson House in Bobcaygeon when their attention was directed to three head of Hereford cattle floundering around in the canal near the locks. There was no time to lose, both men rushing to the water. The daring Dougal grabbed a pike-pole and the tax-collector a large rope. Two of the animals were quickly secured, Mr. Jackson placing a nose around their necks. After a series of loud whoops a crowd gathered and drew the animals on terra firma in an exhausted condition.

During the consternation and excitement the third animal, a prize bull, which weighed over 2,000 pounds was noticed by Mr. Sinclair in an exhausted condition and about to drown on the opposite side; not waiting to consider his own safety the heroic carriage-maker rushed around via the locks, jumped on the animals back and steered him to the opposite bank, hanging on by his horns.

Mr. Sinclair was only wet to the knees by his daring escapade, and he and the obvine were taken on shore in a fatigued condition.

Mr. Jackson who had a thrilling experience in Lindsay locks on one occasion knew how it was with the cattle, thus his anxiety to save the animals.

It is supposed that some recognition of their services will be made by the humane society or the owner of the cattle. Mr. Jos. Hickson, reeve of Manvers, and Mr. John Carnew, can give testimony concerning the above event.

WHY A HORSE IS A PHARISEE

A Swansea Sunday school teacher recently asked her class for a definiteion of the word Pharisee. One bright little chap answered "I expect he's a horse." "Why, what makes you think that?" asked the teacher much surprised. "Well, because the Lord said 'Whoa unto him,' " was the reply.

A New York Policeman Murders And Suicides

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—Anthony Debs the policeman who arrested Harry K. Thaw after the latter killed Stanford White on the Madison Square Garden roof, shot and probably mortally injured his wife late last night, sent bullets into the thighs of two small girls and then committed suicide.

The shooting took place in front of the Debs home on the upper West Side after a quarrel, the outcome of which was the serving of a subpoena upon Debs, summoning him to appear in the Domestic Relations Court.

Debs had two small children, who were not at home at the time of the shooting.

Mr. Breadner Goes To New Position

Leaves Manufacturers to Become Head of Appraisal Branch of Customs.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—With the conclusion of the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association here yesterday, Mr. R. W. Breadner's work for the association as its tariff expert officially ends. He will assume on Monday next his new position as head of the appraisal branch of the Federal Customs Department. He returns to the Government service after three years of valuable work for the Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Breadner is admittedly one of the very best tafiff authorities in Canada. It is understood he will be practically the Government's chief adviser in regard to the details of tariff revision. It is expected that Mr. Breadner will succeed Mr. John McDougald, the present Commissioner of Customs, who has held the position for the past sixteen years, and who may be expected to retire on superannuation before long.

Western Wheat Slow in Moving

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—Late as was last years' Western wheat crop in moving, this year's official figures which are received at the Trade and Commerce Department. On September 22nd, 1911, there were at the terminal elevators 3,396,353 bushels of 6,434,254 bushels. This year on September 20th there was only about half this amount at the terminals. There were 2,387,287 bushels of wheat and 1,267,492 bushels of oats, a total of 3,655,319.

Rebels Rob American

JUAREZ, Mexico.—Rebels raided the camp of William Orr, a contractor employed by the Mexican Northwestern Railway, Friday, and forced the American to give over his payroll, amounting to about $12,000, and about $10,000 in commissary supplies. Reports of the raid, which occurred Wednesday, were received here to-day. One report says the American contractor was injured by the rebels.

Orr's camp is situated at Cumbre in the Casas Grandes district, south of Pearson. Federal troops guarding the camp were removed a few days before the rebel raid, Orr reports. All is reported quiet at Pearson, but the rebels remain within a few miles of the town, evidently awaiting reinforcements.

Observe New Comet

GENEVA, N. Y.—An observation of the southern comet, recently discovered by Astronomer Gale in Australia, was secured Friday night by Dr. William R. Brooks, professor of astronomy at Hobart College. The comet is in the constellation Libra near the star Beta; right ascension 15 hours 7 minutes 30 seconds; declination south 10 degrees 50 minutes, with northeasterly motion. The comet is visible through small telescopes, and is improving in position for observation but not in brightness.

TORONTO THE HEADQUARTERS OF MISS WYLIE, MILITANT

MONTREAL, Sept. 28.—Within two days Miss Wylie, the English militant suffragette, who arrived in Montral yesterday will vist Toronto, where she will likely make her headquarters, while conducting her campaign in the Dominion. She would make no announcement of her plans to The News correspondent this morning, but stated she was in correspondence with a number of Torontonians whose names she would not disclose and her plans would be based on the answers she received to these letters.

Miss Wylie hopes to visit every part of the Dominion accompanying delegations to the various Governments, asking for the suffrage, but she may possibly have to return to England before she completes her tour. Her movements are uncertain and she has as yet no idea of how long she will remain in Canada. She expects to address a number of public meetings while here, but these will be after a series of drawing room meetings held in each town at which the sympathy and aid of the local women will be enlisted.

Mystery About The Death of a Mennonite Girl

WINNIPEG, Sept. 28.—The death on Monday of Miss A. Elias, at a Mennonite village near Gretna, was reported this morning to the Attorney-General's Department by Bishop Zacharias. The Bishop went to conduct the funeral service, when he discovered that the girl's body had been taken from a well, and refused to proceed with the service, as satisfactory explanations were not forthcoming. An inquest has been ordered.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Sept. 28.—Charged with embezzling $36,000 from the Grand Lodge of the Rhode Island branch of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, J. Irving Davis, Grand Recorder of the Lodge, and well known throughout the country in fraternal circles, was arrested here last night.

While the warrant charges Davis with embezzling $36,000, the police say that the deficiency will amount more than that. Delayed payment to beneficiaries led to the discovery of the alleged shortage. Robert V. Bachellor, Grand Master of the Order, stated that it was expected the order would continue business.

Poisoned a Well With Paris Green

BROCKVILLE, Sept. 29.—One of the most dastardly acts ever perpetrated in this section of the country occurred a couple of night ago when the well of Mr. John H. Polk, at Portland, was liberally sprinkled with Paris green.

Mrs. Polk was first to go to the well the next morning, and to her great surprise she found the pump filled with poison. Mr. Polk was at the well for a pitcher of water the night before at ten o'clock, and all was right at that time. Fortunately no person got water from it before daylight. No clue has been obtained as to the perpetrator of the deed.

Penny Postage to Cuba

A convention has been concluded between Canada and Cuba by which there will in future be a two-cent postage rate between the two countries. In the past the rate has been five cents.

The agreement between the two countries was ratified at a cabinet council meeting to-day. Outside of Hayti there is a two-cent rate between Canada and practically all of the North American continent. United States, Mexico, British West Indies and Cuba are now included in the cheap rate.

Little Boy Drowned In Unused Quarry

GUELPH, Sept. 29.—Eddie, the 6 year old boy of Mr. and Mrs. James Kelleher, Oliver Street, was the victim of a drowning accident here this afternoon. The little fellow left the house about 4.30 and was not missed by his parents until after five o'clock. A search was instituted all around the neighborhood for him, but no trace was found, and it was decided to examine a pond of water just back of the house, which was formerly a quarry. The water in this is about four feet deep, and after searching a short time the boy was seen in the water a few feet from the bank by his father and a neighbor. He was pulled out and every effort made to resuscitate him, but he was doubtless dead before being taken from the water. The coroner was promptly notified and an inquest will be held tomorrow afternoon. There was not protection around the house or around the pond. The parents are prostrated.

Attempt to Poison A Becker Witness

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—The reported mysterious poisoning of Mrs. Dora Gilbert, former wife of the gambler Herman Rosenthal, received official confirmation to-day in a letter addressed to Mayor Gaynor by Dr. L. L. R. Hibbe, who was called in to treat the woman. He gives no details of her illness, but avers that he was denied admittance to Bellevue Hospital after she had been removed there and demands an immediate investigation.

"The fact that he woman is an important witness for District Attorney Whitman in the Becker case," says the letter, "makes my request for an immediate and thorough investigation an imperative nesessity. Coming along so soon after the notorious police intimidation of other witnesses reflects not only upon the hospital authorities but seems to be another intimation that minor members of your administration are endeavoring to protect Becker in every possible way."

Mrs. Gilbert has recovered.

MUST LEAVE COUNTRY OR GO TO PENITENTIARY

STRATFORD, Sept. 29—Six weeks to get out of Canada, or go to the penitentiary, and in addition pay the costs of prosecution, was the sentence imposed here to-day by Judge Barron on Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bugg, recently found guilty by His Honor of child neglect in allowing little Jimmie Bugg to become a living skeleton, apparently for the want of nourishment. In imposing the sentence the judge said to Mrs. Bugg: "On the whole, your treatment of the child was inhuman, and neither you nor your husband will have anything to do with him in the future." His Honor frankly stated that he did not believe a word of the stepmother's evidence to the effect that she had treated the lad as well as she knew how. He warned both parents that if at the end of the six weeks time they are in Canada they will not escape the law. Little Jimmie is nearly ready to leave the hospital, and will be placed in a foster home in due time.

LEAVES HOUSE TO BECOME SHERIFF

BERLIN, Ont., Sept. 29.—Dr. H. G. Lackner, M.P.P., North Waterloo, has received notification from the Provincial Government of his appointment to the office of Sheriff of Waterloo County, to succeed John Metz, who died in October of last year. He assumes the office on October 1st.

The appointment will mean his resignation from the Legislature and the naming of a successor by the Conservative party. There is little likelihood of the Liberals contesting the seat.

Dr. Lackner has represented North Waterloo in the Legislature for five consecutive tirms.

WHOLE FAMILY LOST

William McCaffrey of Toronto and Four Others Are Drowned.

Employe of General Electric Co. Goes Fishing at Omemee With His Mother, His Wife, and Two Children and All Lose Their Lives When Canoe Upsets—Boy Had Caught a Fish Which Was Still on His Line.

Toronto, Sept. 30.—Five persons lost their lives Saturday afternoon, when a 16-foot canoe capsized in Pigeon Creek, near Omemee, Ont. An entire family was wiped out—William J. McCaffrey, his wife, son and daughter of 16 South Drive, Rosedale, Toronto, and his mother, Mrs. Charles McCaffrey of Omemee. No one witnessed what must have been a terrible struggle for life. An overturned canoe, gradually sinking, found in the middle of the creek, where the water was about 10 feet deep, revealed the truth. A few hours later the body of William McCaffrey was located and a fishing line, which was wound about his wrist, was being jerked by a 14-pound lunge, showing that the direct cause of the fatality was the "strike" of the fish on the troll, which evidently excited the canoeists. All the bodies were recovered Sunday after they had been grappled for for many hours by a number of villagers. The bodies of Mrs. McCaffrey and her daughter were tangled in the line.

The following is the death toll:

William J. McCaffrey, aged 39 years, assistant manager of the supply department of the Canadian General Electric Co., whose home is 16 South Drive, Rosedale.

Mrs. Charles McCaffrey, his mother, aged about 65 years, of Omemee, near Peterboro, Ont.

Maxine McCaffrey, his daughter, aged 13 years.

Howard McCaffrey, his son, aged 8 years.

Early Sunday morning a number of friends went up the creek to search for the bodies. After some hours of work the remains of the two women were found, and then the little boy, Howard, and then William McCaffrey. Later in the morning the body of Maxine, the little girl, was discovered. The five bodies were taken back to the homestead, from which the funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon to the village cemetery.

For twenty years William J. McCaffrey had been employed by the Canadian General Electric Co., and the vacancy he leaves is the assistant general managership of the supply department. Every year he had spent his vacation with his family at the old homestead, where his father and mother live. This was in Omemee, a village with about 500 inhabitants, situated on Pigeon Creek, a small and peaceful watercourse, which runs for about six or so miles northward into Sturgean Lake. Omemee is on the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, about half-way between Lindsay and Peterboro, and is considered an ideal camping spot for holidayers. This year Mr. McCaffery did not enjoy a vacation, but on Friday night he decided to take his family for their annual visit to his native town. They intended to stay for just the week-end, but, if the fishing was good, would extend the visit until Tuesday night.

The news of the drowning was received in Toronto at 1.30 Sunday morning by long-distance telephone. Miss Salter, a half-sister of Mrs. William McCaffrey, a nurse at the Hospital for Sick Children, College street, was in attendance upon her mother, who is dying at 16 South Drive. No information was given the sick woman then, it being feared that the shock would result in her death. However, upon the advice of a physician, she was told last night, and although broken down, will survive the severe blow.

Mr. McCaffrey was prominent in many circles in Toronto. He had a long connection with the Board of Trade. He was a warden of St. Peter's Anglican Church, Carlton and Bleecker streets, and had held other offices in the church for a number of years. He was a great cricket enthusiast. He was also a member of the Orange order.

Great Interest in Manitoba Election

OTTAWAstrbQ vbg vbg vbg vbgbmm

A great deal of interest is being displayed in Ottawa political circles in the Macdonal bye-election. The issue is being fought out on the question of reciprocity and anti-reciprocity. W. D Stpales had a majority of 169 though his nominanl majority was 400. The general opinion at Ottawa is that the Conservative candidate, Alex. Morrison, will win easily, though it is admitted the fight is a hard one. The Federal bye-election in the County of Richelieu, it is expected, will be held shortly. A. D. Morgan, Montreal, who was the Conservative candidate last year, will again run. J. P. Cardin was elected a year ago, but was unseated. His majority was large and as the seat is tradionally Liberal, it is considered doubtful whether the Conservatives will win.

Twenty-Seven Brides Come From Auld Scotland

MONTREAL, Sept. 28.—Cupid was a passenger on the Allan liner this week. In fact, his presence was evident in over a score of cases, but the steamship company made no effort to collect his fare, nor did the customs officials at the port make him undergo an examination. His presence was welcomed by everyone and added materially to the excitement incidental to a boat docking. Twenty-seven rosy cheeked lassies fra Auld Scotia, all prospective brides, and all comely and charming, was the material on which Dan Cupid worked on his passage across the Atlantic. The twenty-seven maidens all came out to get married, their prospective husbands having preceded them to the country by several months, and in some cases by some years. The girls were going to all parts of the Dominion, some as far west as Vancouver. Three or four impatient and ardent swains were at the dock and as soon as possible took the girls of their choice up town and were married. The rest started on their long journey across the continent, but felt that with their arrival in Canada their goal was almost in sight.

One "Hesperian bride" was wedded last night. Miss Cecilia Johnson, of Edinburgh, became the wife of James Seton Gray, of Milwaukee. The ceremony was conducted at 436 Claremont avenue, Westmount, the residence of the groom's brother, Prof. Gray, of the McGill faculty of engineering. Rev. Dr. Clark, pastor of St. Andrews Presbyterian church, Westmount, conducted the ceremony.

Altogether there were four Hesperian brides married here. The Allan Line is pleased with the success of its latest Hesperian venture.

$8,000 for Freedom

Reynolds Forsbrey, jail breaker, was arraigned in a New York court Friday to plead to indictments charging murder in the first degree and attempted murder. He refused to plead without counsel and the case went over.

The man whom the police consider the most dangerous criminal in New York in recent years, being the only one who ever escaped from an isolated cell in the Tombs, answered the court's questions pleasantly and showed little concern.

According to unconfirmed reports emanating from the district attorney's office this afternoon Forsbrey did not make his sensation break from the Tombs unaided. It was said that information had been laid before the authorities implicating a keeper in a plot to free the prisoner for a consideration, estimated at $8,000. One keeper at the Tombs was dismissed for carlesness after the escape.

Plot to Murder President Taft?

The police of Pittsburg, Pa., Friday, called in some of the men most active in the colony of "Reds" on the North Side in an endeavor to ascertain the cause of the suicide of Carlos Ceznar, who jumped in front of a Pennsylvanian Railroad train on Wednesday night.

It was reported about police headquarters today that Ceznar was commissioned to go to Altoona on Wednesday to kill President Taft. The police learned that the Reds had a meeting last Sunday at the Cobbler's shop of "Nihilist Frank," in Spring Garden avenue. It is said lots were drawn and it fell to Ceznar to strike the great blow for "the cause."

During Monday and Tuesday Ceznar worked at the Natrona Mills, but was morose and would not speak to his companions. On Wednesday he bought a ticket for Altoona at the Union depot. He left the train at East Liberty station and walked east to Spruce street where he threw himself in front of the train.

Police Superintendent McQuade will not discuss the case except to say there is some mystery about the cause that prompted Ceznar to kill himself. Among detectives the theory is held that Ceznar lost his nerve after starting for Altoona, and fearing to return and face the "Reds," in desperation killed himself.

Adventuress of Manner Mild

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—Posing as a daughter of Governor Foss, of Massachusetts, as the wife of various wealthy men, and acting other bold roles, a girl in her early twenties swindled Boston and New York firms of several thousand dollars' worth of finery according to a confession which the police declare the young woman made yesterday.

When she first fell into their hands she told the police she was Frances Hollender, child of wealthy parents, and 'a pupil in a Baltimore convent.' Her 'baby stare' bespoke the role she assumed, but according to the alleged confession she was better acquainted with the reform school at Lancaster Mass., than with the Baltimore convent and had a string of half a dozen alisses.

The West Side police staion looked like the dressing room of an opera house when the detectives spread out fifty expensive gowns of Fifth Avenue modeling they had discovered at a well known hotel where the girl had been staying. Upon the discovery of her great stores of gowns, she is alleged to have made her confession.

Only six months ago, she said, she was released on probation from a term in the Lancaster reform school for the larceny from a Boston jeweller of two diamond pendants which she secured by representing herself as one of the twin daughters of Governor Foss. She ran away from the probation officers, served as a nurse in the State Hospital at Seward, R. I., for a time, had a love affair with a Harvard student, and came to New York. Representing herself as the wife of a wealthy resident of Lynn, Mass., she obtained several expensive gowns from a Fifth Avenue establishment, and in similar manner obtained finery from other fashion houses.

Australia's Good Move

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Now that Australia is arranging to have Australian plays staged in London, we are looking forward to a similar step from Canada. It is a curious thing that while you can, at various seasons of the year, witness the plays of almost every country, a purely Canadian play is never seen. We are familiar with American plays; and Japanese, Russian, French, Italian and Yiddish entertainments are fairly frequent. I understand that prominent Canadian ladies in London are interesting themselves in this matter.

Diver Made a Find

MONTREAL, Sept. 28.—After giving up for lost a bag containing $44.25 which she dropped last winter in the Lachine Canal, Miss Bracken was delighted to-day to receive back her property. It was found by the divers who repaired the damaged lock gates in the Lachine Canal. The canal was carefully searched for the purse at the time it was dropped. The divers brought up a gold watch and a diamond ring.

Another Wizard

The Matin of Paris, announces that a system of wireless telegraphy without sparks has been invented by a young French engineer, Julien Bethenod, one of the favorite pupils of the late Henri Poincaire, and a personal friend of the wireless pioneer, Branley. By Bethond's method it is said to be possible to establish wirless stations in close proximity to one another without the messages being confused, and it is also possible to exchange communications ten times faster than by submarine cables, and ten times less expensively.

Women After High Market Prices

WINNIPEG, Sept. 29.—A sample vegetable market being operated here this week at the Industrial Bureau under the management of a committee of women in an endeavor to reduce the prices charged at the general market and by retailers throughout the city has already had the effect of bringing down the prices on vegetables from one-third to one-half in many cases. The producers are bringing the goods directly to the market and selling directly to the consumers. It is claimed an understanding exists at the general market for keeping prices at high market

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

"THE RED ROSE."

Comic Opera Delights Large Audience at Princess.

Toronto Telegram.

"The Red Rose," which burst into bloom at the Princess last evening, proved to be one of those entertaining substitutes which kind theatrical managers provide for the tired business man so that he may not have to flee to a nervous sanitarium. And to judge from the continuous quake that shook a capacity audience the weary souls went home much refreshed. Most gorgeous were the costumes and scenery, and though the music lacked originality and obtained no gallery whistle producer, it was sufficiently catching to keep the glittering kleidoscope moving in a pleasing manner. The entire company could dance, and the chorus was almost a record-breaker for the volume of sound produced. The feminine portion of it almost lived up to the glowing description of advance notices for a "girl show," and they were sufficiently young to cause no regrets that you were robbing their grandchildren of their society or care. Their decidedly vivacious dancing, however, almost makes one understand certain peevish youths who, when reproached by fond mammas for developing a love of burlesque, say "They are just the kind of shows you see at the best theatre in town." As for the "comic" portion of the opera it consisted of sort of an international congress of comedians. And, horrors! a German headed the list. There was a silly ass Englishman (cleverly played by Charles M. Clear), a German (done by Walter H. Catlett), a Yankee (Maurice Dary), and his partner, W. H. Conley, who was like no human species yet discovered, though the recent scientific gathering at Dundee might have acclaimed him the missing link. He was suffering from nerves, he informed his audience in a voice that gave you all the sensation of being at the dentist with an elephant power drill in your mouth. Their collection of jokes would have put an audience lover in the shade, while the usual bag of comedy tricks got spilled out. Why the German stumbled once and almost tripped, whereat some intelligent citizens developed more mirth than a Pinero epigram could have produced.

But then, of course, we are just displaying our ignorance by finding fault with lack of humor in a comic opera. How can its producers be expected to buy real comedy when it costs so much to clothe those dazzling chorus girls. And such clothes! The names of their creators took up almost as much space on the programmes as the names of the cast. And it was quite right, for to some they were the stars of the production. The gorgeous raiment began with the clever star, Zoe Barnett, whose role was done by Valeska Suratt last year, and it looked as if she had succeeded Valeska's bizarre taste, if not to her bewildering wordrobe itself. After Zoe had changed seven times and worn everything from a demure white satin bridal gown to a chiffon harem skirt, our head got dizzy and we stopped the count. As for the pony ballet, they ran the entire gamut of feminine wearing apparel, and had to resort to union suits in the last act. Do not faint, gentle reader. They were of a bright emerald green and that helped some.

What story there was involved round the rescue from the Parisian Bohemia by Baron Lablane of his lost daughter, her return when he declares it was a mistake, and her subsequent rescue when all comes straight. There was the inevitable burlesque of the "Merry Widow" waltz and a cafe scene that tries to outrival Maxim's. To the latter place comes the two gay old Yankee boys, who have to supply the fun at he old game of being real giddy in gayest Paree. Laura Jaffray as Gyp and Charlotte Philbrick both gave valuable asistance to the star whose rose to the requirements of a very heavy role.

BARS BARMAIDS, and CLUBS ETHEL JOY, CLUB BARMAID.

Bars are universal—in every civilized quarter of the globe man erects bars, but we are not out this time to give a disquisition upon bars, though it might be well to here remark that in THE NEW BARMAID musical comedy (the entire All-English Company) which is visiting our City on Monday, Oct. 7th., at Griffins Opera House. We are introduced to the best side of the English bar question. English people insist that the presence of barmaids in English bars acts as a check upon the drinking proclities of some clubmen, and if this is so, then Ethel Joy, the new Barmaid at the Hewlett's Bohemian Club represents a good sample of the present day London barmaid.

Fresh and bright, piquant and amusing, full of fun as an egg is full of nutriment, this musical play now on its first visit to North America is bound to charm and to captivate. That famous English comedian, Alexander Loftus, who produced THE NEW BARMAID at the Avenue Theatre, London W., and has ever since been associated with it, will himself play his original part of "Bertie White", supported by a company and chorus of over 40 people—all English. The company carries its own musical director in the shape of Mr. Basil Horsefall, a gifted young composer and chef d'orchestra.

WEDDING BELLS.

THOMAS—SHEEHAN

The marriage took place in St. Michael's Church this morning at nine o'clock of Miss Lillian Sheehan, eldest daughter of the late Stephen Sheehan, Belleville, Ont., to Mr. Frederick Thomas of Watkins, N. Miss Lena Bradden, cousin of the bride, was maid of honor, also wearing cream serge with lace and white hat with willow plume. Mr. Connell assisted the groom. The happy couple left after wedding breakfast, for a trip west. On their return to the city, on Wednesday, a reception will be held, after which they will leave for their future home in Watkins. N. NOTES FROM THE 34TH CAMP

Despite the inclement weather many spectators yesterday visited the tented field at the Agricultural Park where the 34th Field Battery are under canvas. The continuous weather has to a certain extent militated against regular practice, but it is anticipated that in the remainder days for camp, drill will not be interrupted. The men are however contended and have acclimated themselves to the conditions which surround them.

Sectional drill is held daily and actual firing of the guns started today and will be continued, daily.

PINE ST SCHOOL OPENED

The new public school erected on Pine Street, was this morning opened for the reception of pupils, who came in such numbers that every room was filled, and it is probable that an additional teacher will have to be secured. A number of the members of the Board of Education were present at the opening. Mr. Mr. Wilkins is principal of the school.

BARN AND CONTENTS BURNED

At about 8 o'clock last evening a bright reflection in the north eastern part of the city denoted a fire was in progress. It proved to be a barn belonging to Mr. Bennett a yeoman who resides in the 2nd concession of Thurlow. The building which contained many tons of hay was with the contents destroyed. The loss is considerable. Tramps are thought to be responsible for the fire.

MISAPPROPRIATION

Mrs. Mary Wilson of this city, was this morning before Magistrate Masson convicted of appropriating to her own use a pocket book the porperty of Mrs. Lizzie Bailey. As the money had all been returned Mrs. Wilson was allowed her liberty by paying all costs amounting to $8, and entering into a bond for good behaviour in the future. Mr. Anderson for the Crown and Mr. Carnew for the accused.

LUMBER MILL BURNED

Saturday night Messrs. Gill & Fortune who own and operate a large planing mill in the town of Trenton, were heavy losers in a fire which destroyed a large frame building in which was stored thousands of feet of planed lumber. In the building was about 30,000 feet of hardwood flooring, besides other valuable material. When seen the flames had gained considerable heedway, and all efforts by the fire brigade to check the devouring element proved futile. The loss will amount to several thousands of dollars, partially covered by insurance. How the fire originated is not known.

DWELLING DAMAGED BY FIRE

At 7.15 this morning the fire brigade was called to Mr. W. H. Baker's residence on Albion Sreet, to extinguished a blaze which had broken out in the kitchen. The rear part of the house was considerably damaged before the fire was put out. The blaze it is thought, originated from a stove which had been lighted for some time. The greater portion of Mr. Baker's household effects were removed from the burning building. His loss is not as serious one. The building is owned by Mr. Timothy Daly of this city and his loss is covered by insurance.

CONSIGNED TO THE TOMB

Saturday afternoon the remains of the late Mr. Robert Knox were consigned to the tomb, the burial taking place at the Massassaga cemetery in Prince Edward County. At the family residence and the grave, services were conducted by the Rev. R. N. Adams of this city. Many relatives and friends attended the obsequies. The bearers were Messrs D. A. Walker, T. Nightingale, L. Conklin, S. S. Potter, H. and J. R. Anderson.

AN INDIAN SENT TO JAIL

Hiram Barnhart who is a member of the Mohawk band of Indians, on the reservation near Deseronto, was arrested on Saturday for being drunk, an offence an Indian should not be guilty of. Hiram this morning before Magistrate Masson pleaded guilty to the charge alleging he procured the liquor from a man who was driving long the road, and whom he did not know. A fine of $10 and $2.50 cost was imposed or 30 days in jail. The red man went to jail.

CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

Thomas Harding, who is a comparative stranger in the city, was this afternoon on trial before Magistrate Masson on a charge of assaulting Mr. James Doyle. The latter conducts a boarding house, and Harding was boarding at the place. It is alleged that the accused whilst in an intoxicated condition, committed a most aggravated assault upon Doyle, who is a rather aged man. Harding pleaded guilty through his counsel, Mr. Carnew. Mr. Anderson represented the Crown.

FIRE DETECTED IN STORE

The timely discovering of a small blaze at 2.20 on Sunday morning in the grocery store of Mr. C. Hiltons situated on Front Street averted what might have been a serious blaze. Two young men detected smoke issuing from the front door and notified Sergt. Naphin who was in the vicinity at the time. The police officer broke open the door and the blaze was extinguished without calling out the brigade. It orginated near a register on the floor. Damage done as trifling.

Physiologists Disagree

There are few persons who realize how greatly physiologists are at variance in their estimate of the actual work performed by the Liver. While all agree that it is the largest and one of the very important glands of the body, when it comes to the question of the actual work performed, there seems to be a wide diversity of opinion.

Practically all are agreed, however, that the principal work of the Liver is the separation of such materials contained in the body as might exert a poisonous influence upon the body unless thrown off.

Rexall Liver Salts has been produced with the idea of assisting the torpid Liver to perform its proper functions in a proper manner, and the success which has attended the treatment leads us to recommend this preparation to you.

If your case is not properly benefitted, we will refund all money you may have paid us for the remedy.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Through a misprint on the cover of the Star Course Prospectus it may be inferred that the permanent plan for the Course opens Oct. 1st. It should have read October 16th.

Yesterday afternoon there were present over twenty five young men nearly all of whom were strangers, who came from homes of which the aggregate distance totaled over 20,000 miles. The fellows gathered in the spacious parlor with its large, cheerful fire place. Besides pianola selections many old favorite hymns were sung. The General Secretary, who had charge of the service reviewed many interesting incidents of how the hymns had proven such a blessing to many people. At the close of the service, the Strangers Fellowship Club entertained the strangers at luncheon after which each guest introduced himself, stating where he was from and his business in the city. The president of the club, Mr. Stephen Burrows, then gave hearty welcome, to the splendid building of the Association which stood as the practical testimony of the liberality of the citizens of Belleville. In bringing the function to a close, that the men might attend evening services, Mr. Hess urged all to cultivate the habit of writing home to their parents at least once a week regularly.

Before dismissing a hearty vote of thanks was rendered by the guests to the Ladies' Auxiliary which had arranged the tea. Mrs. George Carruth has charge of this part of the Auxiliary's assistance to the Association.

Prisoner Takes His Own Life

Samuel Chapdelaine, of Waterville, Que., who was last week sentenced to two years in the penitentiary, committed suicide in his cell in the Sherbrooke jail at 7.10 this evening.

Chapdelaine felt his position keenly and was terribly downcast all day yesterday. He had supper tonight and when the cook went to gather up the dishes at six o'clock he found him (the prisoner) praying. At 7.10 he was found hanging to the door of his cell, lifeless. The inquest was held tonight and a verdict returned in accordance with the facts.

Canada's Export Trade

In view of existing conditions it seems doubtful that the Canadian agricultural and industrial producer will spend much time in studying the export market just now for two reasons. Prosperity is general from coast to coast, and the demands of the home market are greater from year to year. This subject was mentioned at the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at Ottawa last week. The Commercial Intelligence Committee of that body thought that the probability was that export trade will continue to be regarded as a problem reserved for future consideration.

In the ten-year period from 1900 to 1910, the annual output of our factories rose from $481,000,000 to $1,164,000,000, an increase of $688,000,000. As against this, however, our exports of manufactures increased during the same period by only $16,000,000, while the exports of all classes of Canadian products increased by only $110,000,000, or less than one-sixth of the increased production of manufactured goods alone.

Meantime our imports entered for consumption have increased greatly. In the last ten years they have jumped from $202,000,000 to $547,000,000, with predictions that for the current fiscal year they will far exceed the $600,000,000 mark.

The indifference of the average Canadian manufacturer toward export trade is not denied. The Commercial Committee of the Manufacturers' Association reported that inquiries from abroad for Canadian merchandise have been distributed to members by the score, only to be met in most cases with the response that the parties addressed were too busy with domestic orders even to quote on foreign business. Trade commissioners in different centres have written; complaining of the apathy of Canadian business houses towards the openings they bring to their attention. The committee recently volunteered to make up sets of catalogues from firms that were prepared to export, and to send one set to each of the trade commissioners abroad, but only 75 members of 3,000 thought it worth while to take advantage of the offer.

There is a danger of losing a chance to get into foreign markets. That danger is certainly likely to remain so long as prosperity remains, the purchasing power of Canada is high and the absorption strength of the home markets is increasing.

Canada and the Panama

An article in the Monetary Times by Fred. W. Field draws interesting attention to the probability that the opening of the Panama Canal will stimulate the development of the coal deposits of Alberta and British Columbia. Capital and enterprise have not by any means exploited, to the fullest degree, the coal fields of those provinces. There is scope for much expansion of the industry.

The effect of the new waterway on the coal trade may be considered in two divisions—first, in regard to coaling stations, and second, in regard to the general trade. Proposals have already been made to improve the harbor accommodation at Kingston, Jamaica, and at St. Thomas in the Danish West Indies, and to establish coaling stations there in preparation for the great tonnage of shipping which the new route from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the Pacific to the Atlantic is expected to attract. The United States are considering the establishment of coaling stations on the Canal itself. and the prices at which it will be possible to supply bunkers. The coaling facilities will be as important as the amount of the tolls charged in defining the commercial future of the canal, and encouraging traffic.

China and Its Loan

If China has not made progress, in the Western sense, as rapidly as has Japan, it is at least learning something of the intricacies of modern finance. For months past, it has endeavored to negotiate a large loan. Six important nations, especially Great Britain and the United States, desired to have a finger in the financial chop suey. A loan to be advanced by six powers was practically arranged, but the Chinese balked somewhat at the conditions attached. An American promoter, Wendell Jackson, then apparently saw an opening to act as a medium. An agreement for a loan of £10,000,000 was signed by the Chinese Minister in London and by a representative of Lloyds' Bank, which was to finance the transaction. If finally consummated, the loan will run for forty years at 5 per cent., and will be secured by unpledged Chinese revenue, chiefly the salt duty, which is to be controlled by the British Inspector-General of Customs in case of default. Expenditure of the proceeds is to be free of foreign control and supervision.

It seems to be a fact that the average man, who has given the average amount of thought to the question of woman suffrage will say, as Woodrow Wilson says, that he is "on the fence." Nevertheless, the time appears to be coming when men must decide this question, supported as it is by many influential and intellectual women, and made more appealing by the undoubted fact that women are rapidly entering as never before into the spheres of action with which Federal legislation has so much to do.

The remarks of the Toronto suffragists who met Premier Borden regarding Theodore Roosevelt are worthy of more than passing interest. They gave their unqualified opinion that Roosevelt's adoption of a woman suffrage plank was a bid for the votes of the million and a quarter femal voters at Presidential elections. This shows two things. It shows that the women were keen enough to spot the politicians behind his platform, and also that they did not wish to make cheap capital out of Roosevelt's action, shutting their eyes [illegible] obvious [illegible] of it.

CHARLES T. RUSSELL
Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

SAVED BY FAITH, NOT BY WORKS

God's Arrangement for the Church's Redemption—Necessity for Faith.

Halifax, N.S., Sept. 29.—Pastor Russell is here to address a Convention of Bible Students assembled from New England and the Provinces. We report one of his discourses from the text, "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God" (Ephesians ii, 8). He said in part:

The relationship between faith and works in the matter of the Church's salvation has been a question of controversy for centuries. However, this, like other subjects once mysterious, yields to the clearer light of our day. Now we perceive the importance of both faith and works and the relationship they bear to each other. Faith is the all-important factor in God's sight, because in our fallen condition we cannot do perfect works and because God cannot consistently accept and reward any but perfect works.

God's arrangement for us, therefore, in Christ, is that He will judge us, not according to our works, but according to our faith. Nevertheless, good works are recognized as a demonstration of our faith. So surely as we have the proper faith in God and His promises it will manifest itself in works, even though we cannot do perfectly.

So St. James points out that Abraham was not justified without works, but was required to demonstrate his faith by his works, even though they were not perfect works and could not have justified him.

If we call this Gospel Age the Age of faith, none could misunderstand us to mean that works are now wholly ignored, but rather that works take the secondary place. Likewise, when we say that the coming Age of the Messianic Kingdom will be an Age of works, none should understand us as meaning that faith will then be ignored. Works will then be the basis of the Lord's judgment in dealing with the world. Thus we read that they shall be "judged every man according to his works." (Revelation xxii, 12.) Judgment according to works, yet not without faith, may perhaps appeal to some of our minds as being the more reasonable, the more just form of judgment. However, when we come to note the difference between the conditions of the trial of the Church of this Age and the future trial of the world during the Messianic reign, we can see readily the reason for the different basis of judgment.

In the present time the Lord is selecting from the world a special class to be the Bride of Christ, and He properly makes faith the test. (1) Because in the Divine estimation faith in God is one of the grandest elements of character, the one most essential to such as will be entrusted with high positions and authority in the Kingdom. (2) Because the judgment according to faith meets the various conditions of the present time as a judgment according to works would not do.

The Lord calls now for such as will walk in the "narrow way," demonstrating that if they had perfect bodies as Jesus' body was perfect they would be perfect in works as well as in faith.

In the next Age, the Divine plan will not be the selection of self-sacrificing ones for the Kingdom, but the blessing of humanity with an opportunity to return to the full perfection of human nature. They will be required merely to demonstrate their loyalty to God in the use of their lives faithfully in the obedience of His Law. The reward for the sacrificers of this Age is to be glory, honor and immortality, the Divine nature and joint-heirship with the Lord Jesus in His Kingdom. The reward for obedience to be given in the next Age will be human perfection in the image and likeness of God, with all the earthly inheritance originally given to Adam—lost through sin and redeemed by the merit of Christ's sacrifice. And since the objective points of the two Ages are different, so will be their methods and conditions.

We have already considered the conditions of the Church's trial; let us next notice how different will be the conditions of the world's trial, according to works, in the coming Age. The reign of Satan and sin now prevalent is to give way; Satan is to be bound for a thousand years that he may deceive the nations no more for that period. The darkness, ignorance, superstition and misunderstanding of God and His plans, etc., which have prevailed for the last six thousand years will pass away. Instead, "the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His beams." The darkness of ignorance, superstition, etc., which at the present time covers the earth, and gross darkness the heathen, makes faith in the present time a very precious thing indeed which only comparatively few can or will exercise.

But, when the shadows and darkness shall flee away, when the True Light shall shine, when "the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep"—then faith will not be at its present premium, because it will then be very easy to exercise faith. Moreover, while perfect works are impossible now, because of our imperfections of the flesh, perfect works will gradually become possible to the world in the next Age, because as they progress in the light and in obedience to the laws of that Kingdom they will gradually be recovering the perfection of the flesh, mental, moral and physical. And as they recover these powers correspondingly more and better works will be required each year, each century, of their experience.

Finally, before the glorious Epoch shall conclude—before Messiah shall turn over the Kingdom to Justice—all the willing and obedient will have come to full perfection and hence to full capacity for perfect works and God will demand them; they will therefore be the standard or test in the world's trial Day—"They shall be judged every man according to his works." In both these Judgments we see Justice and Mercy harmoniously working together in the interests of those on trial, the differences between the two operations being such merely as adapt them to the conditions of the individuals on trial.

A glance at our text shows that it relates to the present Age and not to the period of Messiah Kingdom. The Apostle is addressing those called to joint-heirship in the Kingdom, of whom he says in the context that "God in mercy hath quickened us with Christ and raised us up together to a heavenly station in Christ Jesus, that in the Ages to come we might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." Without question these words apply to the Elect Church, and with equal certainty they cannot properly be applied to the non-elect world, whose opportunity for blessing belongs to the next Age and will come to them from the Father, through the Son, by the Church in glory.

Our text contains another statement which has been the cause of much dispute, namely, the one which declares that "we are saved by grace through faith, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God." It is easy to understand the forepart of this statement, that we are saved by grace, and easy also to understand the last part, namely, that we are not saved by works and that, therefore, none of us has any ground for boasting in our salvation. "By nature we were children of wrath, even as others." We were under the sentence of death and could not recover ourselves from that condition. Whatever, therefore, should be done for us to help us out of our condemnation and fallen condition would necessarily be of grace, ad also of God. Now we come to the more difficult part of our text.

How shall we understand the suggestion that the faith is not of ourselves but is the gift of God? Surely God does not exercise faith for us, and surely also He does not develop the faith in us by some miraculous power, for in either of these cases the saints would be merely machines, reacting as acted upon. This would neither develop nor prove character, nor in any wise fit and prepare us for the glorious work to which we have been called. How is it God's gift?

There is one view of this statement which we believe clears it of all mystery and makes it entirely harmonious with Divine Justice and our responsibility. It is this:

Faith is possible only where there is a basis of knowledge; in proportion, therefore, as Divine providence grants us knowledge of Himself and of His great Plan, in that proportion is it possible for us to exercise faith in that Plan, and by our endeavors to demonstrate the strength and sincerity of our faith. While it is true that our knowledge depends in large measure upon our application in the study of the Divine Word—upon our use of the means and opportunities placed within our reach by a kind Providence—nevertheless there are millions of our race who

The big American universities began their football season Saturday under the new rules. The change from three downs to four in which to gain ten yards is almost certain to result in big scores. At least, that is the opinoin of nearly every football expert and the reason for the change. It will be interesting to watch the results on Monday.

Hamilton, Sept. 28.—The Tigers expect that Coach Hume, a former Yale player, will take charge of the team at once. They will work out about twenty men in the game with Ottawa College on Saturday.

"Red" Dixon will play for the 'Varsity Old Boys and Wilson with Dundas that day, and their services will not be available. The back division will be: Mallett, "Kid" Smith, McKelvey and Stowe, all of whom will be give a chance. "Dutch" Burton and Woodley will alternate at quarter.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 28.—The formation of a Pacific Coast association of athletic clubs for the purpose of holding Olympic games once a year in the different cities on the coast in rotation, is advocated by Frank A. Garbutt, a millionaire athlete and vice-president of the Los Angeles Athletic Club. The current number of Mercury, the official magazine of the Los Angeles A. C. contains a complete cutline of the suggestion. The project has been favorably received by athletic clubs of the coast. The games will be open to the athletes of the world.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—Settlement Day for those who participated in the free-for-all between the Toronto and Tecumseh lacrosse teams of the Big Four a few weeks ago, arrived in police court yesterday morning. Charlie Querrie, manager of the Tecumsehs, was found guilty of common assault, and fined $20 and costs, his victim being Stagg of the Torontos.

Rowntree was fined $5 for assault in conection with the same mix-up, and Green and Stagg were mulcted in the sum of $5 for being disorderly.

London, Sept. 28.—Captain Thomas Fleming Day and his colleagues who have just returned from St. Petersburg where they went in the motorboat Detroit, in which they crossed the Atlatic, will sail for New York on Saturday. Captain Day intends to arrange an internation motorboat race from New York to Paris.

Sir Thomas Lipton has agreed to build a motorboat to enter his race provided there are three other entrans. He suggests an alternative course from New York to London, finishing at the House of commons on Westermine day. This change has not been acquiesced in up to the present. It is thought the French Government will offer more encouragement for the race, but Captain Day says the details, however, have not yet been completed.

Sir Thomas Lipton told the Sun correspondent today that he intends to go to New York within the next two weeks to consult the New York Yacht club and try again to induce that organization to modify the condition for America's cup contests. If he succeeds in obtaining more lenient conditions, Sir Thomas says he will issue a challenge and make another attempt to "lift" the cup, but if he does not he will drop the matter for ever.

BASEBALL.

It is reported that Bill Evans and Silk O'Loughlin will be the American League umpires for the world's series.

Derick, who was awarded to Detroit and then traded to the Highlanders, also was drafted by the Giants, Cardinals, Boston Nationals, Washingtons and Highlanders.

The first game of the fall series for the championship of Philadelphia between the Athletics and the Phillies will be played at Shibe Park on Monday, October 7. Secretary John Shibe of the Athletics proved a better guesser than Business Manager Shettsline of the Phillies when the coin was tossed for the choice, and the White Elephants will start with the advantage of opening the series in Shibe Park.

Philadelphia, Sept. 28.—Charles Albert Bender, of the Athletics, picks the Red Six to beat the Giants in the world's series, but he warns the Bostonese that in big Jeff Tesreau they will face a pitcher who is the best in his league at he present time, barring possibly Glover Alexander, "Nap" Rucker, and "Hub" Perdue.

The men handling the world's series are making every effort to prevent ticket scalping and any other abuses which the champions of the two big leagues might have allowed to creep in during the last few years. Baseball is probably the best organized of all professional sports but, once let the public get suspicious and the elaborate organization could not prevent the decline of even the great American game. The Baseball Commission realize that they must convince the fans that they are open and above board.

Detroit, Sept. 28.—Ty Cobb has another chance to shine in the footlight's glare, which he renounced forever last year. His latest offer is the job of interlocutor with George Evan's minstrels. Two years ago Evans had Jim Corbett in this position, and now hopes to land a diamond favorite.

Cobb lost weight as an actor last year, grew nervous, and was afraid the stage might hurt his invaluable batting eye. Therefore he quit and announced that he would stick to baseball. Besides Cobb, Evans is angling fo Charlie Dooin, Mike Donlin and Christie Mathewson.

Johny Evers, the Cubs' second baseman, has the following to say about Joe Wood:

All we hear is how Joe Wood is going to put it all over the Giants in the world's series, but do you know I really believe the Giants will find Wood easier than Ray Collins, the Red Sox's southpaw. Wood has an overhand delivery with speed, and believe me, the Giants can kill that kind of pitching. It's the side arm delivery with a good curve ball that has the New Yorks up in the air. The Giants are not playing good ball now and they havn't been up to their best standard since July. But when they tackle the Red Sox I believe they will take a mighty brace. You know McGraw is a game bulldog and knows how to make the Giants fight when there is something at stake. Tesreau is a great pitcher and out to prove a big stumbling block, but take it from me, the good old Mr. Matty will be in there using his noodle as in former years. When it comes to pitching for the coin in the world's series, give me a heady guy, a cool guy and a nervy guy like Sir Christopher! Marquard is an uncertainty. It's hard to figure him in a pinch.

Coal dealers again deny that there is a shortage of coal. This is our view. The shortage that exists is in the pockets of the man who again would buy some.

VERY BADLY MIXED UP

The make-up man in a rural weekly newspaper office got full of hard cider a fortnight ago and mixed up items reporting an auction sale and a wedding ceremony. The description ran as follows:

"William Blank, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Blank, was disposed of at public auction to Margaret Dash, daughter of Mr. and Mrs Theodore Alexander Dash, of Lot 14, sixth concession, in the presence of eighty guests, including two mules and nine head of horned cattle. Rev. J. Binks tied the nuptial knot, averaging 1,200 lbs. on the hoof.

The beautiful home of the bride was tastefully decorated with one set of double harness, nearly new; before the ceremony Mendelssohn's Wedding March was given softly by twenty-one five-year-old milch cows, looking perfectly charming in a light spring wagon, top buggy, open buggy and wheelbarrow.

The groom is a well-known young man, popular in society circles of about thirty-eight Berkshire hogs, while the bride is an accomplished and talented teacher of a splendid drove of Poland China shoats, pedigrees furnished if desired.

Among the many presents were one hundred bushels of potatoes, one drag-harrow, hay fork, rope and pulleys, also other articles too numerous to mention.

The bridal couple left on yesterday morning's boat on an extended trip, six months on approved joint notes. Four per cent. off for cash.

Big Pulp Contract.

Montreal, Sept. 30.—The Chicoutimi Pulp Co. have just entered into what experts call the largest pulp contract in the world. This concern has agreed to supply Edward Lloyds Co., London, with 50,000 tons of pulp annually for a term of ten years.

The news also comes that three new pulp mills will be started in Canada next year, one in Ontario and two others on the St. Lawrence.

These net earnings are after deducting all expenses, interest charges, repairs and replacements.

FEATURES OF THE ISSUE

In recommending these bonds as combining all the points essential to a high-grade investment, we desire to call attention to the following features of the issue:

Estimated earnings for the current year are three and one-third times the bond interest.

A sinking fund which will become operative in 1915 is calculated to retire the bonds before maturity.

Additional bonds can only be issued up to 66⅔ per cent. of the amount required for extensions or enlargements.

Improvements and additions to the plant, already planned, should materially increase the output and add to the earnings.

Application will be made to list the bonds on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Orange Demonstration Is Held to Mark Ulster's Defiance.

Church Services Precede the Ceremonial, After Which Sir Edward Carson and Notables, Both Political and Ecclesiastical, Affix Their Names—Only One Riot at a Football Match Occurs During the Day.

Belfast, Sept. 30.—As proof of their determination never to submit to the domination of an Irish Parliament, thousands of Ulsterites—Unionists and Orangemen — devoted Saturday to signing the covenant of resistance to home rule. But, notwitstanding the anxiety and dread as to what might happen, Ulster Day passed off without any serious disturbance.

In expectation of rioting a large force of troops were quartered in the city, but their services were not needed. Only one demonstration of factional feeling occurred, which threatened for a brief space to become serious. After a football match between Protestant and Catholic teams at Celtic Park, as the crowds were returning home, several green flags were waved. The appearance of these emblems of Nationalism started several fierce fights, but the police stopped the conflicts before anybody was badly hurt.

Religious services preceded the signing of the covenant and services of a similar nature were held in many of the churches and chapels throughout the counties of Ulster. Undoubtedly the arrangements which had been made whereby the signing of the document was treated as a solemn religious obligation, exercised a restraining influence on the bellicose Orangemen, while the humorous view taken of the ceremony by the Natonalists tended to diminish their feelings of hostility.

The aspect of the city, however, throughout the day was decidedly martial. The air resounded with the tramp of well-drilled civilians, going and coming from the City Hall, where the covenant was signed. Meanwhile bands of all descriptions played patriotic airs. From noon until late at night the signatures were attached at the rate of 500 per minute and a half, a large number of desks having been arranged for the convenience of the public and to facilitate this work.

Sir Edward Carson, who has announced his willingness to stand at the forefront of the battle until victory is won—however fought out—was the dominant figure of the day. After a dinner given in honor of the occasion, he received a congratulatory address from the English Protestant associations. Then, accompanied by the members of the Ulster committee and the English Unionist members of the House of Commons who have been prominent in this campaign, started for the Donegal Quay to take the steamer for Liverpool, where he will attend a big anti-home rule demonstration to-day.

From the Ulster Club to the quay side Sir Edward and his party were escorted by a torchlight procession through immense throngs cheering enthusiastically. As the steamer made its way down the Lough every eminence on shore was illuminated by beacon fires.

But One Firm Tendered.

Ottawa, Sept. 30.—The tenders for the ships for the West Indies' service, which are supposed to be opened to-morrow, will probably be a disappointment to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, for it is understood that only one serious tender has been received by the department. As a matter of fact the complicated tenders asked for have given British shipping men the impression that the Government is simply fishing for information and, as a consequence, no tender is from the British Isles.

To-day British shipbuilding is so very prosperous, ships paying for themselves in two years, that builders are not attracted by any uncertain Government venture, hence the total absence of tenders from over the water.

North Waterloo Bye-Election.

Berlin, Sept. 30—The executive committee of the North Waterloo Conservative Association met yesterday afternoon for the purpose of calling a convention to nominate a candidate for the approaching bye-election made necessary by the resignation of Dr. H. G. Lackner, M.P.P., to accept the shrievalty of Waterloo County, which office has been vacant since Oct. 29, 1911. The date set is Oct. 5, at Waterloo, and the date of the election, which will be announced this week, will likely be November 5.

It is reported that Ald. C. H. Mills will be the party nominee to succeed Dr. Lackner.

Quake Scare In Chile.

Santiago, Chile, Sept. 30—Great anxiety prevailed here yesterday owing to the possibility of earthquakes in Chile. So far there have been no signs of seismic disturbances, although they were predicted for yesterday. Several astronomers, however, have been endeavoring to reassure the people, declaring that no faith should be put in such predictions.

Flying Stone Broke Leg.

Kingston, Sept. 30.—While playing in St. Mary's school yard, the seven-year-old son of M. Amodeo, fruit merchant, was hit on the leg by a stone and the member fractured. His elder brother hit the boy who threw it and he was then strapped by a teacher, who witnessed the entire affair.

Earth Shocks Recorded.

Mobile, Ala., Sept. 30.—The seismograph at Spring Hill College yesterday afternoon registered earth shocks which are calculated to be eight thousand miles away. The first shock came indistinctly at 3.15 p.m. Quakes came intermittently and with varying violence until 5.30 o'clock.

onderful Cures Reported in Germany.

The use of simple herbs as remedies instead of the more concentrated and usually more dangerous inorganic substances, has been revived very widely of late. In Germany a new school of physicians has arisen which throws out almost a whole of the pharmacopoeia and relies on an adaptation of the method of wild animals in curing themselves.—N. Y. World.

It was Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute of Buffalo, N. Y., who first advocated the extended use of some of our native roots, such as: Golden seal and Oregon grape root, mandrake and queen's root, black cherrybark. These are the chief ingredients in Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which has been so well and favorably known for nearly half a century. A harmless cleanser and stomach tonic that nature has provided.

J. Donald Matheson of Ossining, N. Y. says: "I suffered for over five years with what the doctors told me was dilated condition of the stomach, associated with a catarrhal condition of same, and nervous heart. I had tried enough nux, bismuth, gentian, rhubarb, etc., to float a ship and naturally thought there was no cure for me, but after reading what eminent doctors said of the curative qualities of the ingredients of 'Golden Medical Discovery' I gave it a fair trial. Took the 'Discovery' and also the 'Pleasant Pellets,' and can truthfully say I am feeling better now than I have in years. I cheerfully give permission to print this testimonial, and if any 'doubting Thomas' writes me I will 'put him wise' to the best all-around medicine in the country to-day."

Redmond Pooh-Poohs It.

New York, Sept. 30—"The Ulsterites' demonstration against home rule at Belfast Saturday is no more dangerous than this flashlight," exclaimed Wm. H. Redmond, the Nationalist member of Parliament, when his speech at a large mass meeting in Carnegie Hall Saturday night was interrupted by the photographers' work.

"Half of Ulster is as ardently for home rule as any part of Ireland," he continued. "Half of Ulster belongs to the ancient faith and many Protestants in recent years have been marching side by side with Catholics in the battle for Irish liberty."

The speaker got a great ovation. The meeting had been arranged by a committee of prominent citizens, including Superem Court Justice Keogh, W. Bourke Cockran, Alton B. Parker and Herman Ridder. A letter was read from Cardinal Farley expressing his warm sympathy with the cause.

Turkey's Latest Offer.

Ouchy, Switzerland, Sept. 30.—The Turco-Italian peace negotiations have probably entered their final phase with the arrival here of Rechad Pasha bearing Turkey's latest proposals. If these are acceptable to Italy, as is hoped, Rechad Pasha will assume direction of the official negotiations and arrange the precise wording of the peace treaty.

The Italian ambassador to France, Tomasso Tittoni, is expected to join the Italian delegates. The drawing up of the final protocol, even if the new Turkish proposals are satisfactory, is likely to be somewhat delayed, as the Turkish Government is anxous to have the elections over before concluding peace; otherwise the Young Turks would have a trump card. Consequently it is not expected that a peace treaty will be signed before Oct. 15.

Big Steel Plant for Welland.

Welland, Sept. 30.—The Standard Steel Construction Co. will erect a large plant that will employ twelve to fifteen hundred men and have a capacity of four thousand tons of structural steel per month. Forty acres of land have been purchased.

Temporary offices have been opened and construction will be commenced at once. They will locate here on account of low cost of production, the only special inducements offered being a stated taxation on land.

Couldn't Scare Teddy.

Montgomery, Alta., Sept. 30.—While addressing a crowd here yesterday, Theodore Roosevelt rested his hand on an insulated electric light wire, which hung at the end of the balcony of the hotel where he was standing.

"Look out, colonel," shouted a man, "that wire is carrying 3,500 volts."

AEROPLANE VICTIMS.

Three Men Meet Death While Flying on Saturday.

Washington, Sept. 30.—Lieut. Lewis C. Rockwell, U.S.A., and Sergt. F. S. Scott, of the Signal Corps, both attached to the army aviation corps, are dead as a result of an accident to an army aeroplane on Saturday. The machine, while in the air, fell about fifty feet, killing Sergt. Scott almost instantly. Lieut. Rockwell was so badly injured that he died a few hours later at the Walter Reid Hospital.

Biplane Overturned.

Hempstead, N.Y., Sept. 30.—John L. Longstaff, a former English army officer, was killed Saturday evening while flying in a Farman biplane with his mechanician, Pierre Chavellier. Seventy feet in the air a wire connecting the control of the biplane became jammed and the machine instantly overturned, striking the ground with such force that it was buried two feet.

Longstaff fractured his skull, and received serious internal injuries from which he died a short time later. Chavellier is seriously, but not mortally injured. He will probably lose his left eye.

Longstaff held a pilot license from the Royal Aero Club of England. He had been flying as a scout with the insurgent army in Mexico until recently. He had planned to take up a passenger, and was tuning up the machine. Longstaff was 25 years of age.

Quebec Teachers' Pay.

Montreal, Sept. 30.—Godfrey Langlois, M.P.P., commenting on the remark made by Sir Lomer Gouin to the effect that there is not much work to be done at the approaching session of the Legislature at Quebec, gives the average pay received by the school teachers in the counties represented by six Ministers of the Quebec Cabinet, and calls for reform.

The payments are:

Textile Strike Nears End.

Lawrence, Mass., Sept. 30.—The question of terminating or continuing the strike in the Lawrence Textile Mills, called last Thursday as a protest against the imprisonment of Ettor and Giovannitti the Industrial Workers of the World organizers, was expected to be settled at a mass meeting of the industrial workers of Lawrence Common Saturday afternoon. The strike continued Saturday, despite the vote of operatives at several meetings to return to their machines. It was estmated that 8,000 hands were idle, divided among the different mills as follows: Wood 4,500; Ayer, 1,500; Washington, 2,000; Prospect, 200; Arlington, 300; Everett, 300; Pacific, 175.

There was no trouble of any kind when the mill gates opened and the strikers did not post any pickets.

Pressing for Electrification.

Galt, Sept. 30.—In conversation with Supt. Gillies of the Grand Trunk Railway, it was learned he had received a petition containing the names of 1,200 residents of this county, asking for the electrification of the Galt and Elmira branch. The superintendent is giving the subject consideration, and expects shortly to go into the matters thoroughly.

The superintendent in charge of this district does not consider the obstacles in the way of electrification insurmountable. That there would be a saving in the cost of motive power the Grand Trunk official readily conceded. He was impressed by the character of the petition presented.

Motor Bandits in Chicago.

Chicago, Sept. 30.—Four restaurants were raided in quick succession by four automobile bandits Saturday.

The robberies were the climax of a thrilling night's campaign by the robbers in northern Indiana, where a score of people were held up. One was robbed of $800.

After this the quartette raced their automobile across the state line and resumed depredations in Chicago and its suburbs.

Kingston to Revive Fair.

Kingston, Sept. 30.—Citizens have held a meeting and appointed a committee to draw up plans of organization for a fair assocation. Kingston had a good fair up till a few years ago, when it was dropped. It will require $5,000 to put the present grounds and buildings into shape for the fair.

Brantford's New Armory.

Brantford, Sept. 30.—A new armory for Brantford is assured by the purchase of a fine site on Brant avenue by the Government. The armory will be for the exclusive use of the Brant Dragoons and Field Battery Corps.

THREE FIREMEN HURT

Ladder Breaks While Men Are Mounting With Hose.

Ancient Ladder Breaks Into Several Pieces While Four Men Are Getting a Branch of Hose to a Second Storey Window at Fire In Toronto —Damage Amounting to $20,000 Is Done by Blaze.

Toronto, Sept. 30.—Three firemen are in St. Michael's Hospital suffering from injuries and two others are also more or less badly bruised as a result of a fire which did $20,000 damage at the old Myott building, 120-126 Bay street late last night. The accident occurred when a line of hose was being hoisted to the second storey and the ladder to which the men were clinging broke into several pieces.

Pool was reaching to catch the frame of the window on the second storey. He called to the three men below to run up the hose. But the strain was too much for the old ladder and it broke as the men neared the top.

With the exception of Pool, they all fell to the pavement 35 feet below. The other man grasped the top of the ladder. As the piece struck the ground Pool dropped off and was only slightly bruised.

Joyce was picked up and received medical attention at once. He was then taken, with Taylor and Knott, to the hospital. The latter has a badly strained side, while Taylor injured his head and one arm. Joyce received the most serious injuries. He is badly bruised and is suffering from shock. All will recover.

W. M. Phillips, who drives the chief's car, was standing at the bottom of the ladder and all the men fell on him before he could regain his feet after the first comrade alighted on him. It is probably due to this man that the injuries to the others were not more serious, as he broke their fall.

Mayor Geary was at the scene of the fire shortly after the accident inquiring as to the condition of the men.

The blaze broke out on the second floor near the elevator shaft at 9.25. A passerby noticed it and turned in an alarm. Although the firemen were soon on the scene the flames had a good start.

Chief Thompson stated that the ladder was a very old one and was not of the truss style. In any case it should have held four men under ordinary conditions. Another fireman said that it had been used for the past fifteen years.

Must Have Reply.

Montreal, Sept. 30.—A special from Quebec says that the dispute between Hon. L. P. Pelletier and Senator Landry as given to the public, cannot go unheeded and that the president of the Upper House will have to give a satisfactory reply to the representations made in the famous memorandum to the Prime Minister.

"Highly Recommended."

"I would certainly recommend that you get a Gurney-Oxford, Mary. Mother had one, and when I furnished my house, I got one. Every maid I ever had has been enthusiastic about the Gurney-Oxford."

"What are its good points ?"

"Well, the best is that it cooks and bakes like a dream. I never tasted such golden brown biscuits or such flakey pastry as my Gurney-Oxford turns out, and roasts, fowls and puddings are always a success."

"Is it easy to operate ?"

"My dear, it's simplicity itself. The Gurney Economizer, which you cannot get on any other range, regulates the fire simply by putting one small lever up or down. You never heard of anything so simple. And by a system of divided flues the oven is always uniformly heated. You know what that means—biscuits, bread, roasts, not one half overdone and the other half underdone, but properly done all through. Yes, my dear, you take my advice as I took mother's, and get a Gurney-Oxford Range."

"A Citizen" Suggests Names For New Schools

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Along with many other citizens I have been somewhat interested in the naming of our two new schools, and this interest prompts me to make a suggestion, which I trust may meet with public approval, and also be acceptable to our School Board who, by the way, are to be congratulated upon the excellent new schools they have given us, and I trust they may continue the good work until the whole of Belleville is furnished with equally good school buildings. If there is anything in which Belleville can afford to be seemingly extravagant, it is along educational lines

But before suggesting names for these beautiful new schools, allow me to point out that it has been the ambition of the Progressives of our School Board, to see in Belleville a High School or Collegiate Institue that would be a credit to our city, a building thoroughly equipped for the purposes of a High School.

To my mind the time has now arrived when the once Public School building, known as Queen Victoria School, must be known as the Belleville High School, as distinct from all other schools, and I would suggest that the name "Queen Victoria" or "Victoria School" be given to the new Pine Street School, while the Ann Street building be known as "Alexandria School."

Trusting that these names may meet with the approval of our School Board, I remain,

Respectfully yours,

CITIZEN.

Delayed Good Road System

Among the many things chargeable to the exceptionally wet summer season, few are regarded as more unfortunate by the Provincial Government than the delay necessitated by conditions in the expansion of the good roads system. According to Mr. W. McLean, provincial engineer of highways, roadway construction during the past season has fallen away behind former records. Not alone has there been less work done, but that which has been accomplished has been more costly to the counties.

Not one additional county has come into the good roads system this season, although the counties of Elgin, Essex, Norfulk, Peterborough, Stormont, Dundas, Glengarry and Kent are considering the establishment of the county road system.

New problems are confronting the work. The cost of road construction is becoming steadily higher, and the wages now paid are practically double what they were ten years ago. Moreover a number of counties are holding back in the hope that when the Federal Government consents to make good its promised grant to highways the money will be used to assist the counties in their work.

King Consulting On Situation

LONDON, Sept. 27.—There was speculation in London to-night over the news from Balmoral that the annual ball given by the King for the tenants on the Royal estate, which was fixed for to-night, had suddenly been postponed without any assigned reason. Local reports ascribe the postponement to the fact that the King is engaged in most important conferences with Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, and A. Bonar Law, the Unionist leader, and these are supposed to be in reference to the situation in Ulster.

Sir Edward Grey arrived at Balmoral Castle early in the week in connection with the visit of M. Sazonoff, the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, but it came as a surprise to the public to-day to learn that Bonar Law had reached the castle yesterday, the visit of the Opposition leader not having been hinted at either at London or Balmoral or that neighbohood.

The growing excitement in Ulster during the past week, with the impending signing of the covenant tomorrow, is regarded in London as furnishing the probable explanation for Bonar Law's unexpected journey to the north.

Ran Amuck in London

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Four people were shot and seriously wounded by a man with a revolver yesterday, and for a time caused a semi-panic in the west end of London.

The man, whose name is Titus and who claims citizenship of the United States, but speaks English poorly, had a dispute with a barmaid of the hotel where he was staying in the Tottenham Court Road. He drew his revolver and shot her and a second barmaid then rushed to the street. On the way out he shot down two men who tried to stop him, and also fired at a third man.

He was finally overpowered by a passer-by and arrested.

Titus had been staying at the hotel for two months. He did not register his first name or his home address and he is extremely uncommunicative.

The police have learned that the man's name is Steve Titus. It is thought that he is a Pole or Russian, who has probably been in America. The man has apparently lost his reason. He was very roughly handled by the crowd before the arrival of the police.

Review French Flying Armanda

PARIS, Sept. 28.—The first review ever held of a complete aeroplane armada, took place this morning at Villacoublay, near Paris. No fewer than 72 French army flying machines, with their full complements of pilots and observers, and the attached motor trucks bearing supplies passed in review before the French Minister for War, M. Alexandre Millerand.

The airmen and their craft had just returned from the great manoeuvres at which they had achieved such triumphs, and they made an imposing display when they lined up on the extensive parade ground.

Thousands of people were present and there was great enthusiasm among them as the airmen saluted the Minister of War.

M. Millerand made a speech, in which he dwelt on his and the nation's determination to keep France in the forefront of aviation. He urged the officers to refrain from seeking publicity which, he said, could only be harmful to the service.

Harvest Festival At St. Thomas A Great Success

Harvest Festival services were held in St. Thomas' Church yesterday, and not withstanding the inclemency of the weather there were large congregations present, and all entered heartily into the services.

The interior of the sacred edifice was most appropriately and artistically adorned with flowers, fruit, roots and grain, evidencing that the Giver of all good had provided the necessaries of life.

Rev. Mr. Barber, of Picton, was the preacher of the day, and delivered two discourses, which were in keeping with the occasion.

Special vocal music of a high order was provided by a well balanced choir. The Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, assisted in the service.

At the evening service the Rev. Mr. Barber's subject was in reference to wheat and tares. As the basis of his remarks he chose the 30th verse of the 13th chapter of St. Matthew:

"Let both grow together until the harvest, and in the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares and bind them in bundle to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn."

In his opening remarks the divine referred to the fact that this was a wonderful parable, one of the seven which the Saviour used to illustrate His teachings among men. It demonstrated that good and evil abounded together. Wheat had been sown, but tares grew up with it. In the harvest time there is a separation of the good from the bad. In the harvest time the wheat will gathered into the garners, but the tares will be burned. Does not this parable represent life? There are problems in life which we must investigate, and this is one of them. We must receive the answer from the loving God. When people say there is no eternal punishment, read the 13th chapter of St. Matthew. There is an eternal life for the good and an eternal life for the bad. The Lord Jesus Christ said that God willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he turn from his wickedness and live. If man wills to die eternally, who will hinder him? No one. It is his own fault if he does. It will not be God's choice, but man's own free will. Be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. The disciples knew that Jesus was a man sent from God. Christianity is the light of the world. It embraces all phases of this life. The Gospel of Jesus Christ can reach to the uttermost parts of the world, and all may embrace it. Jesus Christ says seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all things shall be added unto you. Jesus Christ teaches us by the parable of the text the simplicity of life in order that we might grasp its significance. He tells us that good seed is the word of God and is sown in the hearts of His children. The parable teaches us that wheat is the good seed, but that tares will creep in. Where righteousness prevails, however, tares will not grow. Our lives should be such that tares will not grow up. How solemn, then, is our responsibility in this matter. This time of growth is given us to prepare for the eternal harvest. At that harvest time all will receive the reward due them. Our eternal harvest will be whatever we make it. In this growing time see that we grow aright in God's sight, so that when we are done with the cares and perplexities of this life, God will give us eternal rest, leading us by the still waters, taking away all aches and pains, and giving us perfect rest and peace. In that great day of harvest we may all hear Him say "Come unto Me, and be forever with me and the redeemed.

The total offerings for the day amounted to about $250.00.

Gov't Marine Insurance

Even if it involved direct financial assistance to shippers the most practical method of applying this aid, it is thought in London, would be to contribute to the cost of insurance and give shippers the advantage of organized campaigns of underwriters.

No anxiety is felt at Lloyds as to the proposed Canadian Government subsidy, neither do they view the possible formation of a Government department of marine insurance with any serious alarm. The experience of the Government would, in their opinion, be the same as their own, that is that they would soon discover that at current rates the business of marine underwriting didn't leave a great margin of profit. As a paying proposition it would be difficult to pull down the Canadian rates, it is thought, therefore, Canadians would be wise to leave things as they are. The only effect of the proposed subsidy would be that the tax payers would have to provide the amount of the loan.

Mr. Hazen's suggestion regarding such a plan of insurance has caused no surprise in shipping circles generally. On the contrary, the Canadian Government is commended for doing its unmest to extend Canadian trade.

Train Girls for Battle

SHALL I WIN HER?

THE STORY OF A WANDERER

By JAMES GRANT

Sometimes in my dreams I was again engaged with the Kaffirs—with old Sandilli himself—and to show how much a recklessness of life had grown in my heart, I never, even in the mimic and visionary combat, sought the shelter of rock or tree, but when exchanging shot for shot, stood bodly and defiantly exposed, as if courting their bullets and assegais, and consequent death.

At other times I was again on board the burning ship, or in the tiny boat with my pale companions, "rocked on the bosom of the deep," cold, shivering and helpless, hungry and sorely athirst; or I saw before me the wild, dark eyes of Marique sparkling with mingled love and rage, while her soft brown arms encircled me. The she would take the appearance of Clarice Haywood, with her tender hazel orbs, and bright chestnut hair; and times there were when her voice came to me with a vivid distinctness that filled me with a species of terror as it lingered on the tympanum of my wakened ear.

CHAPTER XLVI

Next morning I bade adieu to worthy Jack Palmer, and shook hands heartily with Joe Mullins the boatswain, Derrick the carpenter, with Jumbo the black cook, and their ship mates, and with a saddened heart and moistened eyes I watched from the pierhead the great Liverpool liner, as she stood away out into the ocean, bearing them homeward; and as the evening declined I felt a considerable emotion of utter loneliness come over me. Yet I was in the midst of a large, a lively ,and a busy population.

I secured my passage in the Herman Cortes, and seemed to feel that in doing so I had achieved another step towards the great end of all my present wandering.

All that evening and all the next day I rambled about the city, seeking in every public place the strange man I had seen—the tribunal or law courts, the Casa de Villa or townhouse, the balsa or exchange, the citadel, the castle; or the morro, the beerhouses, and the most frequented thoroughfares. I sought in vain, always returning, as a point d'appui, to the cafe where Walmer had seen him last, or to the callejon or alley where he had disappeared.

An yet though I knew it not, this remarkable personage was often nearer than I had the least idea of.

As the morro is much frequented by visitors, I often sought for him there. A strong and quaint old fort it is, for it was there that, when Philip II. was King of Spain and the Indies, Clifford, the gallant Earl of Cumberland, at his own expense, leading a thousand stout English men-at-arms, stormed it, sword in hand, after a long march over 'horrid rocks and cliffs,' and after being nearly drowned by the weight of his own armour when he fell into the sea at the capture and destruction of the causeways and drawbridges by which the city and the morro were approached.

I returned, weary and perplexed, to the Hotel del Caballo Blanco. The table d'hote was numerously attended; but he I ought was not there. The society was varied, but pleasant enough, and we idled long over our wine and cigars and the rich desert, composed of the pineapples, guavas, black and white plums, the oranges and limes of that favored isle, the most luxuriant of all the Antilles.

There were merchant captains from all parts of the world, noisy and talkative, Spanish officers from the citadal, grave and taciturn, but gentlemanly and courteous, planters in town on business at the balsa from lal parts of the island, and there were all shades of complexion, from the fair-cheeked and auburn-haired English seaman to the darkest copper color; but none were absolutely black save the waiters, who were clad in spotless white jackets and trousers.

On this evening, wearied with the heat and fruitless wandering during the past day, I retired early to my room, which was lofty, airy and spacious, and had a tall, folding French casement that opened towards the principal street of the city. It was on the second etage, and I remember a strange emotion came over me as I entered it—an emotion of nature most difficult to analyse, and almost impossible to describe otherwise than as an intense curiosity to know who the person was n the adjoining room. The partition was so thin that I could hear them moving about and even conversing in low tones.

Mere curiosity I might soon have gratified by consulting with the nearest waiter, and slipping a dollar into his hand; but it seemed to be a species of animal magnetism—the mysterious prescience of the presence and emotion of one spirit with another—that possessed me, and when the reader has come to the end of this portion of my story, it may, perhaps, be admitted that I had a strange and subtle consciousness of the presence of one who aws to influence my destiny., and who, without seeing or hearing, I felt to be near me.

Between the room those persons occupied and mine was a folding door—a common enough fashion in continenal hotels, that the apartments may be thrown open if required, and the fashion was copied here; but the door in question was, of course, securely locked and bolted on both sides, so that no guest could intrude on the privacy of another, and to do so might be perilous in that region of stilettos and revolvers.

I had tossed aside the Diario, and lay long watching the light of the setting sun as it streamed through the tall casement, till sleep was beginning to overpower me, and I was just about to indulge in a post prandial nap, when a voice said sharply, in the next room, and in English:

"Madam, if we are to quarrel, do me the favor to speak in French. These partitnons are unpleasantly thin. Do you understand me?"

I then heard a heavy sigh, followdo by the sobbing of a woman.

"Tears again," growled the man in French. "Bah, I am tired of tears."

"And so am I," was the timed response. "Yet they are my only solace."

"You weep for hours now."

"Hours that are years to me—years indeed, of sorrow," replied the lady, also speaking in French, but with a singular pathos in it, that stirred my heart wonderfully, and made my pulses quicken. "Have you no pity, monsieur?"

"None!"

"What of the marriage ceremony?"

"Pshaw! a sorrowful and worn-out farce. Talk not to me of it. Besides, you will spoil your appearance, and remember, that tonight we are to be at the opera."

But again the female sobbed heavily.

"How much more of this am I to endure, or be compelled to overhear?" thought I, while starting from the couch on which I was reclining. "The opera! I, too, shall go to the opera. As well kill time there as any where else."

I looked at my watch. It was within an hour of the time when the overture would begin, so I proceeded to make my toilet in all haste to be gone, though irresistibly attracted by the presence and the voices of those in the next room, yet I met no one who spoke French at the table d'hote.

"Who is this man that you should fear to look upon him—the man whom you saw in the public square?"

"Oho, monsieur is jealous," thought I.

"I dare not tell you," replied the woman, whose accents made my heart thrill. "It it was, indeed, a man, and not a disembodied spirit, I saw—he looked so wan, so pale."

"You dare not."

"No."

"Wherefore?"

"You are so cruel—so merciless—so jealous."

"Speak out, or——"

I could imagine I saw the woman cower beneath the uplifted hand and half-arrested oath.

"Well, I was about to be married to him; but that is all past now—past forever. Yet he loved me—oh, he did so love me!"

The last exclamation was made in the softest English, and in a tone that moved my very soul. That plaintive voice, whose was it, and who were those quarrellers?

The voice of the woman had a strange, dull, and monotonous tone in it generally, as if grief was destroying it or gradually rendering it hoarse. Yet it painfully reminded me of one with which I was familiar. Was it that of Fanny or Clarice that it resembled? If she was not drowned, would the volatile Fannpy have eloped, and forgotten Douglas as speedily as she had Major Carysfort? I was becoming quite bewildered. I must freely own that I listened intently now, but as they had lowered their voices, I missed much that passed.

"Alas, alas," said the lady after a pause, "need I say, monsieur, that love which is forced becomes—becomes—"

Her voice broke into sobs again.

"Ah! what does it become?" demanded the other, striking his heel on the polished floor.

"Must I say it?"

"Yes."

"Hatred."

"Ah! hatred—yes, you are right. So I hate you, and I shall kill you before I am done with you." He swore a deep, hoarse oath in guttural Dutch, and then added, "Ach Gott! you weep because you have lost this fellow, this schelm, this ideal man, who is so different—or was so different from the man you married—for his own folly."

"Oh, what is before me now but a dreary future—a short one, I hope?" moaned the female.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT

have had [illegible] whatever for knowledge.

For instance, during the more than four thousand years from Adam to the days of Jesus, knowledge and opportunity for faith were very limited. For more than two thousand years God made no direct revelation whatever of His good intentions in respect to sending a Saviour, and the delivery of our race from the bondage of sin and death. Then the Message sent was semi-private. To Abraham God declared His intention of blessing the world eventually, and further that this blessing would come through Abraham's posterity. But what did the masses of mankind at that time know of that promise? Faith in that promise was counted to Abraham for righteousness; and the same with Isaac and Jacob. Ultimately the promise descended to the nation of Israel.

Finally, Jesus came, and that which had been promised began to have an actuality, a fulfilment. Yet even then the thing offered was so different from that which the Israelites had for centuries expected that the majority of them wholly failed to exercise the necessary faith and to enter into the privileges of the hour—membership in Spiritual Israel as sons of God begotten to a higher nature. So, says the Apostle, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the election obtained it and the rest were blinded." Only the few had a sufficiency of faith to make use of their knowledge.

St. Paul declares that the Gospel is hidden from some during this Age, namely, from the perishing ones whom Satan hath blinded and these surely are the vast majority of the race. As Jesus declared to His disciples, "Blessed are your eyes for they see and your ears for they hear." And thus it has been all down the Age for more than eighteen centuries. Only the few have been so highly favored by birth and environment, etc., as to be able to see and able to hear and appreciate the glorious invitation of this present time.

Furthermore, God's providence has been exercising apparently a discrimination in the sending of the Gospel Message. It went not alike to all parts of the earth. Beginning with Israel in Palestine it moved northward and westward to Greece and to Italy, and thus spread through and amongst the savage tribes of Europe, namely, to such as had "ears to hear" the Divine call to jointheirship with Christ in the glorious Kingdom soon to be established. From Europe this Message, this knowledge, came to America; and now, within the last century in particular, it is reaching some of the many millions of India, China, Japan, Africa, etc., but still with the same limitations. It appeals only to a comparatively few in any nation—"He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear."

Ah, yes, we can see a force in the Apostle's words, "not of yourselves." It is indeed for ourselves to exercise faith when the knowledge comes to us, yet faith being impossible without knowledge, we were dependent upon God for it. How thankful we should be, how appreciative! How sympathetic we should be toward those who have not been so highly favored with knowledge or whose condition has been less favorable to the cultivation of the hearing ear and of the understanding heart! Truly God is electing and selecting, testing and proving the members of the Church of Christ.

Another phase of the subject well worthy of our notice is that our faith is largely a matter of development; first the seed, then the blade, then the ear, then the ripe corn. When God gave us the first impulse toward a knowledge of Himself and of His purposes, that was the seed from which faith might germinate if it fell into a heart or mind that was good soil for it. And even those whose hearts are good soil for the Message of God's grace and the Kingdom invitation find that they greatly need a certain Divine supervision, watchcare, in order to bring forth fruitage such as the Lord will be pleased to accept.

What would any of us be to-day without the grace of God assisting us in faith and in obedience? Surely the original faith would long since have withered and died. We must still say, By the grace of God we are saved, through faith, not of ourselves. It is the result of the knowledge granted and the Divine blessing poured upon us.

In full line with what we have considered is the Apostolic injunction that we must continue to grow in grace and in knowledge and in faith and in love, and to the extent of our ability in obedience and good works. And this growth in grace, this growth in faith, signifies a continued and further growth in knowledge. For instance, the promises of the Bible contain the spiritual food upon which we as New Creatures must feed in order to grow up to the required likeness of Christ—in order to be fitted and prepared in character-and-faith-development for a place in the Kingdom.

It should not surprise us, therefore, to find the Scriptures clearly teaching that the Bible contains nourishments exactly adapted to our requirements. St. Paul illustrates this matter by saying that in the beginning of our experiences we, as new born babes, should "desire the sincere milk of the Word that we might grow thereby"—grow in grace and in knowledge and faith and obedience. But he admonishes us also that we should not always continue to be babes, feeding upon the milk of the Word, but that by the use of it and the strength that is derived we should become strong in the Lord, become manly, attaining unto the full stature of manliness as members of the Body of Christ. And for this additional strength the Apostle tells us that we need more than the milk of the Word—we need the "strong meat" of God's Word, of God's promises, that we may grow thereby. And again, in all this finding and using of the "meat in due season" we are indebted to God.

Not only has He provided meat in due season in the Holy Scriptures, "that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished" and able to "rightly divide the Word of Truth," but additionally He has granted help amongst the brethren, that we may build one another up in the faith, until we all come to the full stature in Christ.

How evident then it is that our salvation through faith is not a matter of an instantaneous injection of faith into us in some miraculous manner, but a gradual development, as we have seen; and how evident it is that in the development of this faith we are to be coworkers together with God!

Let us, therefore, be very appreciative of the great privileges granted to us and use them wisely, lest we should receive the grace of God in vain and miss this great Prize which has been offered to us and which we have accepted and which God will be faithful to give to those who faithfully use the blessings of His provision.
